This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

MESSRS. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

MODERN VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

PRICES FROM £1 1S. TO £5.

MR. BRAND LANE'S

CONCERTS: SEASON 1906-7.

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, 1907
At 7 o'clock, concluding about 9.30.

RECITAL BY THE CHOIR OF THE MANCHESTER PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (300 VOICES)

Under the Conductorship of ·MR. BRAND LANE.

"Each time this body of singers undertake any important task, they give fresh proofs of the remarkable quality that is in them. The fine resonance of the voices, the correct intonation, precision of attack, clear rendering of passages, and good enunciation of words—all these things were admirable."—
Manchester Guardian (the late Mr. Arthur Johnstone).

"The chorus could hardly have been improved; it displayed all the firmness and finely balanced weight of tone that Mr. Lane's training seems to guarantee. The performance was indeed a remarkably fine one."—Manchester Guardian.

"There can be no doubt that the vocal material is extremely good—in fact, good enough to rank the choir among the best in the country of similar scale."—
Manchester Guardian (the late Mr. Arthur Johnstone).

"The freshness and beauty of the voices composing Mr. Lane's chorus are an unalloyed pleasure. Some of the piano passages were exquisitely sung and perfectly balanced."—Manchester Guardian, November 13, 1905.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

London, A.D. 607! Imagination's utmost stretch fails to picture the Metropolis—i.e., the ecclesiastical capital — of the East Saxons, the ancient Llyn-Din, or 'town on the lake,' the waterway being the sweetly-flowing Thames. History, however, tells us that on the hill above Ludgate (Anglo-Saxon Lydgeat, a postern) there stood early in the 7th century a cathedral dedicated to St. Paul. Whether this spiritual home of the Saxon Londoners, built by Ethelbert, king of Kent, stood on the site of a temple to Diana is a matter of conjecture: it may, however, suffice us to know that a St. Paul's Cathedral (No. 1) was in existence thirteen hundred years ago. This church and its successor (or a portion thereof) were burnt down, a fate which awaited the immediate predecessor of the present building. We will therefore leave the region of the very remote past, and make mention of the stately mother-church known as OLD ST. PAUL'S.

Consecrated in the year 1240, this magnificent structure must have been the pride of London. The tower and spire reached the gigantic height of 493 feet. In length the cathedral measured 596 feet—66 feet more than Winchester. No less imposing was the loftiness of the interior, the choir being 101 feet in height, while in regard to breadth the measurements gave 104 feet, including the aisles. Hollar's fine view of the interior of the choir (reproduced on p. 11) furnishes some idea of the stateliness of that noble fane. It will be observed that the choir had twelve bays: the grand Norman nave had an equal number. No wonder that Old St. Paul's was considered the finest cathedral in England.

A dignified flight of steps led from the nave to the choir, the latter being shut off from the rest of the church by an elaborately sculptured stone screen. Only seven of the twelve bays of the choir were used for service, the organ occupying the third bay. In the dim distance could be seen the splendid east window, seven lancet lights of equal height surmounted by a glorious rose window forty feet in diameter, and, as Mr. T. F. Bumpus says in his chapter on St. Paul's, 'paralleled only by two others in England, those of Durham Cathedral and St. Margaret's Church, King's Lynn.'* A humble copy of this east window may be seen in the church of St. Catherine Cree, Leadenhall Street, promoted by Bishop (afterwards Archbishop) Laud, and built by Inigo Jones. A small but picturesque Chapter House, octagon shape, stood in the centre of a small and equally beautiful cloister situated in the angle formed by the south transept with the nave. Remains of these buildings were discovered in 1879 and may still be seen, as they have been carefully preserved.

PAUL'S CROSS.

A specially interesting feature of the exterior of the old cathedral was the Pulpit Cross which stood in the churchyard. As the Rev. Dr. Sparrow Simpson has said: 'Paul's Cross had its political and secular uses, as well as its religious. Here folk-motes were gathered together, Bulls and Papal edicts were read, heretics were denounced, heresies abjured, excommunications published, great political changes made known to the people, penances performed.' Paul's Cross is mentioned so early as the year 1256, in a roll found in the wardrobe of the King, at Windsor. It contained divers articles against the Mayor and rulers of the City of London, affirming that they had wronged the commonalty of the City. This important mandate supporting the liberties of the people, and read aloud to them at Paul's Cross, is too interesting not to be quoted in full:

> The King [Henry III.] sent John Mancell one of his iustycys vnto London; and there in y^e ſeete of y^e conuerſyon of ſeynt Pawle, by the Kynges auctoryte, callyd at Pawlys croſſe a folkmoot, beynge there preſent syr Rycharde de Clare, erle of Glowcetyr, and dyuerſe other of the Kynges counceyll; where the ſayd John Mancell cauſyd y^e ſayd rolle to be redde, before the comynalty of the cytie, and after ſhewyd to y^e people that y^e Kynges pleaſure and mynde was, that they ſhulde be rulyd with iuſtice, and that the lybertyes of the cytie ſhould be maynteyned in euery poynt: and if the Kynge myghte knowe thoſe parſonys, that ſo hadde wrongyd the comynaltye of the cytie, they ſhulde be greuouſlye punyſſhed, to the exaumple of other.

Paul's Cross was destroyed by an earthquake in 1382: 'the one and twentieth day of May, was a great Earthquake in England at nine of the clocke, fearing the hearts of many.' The structure was, however, repaired and remained in position until 1643, when it was destroyed by order of the Lord Mayor of that year. Space will not permit of references to the various historical events associated with this ancient structure in St. Paul's Churchyard. A few words must, however, be said in explanation of the illustration given as our special supplement. This interesting picture—though not above reproach as regards perspective, or proportion, or even as to the exact position of the Cross itself—represents the visit to Paul's Cross of King James I., his Queen, and Charles, Prince of Wales, who were attended by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishops, Officers of State, and others, on March 26, 1620, to hear a sermon preached by Dr. John King, Bishop of London. On that occasion the eloquent prelate recommended the speedy reparation of the cathedral, especially the restoration of the spire, destroyed by lightning in 1561. It will be observed that the royal party occupy a sort of private box and gallery erected against the wall of the cathedral. Standing on the roof of this structure to the left of the King (as one faces the picture) is the choir of twelve choristers, surplice clad, who thus occupy a very exalted place in the proceedings. The bishop preached from a text chosen by the King for the 'King of Preachers,' as James I. used to call Dr. King. By the side of that eminent divine is the hour-glass, and in the rear of the Cross is a verger keeping watch over the preacher and his three attendants. It is a little difficult to determine the status of the seven individuals seated in the enclosure immediately below the pulpit, one of whom has quite a naughty-boy expression on his countenance. The congregation, nearly all head-covered, are seated on forms, for the privilege of which they doubtless paid a penny or a half-penny. The dog-whipper and the horses give variety and animation to the scene, and even while the sermon is in progress a benevolent citizen is dropping his contribution into 'the offering chest,' on the extreme right of the picture.

*'The Cathedrals of England and Wales.' By T. Francis Bumpus. Second Series. London: T. Werner Laurie. 1906.

The foundations of Paul's Cross were discovered on the laying-out of the churchyard as a public garden in the year 1879. A few wooden remains were also found. The site of Paul's Cross has been carefully preserved, and an inscription let into the asphalte, and there is some idea of restoring the Cross as a place for the delivery of outdoor sermons.

PAUL'S WALK.

No place so sacred from such fops is barred,
Nor is Paul's Church more safe than Paul's churchyard;
Nay, fly to altars; there they'll talk you dead;
For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

Pope. Essay on Criticism.

At the sixth bay of the nave of Old St. Paul's was a small door in the north and south walls, each opposite the other. These openings offered dangerous facilities for making the church a short cut from one side of the churchyard to the other, as also at Durham until the appointment of Dean Lake in 1869. At the little north door was a notice set forth in these terms:

All those that shall enter within the Church dore
With Burthen or Basket must give to the Poore:
And if there be any aske what they must pay
To this Box, 'tis a Penny ere they passe away.

In spite of this levy—and pennies were pennies in those days—the grand and spacious nave of the cathedral became 'the common lounge of the idler, the Fop's Alley of the day.' It was called Paul's Walk, a name only too suggestive of the profanations of which it became the scene. Not only did the nave become a common thoroughfare, but men and women began to bring their wares into the church, 'to buy and sell and to get gain.' And this was not all. In spite of many warnings forbidding such desecrations 'under pain of the greater excommunication, some of the frequenters of Paul's Walk took delight in hurling stones at the crows, pigeons, and other birds that built their nests about the towers and battlements; while some, more daring still, shot at them with arrows and cross-bow bolts, breaking the pictured windows and even the statues which graced the interior.' Servants out of a place waited to be hired at the 'serving man's pillar.' Did not Falstaff there engage Bardolph as his servant?

> Falstaff.—Where's Bardolph?
> Page.—He's gone into Smithfield, to buy your worship a horse.
> Falstaff.—I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield.

The choristers, 'children of the queer,' found the nave (Paul's Walk) a profitable vantage-ground in their eager quest for spur-money, and there was 'suche noyse of children and others in the side chaples and churche at the divine service and sermondes that a man may scarce be heard for the noyse of them.' Spur-money was a fee claimed from anyone who entered the church wearing spurs. The person from whom it was claimed had, however, the right of calling upon the youngest chorister to sing his gamut (scale): if the young gentleman failed so to do, the wearer of the spurs spurned the demand. It is said that the Duke of Wellington escaped payment by this device when challenged by one of the Chapel Royal boys. Even kings were not exempt from this payment. The Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII. contain this entry:

1495. Oct. To the children, for the King's spoures. 4*s*.

A graphic account of the secular uses to which Paul's Walk was put is stated by Bishop Earle, in his quaint tiny tome, 'Microcosmographie,' first published in 1628. He says:

> Paul's Walk is the land's epitome, or you may call it the lesser isle of Great Britain. It is more than this, the whole world's map, which you may here discern in its perfectest motion, justling and turning. It is a heap of stones and men, with a vast confusion of languages; and, were the steeple not sanctified, nothing liker Babel. The noise in it is like that of bees, a strange humming or buzze—mixt of walking, tongues, and feet: it is a kind of still roar, or loud whisper. It is the great exchange of all discourse, and no business whatsoever but is here stirring and afoot. It is the synod of all pates politick, jointed and laid together in most serious posture, and they are not half so busy as the parliament. It is the antick of tails to tails, and backs to backs, and for vizards you need go no farther than faces. It is the market of young lecturers, whom you may cheapen here at all rates and sizes. It is the general mint of all famous lies, which are here, like the legends [of] popery, first coined and stamped in the church. All inventions are emptied here, and not few pockets. The best sign of a temple in it is, that it is the thieves' sanctuary, who rob more safely in the crowd than a wilderness, whilst every searcher is a bush to hide them. It is the other expence of the day, after plays, tavern, and a bawdy-house; and men have still some oaths left to swear here.

However incongruous it would seem to us in the present day, the nave of Old St. Paul's was put to better uses than those already mentioned in the epistolary accommodation supplied by the Dean and Chapter. At twelve little tables placed in the nave sat twelve scribes who would write a letter, or prepare a legal instrument, for anyone who applied to them. If, however, the applicant desired to take proceedings against any of the clergy he would have to go elsewhere, because the scribes had to swear that in everything they would safeguard the interests of the cathedral: and, it may be added, the interests of those who officiated therein!

The personal staff of the old cathedral shows that the sacred edifice was not undermanned. In 1450 the canons, or prebendaries, numbered thirty, as at the present day, four of the canons being termed 'Residentiaries.' It was the duty of each of these clerics to recite daily, whether present in church or absent therefrom, a portion of the Psalter. There were also thirty vicars-choral, who probably acted as deputies for the absent canons. In the time of Dean Colet (Dean of St. Paul's from 1504 to 1519, and founder of St. Paul's School) their number had dwindled down to six, as at present. The duties of the sacrist—deputy to the treasurer, who doubtless pocketed the emoluments while his subordinate did the work—were of a very multifarious nature. Among various other duties he had to see that 'the service-books were well-bound, with competent clasps; that no one practised singing in the vestibule; that the doors of the vestibule were opened at the first bell at matins, so that the rulers of the choir might enter in due time.' In 1598 prayers were said in the Jesus Chapel at five o'clock in the morning, and at six in winter, by the minor canons; and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen assembled in St. Dunstan's Chapel 'every Sondaye morninge before thei goe vnto the Sarmon.'

THE COLLEGE OF MINOR CANONS.

No account of Old St. Paul's would be complete without some reference to the College of Minor Canons, a college of twelve priests, founded in the time of Richard II. and endowed with its own estates. Like other corporate bodies the Minor Canons had their common seal, and they formed an important feature in the personnel of the cathedral. They wore surplices with almuces of calabar and black capes. The chief of these Minor Canons, the Sub-dean, occupied a position of considerable dignity and authority. He wore an almuce of grey fur, after the fashion of a Greater Canon, and moreover he, like the Greater Canon, was 'censed triply, to which honour there was added the more tangible reward of a larger portion of bread and beer, or a money payment in lieu thereof.' The second and third Minor Canons were called Cardinals, Cardinales chori. It was their duty to correct all faults and errors of the choir; to note those who came too late and left too early (the Charles Lambs among the vocal flock); to observe the singers who were idle or negligent in their duty, and to summon the defaulters before the Chapter. The Charter of Incorporation of the Minor Canons, personally granted by King Richard II., is a document beautifully written upon one skin, in thirty-eight lines, and is carefully preserved in the archives of the College. The statutes, thirty-eight in number, governing the College were very elaborate and strict. Space will not permit of quotation from these interesting mediæval rules of life and conduct, but the reader is referred to Dr. Sparrow Simpson's 'Gleanings from Old St. Paul's' for further information on the subject of this old foundation, now considerably modified in its constitution.

THE BREWER AND THE BAKER.

In olden times a large number of persons—including the choir boys—lived within the precincts of the cathedral. The care, labour, and fore-thought required to cater for this multitude must have been very great and constant. The office of brewer was by no means a sinecure. Archdeacon Hale, in his 'Domesday of S. Paul's,' says that the brewings for the use of the cathedral took place twice a week:

> In 1286 there were one hundred brewings in the year. The quantity of grain consumed consisted of 175 quarters of barley, 175 quarters of wheat, 720 quarters of oats. We learn from the computus (or account) of 1286 that the whole number of bollæ (or gallons) brewed was 67,814.

The baker, also, was not idle with his 'movable dough,' as he annually turned out no fewer than 40,000 loaves. Their weight and quality, varying according to the rank of the persons supplied by this master of the rolls, were matters of sufficient importance to be regulated by statute.

A MARRIAGE AT 'TOPP OF POWLES.'

If marriages are made in heaven, they are not often celebrated at 'Topp of Powles.' Such an exalted ceremony, however, took place in the reign of Charles I. Sir Thomas Gardyner, Recorder of London, had a daughter who was wooed and won by Sir Henry Maynwaringe. The story is best told by Sir Thomas himself, in a petition addressed by him to Charles I. in 1630, beginning, 'Your Royall Gratious Ma^{tie}.' After expressing regret at his inability to appear before the Council, owing to his bodily infirmity, Sir Henry proceeds to make detailed reference to his children, and then goes on to refer to the runaway marriage of his fourth daughter, which took place at 'Topp of Powles.' He says:

> When the tyme came that I should bestow my daughters in Mariage, and conceauinge that all hopes was frustrate for money by my Son, then I was driven for to lessen my Estate, and to sell Lands for my daughters portions, and I gave unto three of them Two thousand and Three hundred pounds, besides the Charges of their Rayment in Mariage. But my yongest Daughter, which is the ffourth (whoe your Maiesty did once vouchsafe to see at my house and King James often) shee, without my consent or knowledge, shee mounted vpp to Top of Powles, the nearer to Heaven, for to shewe God there howe wise shee was in her Actions, and there shee was maried vnto Sir Henry Maynwaringe, and yet shee was not there taken vpp into heaven, but came downe againe vpon Earth, here further to trouble mee before I die, although the greate Care and Charge I had in breedinge her vpp did not deserve such disobedience.

The original document containing this petition of Sir Thomas Gardyner—who subscribes himself 'Your Maiesties Humblest Vassell'—is preserved at the Record Office.

THE CHILDREN OF ST. PAUL'S, AND THE PLAYS THEY ACTED.

'So early as the year 1378,' says Thomas Warton, in his 'History of English Poetry,' 'the scholars, or choristers, of St. Paul's Cathedral in London presented a petition to Richard II. that his Majesty would prohibit some ignorant and inexperienced persons from acting the "History of the Old Testament," to the great prejudice of the clergy of the church, who had expended considerable sums for preparing a public presentation of that play at the ensuing Christmas.' In the 16th century the children of St. Paul's acted these plays at Court, and in houses of royal entertainment some distance from town—e.g., at Hatfield in 1554, before Queen Mary and the Princess Elizabeth, and (in 1559) at Nonsuch, in Surrey, at the palace (now demolished) of Lord Arundel, her Majesty's Housekeeper or Superintendent. We are told that

> There the Queen had great entertainment, with banquets, especially on Sunday night, made by the said Earl; together with a mask, and the warlike sounds of drums and flutes, and all kinds of musick till midnight. On Monday was a great supper made for her; but before night she stood at her standing in the further park, and there she saw a Course. At night was a play by the Children of Paul's and their master Sebastian. After that a costly banquet, accompanied with drums and flutes. This entertainment lasted till three in the morning. And the Earl presented her Majesty with a cupboard of plate.

The Mr. Sebastian mentioned above is stated to have been Sebastian Westcott, 'M$^{r.}$ of the Children of Polls.' There is a reference to him in the records of Christ's Hospital. A Court Minute, dated 5 March, 15^{79}_{80}, states:

> Mr. Sebastian, of Paulls, is appointed to have Hallawaie the younger out of this House to be one of the singing children of the Cathedral Church of Paulls in this Citie.

Perhaps this gentleman was better known by his Bachish Christian name than by his prelatical patronymic.

Dr. Sparrow Simpson, in his 'Gleanings from Old St. Paul's,' gives a list of thirty-five plays acted by the Children of Paul's. The question has been raised whether the term 'Children' in this connection refers exclusively to the choristers of the old cathedral, or whether it includes the boys of St. Paul's School; but in a list of nineteen payments made in respect of the performances, between the years 1563 and 1601, we find that on January 10, 1563, Sebastian Westcott was paid the sum of £6 13 4, and that the amounts hereunder stated found their way into the pockets of two other masters of the choristers, to wit, Thomas Gyles (or Giles) and Edward Piers:

The foregoing references to the Children of St. Paul's naturally lead to some mention of the Choir School of the cathedral. This, the most ancient choral grammar school in the country, is first mentioned by Ingulphus, who received his early education there in the reign of Edward the Confessor. Early in the 12th century it was founded anew by Richard de Belmeis, Bishop of London, and its revenues were subsequently augmented by three kings of England—Richard I., Henry III., and Edward II. Although the Choir School was spared at the Reformation, the endowments, like so many similar foundations of an ecclesiastical nature, were misappropriated, with the result that the Choir School per se ceased to exist. The choristers were boarded at different houses, one of them being 'The Golden Cup' in St. Paul's Churchyard, the residence, in 1700, of Mr. Jerry Clark, composer of the tune 'St. Magnus.' At the present time the choristers are comfortably housed and thoroughly well educated in a splendid building near the cathedral, an account of which, with details of the excellent musical education given to the boys, appeared in The Musical Times of May, 1900.

THE MUSIC OF OLD ST. PAUL'S.

The terrible fires which devastated the cathedral, no less than the neglect and indifference of past ages, have destroyed much documentary evidence that would throw light on the music and musicians of St. Paul's. Nothing is known of the organ in the old building, except that afforded by Hollar's view, doubtless the only known representation that exists, which is reproduced on page 11. From this it will be seen that the organ stood above the stalls on the north side of the choir, and that it had shutters. Although we have no information with regard to the organ in Old St. Paul's, an interesting sidelight is thrown upon the subject in the history of Durham Cathedral, published by the Surtees Society. From a record penned in 1593 we learn:

> There was three paire of Organs belonginge to the said quire [of Durham], for maintenance of God's service and the better celebratinge thereof.
> One of the fairest paire of the three did stand over the quire dore, only opened and played upon at principall Feasts, the pipes beinge all of most fine wood and workmanshipp, very faire, partly gilded uppon the inside and the outside of the leaves and covers up to the topp, with branches and flowers finely gilted with the Name of Jesus gilted with gold. There was but two paire more of them in all England of the same makinge, one paire in Yorke and another in Paules.

Henry Holland, in his 'Ecclesia Sancti Pauli illustrata' (1633), thus refers to the organ in explaining the emblems of St. Paul: On the back side of the organs in diuers places on the wall, is written these words following, with St. Paul's picture having a sword in his hand, and a book lying by:

Mucro furor Pauli, liber est conuersio Sauli.

In his 'Ceremony Monger' (1689,) Edmund Hickeringill — who has been described as 'an exceedingly scurrilous writer'—refers to organs and violins at St. Paul's. Speaking of the forms of worship in the English Church, which were little to his taste, he says (we have italicised the musical references):

> His cope, his hood, his cringing worship, his altar with candles on it (most nonsensically unlighted too), his Bag-Pipes or Organs, and in some places Viols or Violins, singing-men and singing-boys, &c., are so very like Popery (and all but the vestments illegal) that I protest when I came in 1660, first from beyond the seas to Pauls, and White-Hall, I could scarce think myself to be in England, but in Spain or Portugal again, I saw so little difference, but that their service was in Latine, and ours in English; but less intelligeable and less edifying (for one half thereof) than Latine, by reason of the inarticulate boatus and braging, whilst all the people read half the Psalms, with a noise as confused, as the rumbling thunder.

Unlike Salisbury, York, Hereford, and Exeter, whose ritual books liturgiologists have studied with conspicuous success, the ancient Use of St. Paul's is unknown. In 1414, however, Bishop Clifford issued a mandate directing, with the consent of the Dean and Chapter, that henceforth the Sarum Use should be adopted at St. Paul's. An inventory of the year 1445 catalogues a series of volumes relating to the music of the church. To quote from Dr. Simpson's 'St. Paul's Cathedral and old city life': 'There is a roll cum diversis canticis notatis, two beautiful books (each is described as liber pulcher) de organico cantu; three books de plano cantu; another book de cantu organico; seven books, each described as quarternus, also de organico cantu; another quarternus pro organis; and two others, de plano cantu.' As Dr. Simpson says, these music-books have the greatest interest, because very little is known about the early music of the cathedral.

THE ORGANISTS OF OLD ST. PAUL'S.

As in other cathedrals of the old foundation the organist at St. Paul's was not a statutable officer, unless he held a vicar-choralship. Thus the duty now assigned to one musician was then distributed among such members of the musical staff as were players, each taking in rotation the duty of presiding at the organ. As far back as the days of Edward IV., as the Liber Niger Domus Regis shows, the 'Chaplenes and Gentlemen Clerkes of the Chapelle' were required to be 'endowed with uirtues morrolle and specikatyve, as of the Musicke, shewinge in descante, clean uoyced, well releshed and pronounsinge. Eloquente in readinge, suffityente in organes playinge,' &c.; therefore any one of these officials might have been called organist during his week of duty.

The earliest known organist of St. Paul's Cathedral was John Redford, who held that office between the years 1530 and 1540, perhaps until 1546. He was also almoner, an appointment which included the mastership of the choristers, or 'children.' Redford's anthem 'Rejoice in the Lord alway,' is occasionally sung at St. Paul's. The poet Thomas Tusser, a chorister of the cathedral in the 16th century, thus eulogizes Redford in his 'Five hundred good points of husbandry:

> By friendship's lot to Paules I got,
> So found I grace a certain space
> Still to remaine
> With Redford there, the like no where,
> For cunning such and vertue much
> By whom some part of musicke art
> So did I gaine.

Tusser gained something else at Eton, whither he went after St. Paul's, in the shape of fifty-three stripes at the hands of that elegant scholar and severe chastizer, Nicholas Udall, the head-master.

To return to St. Paul's. Towards the latter part of the 16th century Thomas Gyles held sway as organist and 'maister of the children.' At that time Queen Elizabeth had issued a commission whereby any 'apt boys' could be kidnapped for the choir of the Royal Chapels, the choristers of Windsor and St. Paul's being exempted from these royal raids. In 1585 the Queen granted a roving commission by which Mr. Gyles could carry on this kidnapping business for his choir of St. Paul's. The royal warrant (British Museum, Sloane MS. 2035 B. f 1 b) is set forth in these terms:

> BY THE QUEENE.

The next name on the list of organists is the honoured one of Thomas Morley, who held office for a very short time, probably only a year, 1591-92. It is quite possible that Morley had before this been organist of St. Giles's Church, Cripplegate, as was suggested in the article on that church in THE MUSICAL TIMES for September, 1903. Between the years 1622 and 1638 the organistship of St. Paul's appears to have been jointly held by John Tomkins and Adrian Batten. The former had previously been organist of King's College, Cambridge, and the latter composed music said to have been among the earliest that was measured out by bar lines. Albertus Bryan (or Brian, or Bryne), a youth of seventeen, may have been appointed organist on the death of his master, John Tomkins, in 1638, but this is not certain. From the following petition addressed by him to Charles II., it would appear that Bryan must have been appointed to St. Paul's before 1649, the year of the execution of Charles I.:

> PETITION OF ALBERTUS BRYNE TO CHARLES II. FOR HIS ADMISSION AS ORGANIST OF THE CHAPEL ROYAL (1660?):—
> To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.
> The humble petition of Albertus Bryne,
> Sheweth,
> That your Majesty's late Royal father, of blessed memory, was pleased in his lifetime to make Choice of your petitioner to be Organist of the Cathedral Church of St. Paule, London, in which said place he was by your said late Royal father confirmed when your petitioner was about the age of seventeen years.
> And since then hath so industriously practised that science that he hath very much augmented his skill and knowledge therein.
> And therefore most humbly presents himself to serve your Majesty as Organist in your Majestie's Chapel at Whitehall, if your Majesty would be graciously pleased to admit of him accordingly.
> And he shall ever pray, &c.

This petition, by the way, does not appear to have evoked any favourable response. Bryan subsequently became organist of Westminster Abbey.

This brings us to the time of that awful visitation, the Great Fire of London in September, 1666, which consumed Old St. Paul's. Two witnesses of this terrible conflagration were the eminent diarists Mr. Pepys and John Evelyn. Mr. Pepys, under the date of Tuesday, September 4, 1666, says: 'Paul's is burned, and all Cheapside,' and early on the morning of the following Friday he records 'A miserable sight of Paul's Church, with all the roofs fallen, and the body of the quire fallen into St. Fayth's,' which was immediately beneath the choir of the cathedral. Evelyn gives a more graphic account:

> The stones of St. Paul's flew like grenados, the melting lead running down the streets in a stream, and the very pavements glowing with a fiery redness, so as no horse, nor man, was able to tread on them, and the demolition had stopped all the passages, so that no help could be applied, the eastern wind still more impetuously driving the flames forward. Nothing but the Almighty power of God was able to stop them; for vain was the help of man.

Thus perished one of England's noblest buildings in a calamity which, though terrible in its devastation, was not without some effect on the subsequent well-being of the city.

The consideration of the present cathedral—Sir Christopher Wren's masterpiece — and its interesting musical associations must be deferred till next month. In the meantime due acknowledgment is made to Mr. John S. Bumpus for kindly lending old prints for reproduction from his valuable collection on St. Paul's.

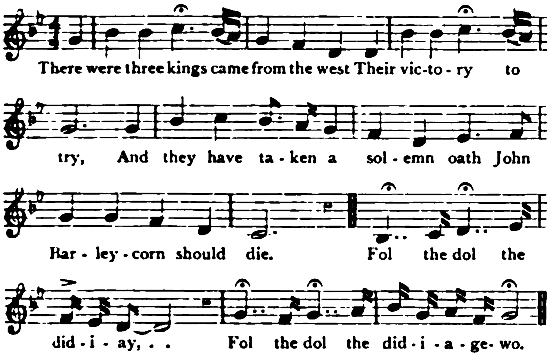
FOLK-SONG COLLECTING.

Of all the books in my library those that I value the most are the dozen or more odd volumes which contain the words and tunes of the 1,200 songs which I have noted down from the lips of peasant singers. It is evident that a collection as large as this could not have been made without acquiring some knowledge of the art of unsealing the lips of old country folk. A critic once said of me that I combined just that 'pachydermatous spirit and insidious bedside manner' that was required for this particular kind of work. I dare say he was right. The collector must at any rate be able to divest himself of all traces of the conventional drawing-room manner if he would be successful. For the old singing men and women of our country villages guard their secret stores of songs and ballads with jealous care. They are proud, and well may they be, of their possessions, and will not readily sing to you if they think you are going to make fun of them and laugh at their simple ditties. A manner that is simple and direct is necessary if we would induce the old folks—those who have faced life for seventy or eighty years with a like simplicity and directness—to unlock their treasures at our bidding. And this mental attitude, by the way, must needs be adopted by the student, as well as by the collector, if his study of the products of the unlettered folk is to be a profitable one. This idea has been admirably expressed by a well-known collector, when she adjures the student to 'approach popular songs and traditions from some other point than that of mere criticism; and, divesting himself of preconceived ideas, to try to live the life and think the thoughts of people whose only literature is that which they carry in their heads, and in whom imagination takes the place of acquired knowledge.'

It may perhaps be of service to the would-be collector if I narrate some of my own experiences. Let me recount, then, an adventure I met with in the early days of September last. I was in Somerset, the guest of a well-known squire of a small but singularly beautiful Mendip village. I rode forth one morning on my bicycle with no definite plan in my mind, but simply—in the words of the folk-song—'to see what I could kill.' About noon I found myself in a small village and in need of refreshment. A neat little inn stood invitingly before me. I entered the parlour and called for a glass of milk and a biscuit. Looking round I found myself in the company of ten or twelve men and women resting from the heat of the day, sitting in silence, and drowsy as the air outside. I opened the conversation by remarking that they were not accustomed to hear an order such as I had just given every day of the week. This started a desultory talk on the relative virtues of milk and 'zider.' I championed the cow, they the apple.

I then noticed a woman with a basket. Where was she going? To a neighbouring market-town to sell her wares. What was in the basket? She removed the cloth and exposed to view a few apples, some plums, a score of eggs, and some vegetables. She told me they all had come out of her own and a neighbour's garden. By this time I was on good terms with all my friends, and I judged that I might safely get to business, so I said: 'I, too, am going to market, but to purchase, not to sell.' And then, after a pause, 'The fact is, I have a great fancy for the old-fashioned songs that the old folk sometimes remember, and I am touring the country-side in search of them. Perhaps some of you can tell me of a singer in this neighbourhood from whom I may get what I want.' This announcement was received in silence. I presently added, 'But maybe some one in this room may know a song or two,' and, pointing to an old man on the bench, I said 'You look like a singer.' He did not deny the soft impeachment, but he had not 'tuned a zong' this many a long day, and he did not suppose he could 'zay a zong right through, even if I gave him a quart o' zider.' I took the hint, ordered the cider, and returned to the assault. 'Did you ever sing "John Barleycorn"?' I asked. 'I've a 'eered 'un, but I never used to zing he,' was the reply. I then turned round to the rest of the company and suggested that one of them could remember the song. They all knew of the song, but no one would venture to sing it. I explained that I only wanted one verse, as I knew all the words. Then up spoke an old man, who, until now, had been silent; 'If it's only the tune you do want, I can sing you the first verse, and that, I *h*reckon, will be enough.' And then, without further pressing, he broke forth into song. He had an extraordinarily beautiful voice, rich and resonant, and he held on to the last note of the refrain with consummate art, swelling it to a fortissimo, and then allowing it gradually to die away into silence. I saw at once that I had captured a fine tune. I called upon the landlord to fill up his mug, while I prevailed upon the old man to sing the verse once again in order that I might note it down in my pocket book. Having done this I sang the verse myself, that he might see whether I had written it down correctly—much to the amazement of the company, and their amusement, too, I expect. Once again I made him repeat the verse, partly for my own pleasure—it was glorious to listen to him—and partly that I might revise my manuscript. He told me he was a coal-miner, that he had heard the song when he was a boy, fifty or sixty years ago; that it was sung by a tramp who was passing through his village; that it had pleased his fancy, and that he had never forgotten it. The tune, which is printed below, is in the Æolian mode. It must be sung very slowly and deliberately; the pauses, with the exception of the last one, must be treated as lingering places rather than stopping places; they must on no account be allowed to disguise the rhythm:

JOHN BARLEYCORN.



There were three kings came from the west Their vic-to-ry to try, And they have ta-ken a sol-emn oath John Har-ley-corn should die. Fol the dol the did-i-ay, . . Fol the dol the did-i-a-ge-wo.

I noted down several more songs that day, but no more in public-houses. As a rule the singers in country inns sing modern songs only, or rather the songs that were popular in mid-Victorian days, e.g., 'Woodman, spare that tree,' or 'The 'Oodpecker.' Indeed, as a matter of fact, but a very small percentage of my collection has been recovered from tavern singers. I am afraid my friends sometimes think otherwise, and are inclined to eye me askance, when I return home from my holidays, as one who has been spending weeks drinking convivially in the parlours of country inns! And this reminds me of an amusing remark made to me by a country acquaintance who took much interest in my work. He had a love for long words which he did not always use correctly. On this occasion I was leaving his village, and he asked me if I had had a successful hunt. I told him I had captured fifty or sixty songs. He looked amazed and said, 'Dear me! it's scarcely creditable'!

Of course in out of the way districts—on the heights of Mendip, for example—I often take singers whom I have found in the fields into public houses; for their homes are far off and there is nowhere else to go to. But the majority of my songs have been taken down in cottages, in barns, by the roadside, or in the open fields. Whenever I see an old man or woman sitting alone in a cottage I at once rap at the door and ask if I may come in. This always produces a cheery welcome, a chair is dusted for me to sit upon, and I am made 'at home' in a simple way that is very fascinating. I usually allow the conversation to run on for some time before I introduce the subject of songs. It is worth remarking, by the way, as an instance of the good manners of the country folk, that I have never once been asked on these occasions what my business was. They are apparently quite satisfied to receive a stranger, offer him hospitality, and treat him as a welcome visitor without displaying any curiosity as to the purpose of his visit. I never ask them, at first, whether they sing themselves, but usually inquire of them whether they can tell me of any singers in the neighbourhood. All old people, i.e., those of over sixty or seventy years of age, know of the old songs. Up to the middle of last century the country-side must have been full of songs and singers, and a much brighter and happier place than it is now. Why the tradition came to an end at the period I have mentioned I cannot say. But that it did so is abundantly clear; for it is a very rare experience to come across a singer of the genuine traditional song under the age of sixty or seventy. This fact is a very important one, because it means that in ten years at the most there will be no more work for the collector to do. We have in this country been strangely apathetic in the matter of our peasant songs. Fortunately there is still time to repair in some measure our past neglect, but of course we cannot now reap a full harvest. Old singers, wonderful as are their memories, have yet forgotten many of the songs they once knew. As an old singer once said, speaking about me to a mutual friend, 'Ah! if that young man had a come to me forty year agone, I'd a zung 'un out o' zight.' That was old Susan Williams, of Haselbury-Plucknett, one of the most delightful singers and pleasant companions it has been my good fortune to meet. Susan is a widow, seventy-five years old, and she lives alone in as pretty a cottage as you could wish to see. I cannot reproduce here the charm of her voice—sweet and pure as the note of the woodland thrush—but her winsome face and picturesque appearance I can show by means of the accompanying photograph.

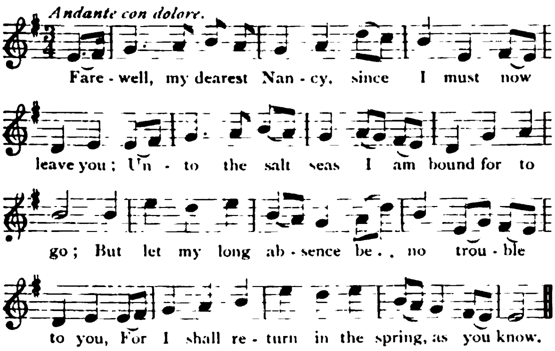
I have taken down nearly fifty songs from her lips. 'Farewell, Nancy' is perhaps the finest tune I have gained from her, but she has given me plenty of good ones besides. The tune which is given here, is published with pianoforte accompaniment in the third series of my 'Folk-songs from Somerset':

FAREWELL, NANCY.



Andante con dolore.
Fare - well, my dearest Nan - cy, since I must now leave you; Un - to the salt seas I am bound for to go; But let my long ab - sence be . . no trou - ble to you, For I shall re - turn in the spring, as you know.

The collector must be prepared to note down songs at the most unlikely times and in the most unusual places. I once took down two excellent songs from a 'bird-starver.' It was his business to guard a patch of mangold seeds from being eaten by birds, and this he did by hammering a tea-tray. He was quite prepared to sing, but his conscience would not allow him to neglect his duty. So we arranged that he should hammer his tray between each verse of his songs, and thus combine business with pleasure: and accomplished this to our mutual satisfaction and also to the amusement of passers by. On another occasion I recovered a good song from the proprietor of a cocoa-nut pitch at Cheddar Cliffs, when business was slack; and I have many times sat by the side of stone-breakers on the wayside and taken down songs—at the risk, too, of my eyesight, for the occupation and the song are very often inseparable. One singer in Langport could only sing when she was ironing, while another woman in the same court sang best on washing-day! I remember an amusing incident which happened to me at the house of the latter. I was in her wash-house sitting on an inverted wash-tub, note-book in hand, while my hostess officiated at the copper, singing the while. Several neighbours congregated at the door to watch this strange proceeding. In one of the intervals between the songs one of the women remarked, 'You be going to make a deal o' money out o' this, Sir?' My embarrassment was relieved by the singer at the wash-tub, who came to my assistance and said, 'Oh! it's only 'is 'obby.' 'Ah! well,' commented the first speaker, 'We do all 'ave our vailin's'!

I have said enough to show that the ''obby' of song-collecting is a fascinating one. It leads to an intimate knowledge of old peasant men and women, which is not only pleasurable but much more beside. It leads, moreover, to the recovery of many melodies of rare beauty; melodies, too, which have sprung from the hearts of our own country men and women, and which express the national character more clearly and with, perhaps, closer fidelity than any other form of art.

Never mind how they have been composed, or rather evolved. That is another story. Agree, if you will, that they 'grow like cabbages,' as one of our foremost musicians contemptuously suggested the other day. They are beautiful. And they are English. And that is enough.

Cecil J. Sharp.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE CHOIR ORGAN.

Until the 19th century English organs were small and of little power in comparison with those on the Continent: and we have seen it suggested that the reason for this is to be found in the greater attention given to congregational singing abroad than in England. If we look into history, however, this theory cannot be maintained, for congregational singing was one of the products of the Reformation, and it is certain that huge organs were in use in Germany and Holland before the Reformation, and have always been used in France and Spain, in which countries the Reformation has never taken root. Moreover the practice of using the organ to accompany the congregation arose quite fortuitously: there is no early record of its accompanying voices at all as a rule, though in England it may occasionally have accompanied the choir. It was formerly used for voluntaries and interludes as a regular part of the ritual: in St. Mark's Cathedral at Venice, during the examination of candidates for the post of organist, the choir, whose presence was compulsory, had to sing, after which the candidate was called upon to extemporise a fantasia on what had been sung: not a word is said about his playing with the choir. Again, the canons, sub-canons and priests were enjoined not to interrupt the playing of the organ, under a fine of one ducat against any priest who began to sing before the organ had done playing.

It was not until the congregational singing of Luther's hymns had degenerated into an incoherent noise that it occurred to the authorities, as quite a new idea, to use the organ with the voices to control and keep them together, and this custom, beginning at Hamburg, rapidly spread over Germany and England. In some parts of Germany both reformed and unreformed churches at one time made use of the organ to play through certain parts of the service which ought to be said or sung, while the choir and congregation remained silent listeners. The reason for this peculiar practice was two-fold: in the first place the Creed, for example, could be played through much quicker than it could be sung, and thus the service was shortened; and in the second place the congregations loved their organs, and were never tired of listening to them, while each church vied with its neighbours in endeavouring to obtain a better instrument than theirs.

It is not impossible that this rivalry had something to do with the growth of organs of so great a size on the Continent. The difference between English and Continental instruments was not that of a few stops more or less: it was a difference in the whole conception of what an organ ought to be. Thus, while from the earliest times German organs had stops of 32-ft scale, pedals, several manuals, tremulants, drums, &c., and as early as the end of the 17th century organs of four and five manuals were not uncommon in Germany, Holland and, a little later, in France, England was content with organs of two, or at most, three manuals, and no pedals. Stops of 16-ft. pitch—which were not introduced here until after the Restoration—were for a long time looked upon as rare curiosities, and admired not so much for their musical qualities as for the large amount of liquid they could contain!

Perhaps the real reason for the difference between English and foreign conceptions of the organ is to be found in a certain peculiarity of the national character, in the reserve of the average Englishman, in his intense dislike to the exhibition of any emotion or feeling, however deeply he may be inwardly moved. This feeling of reserve has caused him to be indifferent or hostile to all emotional or exciting or grand forms of music: and it is not impossible that the dislike to emotion, or its exciting causes, was at the bottom of the smallness of our organs. In the early part of the 17th century, Mace complains of the 'scolding violins,' which were taking the place of the softer-toned viols; in the 18th century we find complaints of Handel's orchestra being too noisy; in the 19th we have objections to the 'thunder' of the organ pedals and 16-ft pipes, which were at last beginning to find a regular place in English organs. Until the German musical invasion of the 19th century our countrymen preferred their music to be of a quiet and soothing, rather than of an emotional, strenuous and grand character, and, whether this was the cause or not, our organs were for centuries far behind those of the Continent in size and completeness, while on the other hand they are supposed to have surpassed them in quiet purity of tone.

Amongst the earliest recorded organs is that built by Bishop Elphege, at Winchester, about 951 A.D. It had forty pipes to each key, and made a noise like thunder. We have found no mention of any other organ in England of a similar character, at that or any later period. On the contrary, sundry pictorial representations in ancient English manuscripts lead us to suppose that the ordinary church organ, while it required two or more blowers, and was played with the fist, had only two rows of small pipes. An example is seen in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1904, in the facsimile of a picture from a psalter of the 12th century in the library of St. John's College, Cambridge. This picture has all the features usually found in contemporary illustrations of church music. The .organ has seven keys, of a size and shape adapted to the fist, and there are fourteen small pipes. Above it is a set of seven bells, the player of which has a hammer in his left hand and a monochord on his knee, which he seems to play with his right hand. There are also a trumpet, a harp, and a panspipe; and all the instruments, except the organ, which is silent, are apparently accompanying a single singer. The organ has two blowers, who stand on the bellows, and, as in all similar pictures, the instrument stands near the bells, and is apparently played in the interludes of singing by the bell-player. In a similar picture, of the 11th century, given in facsimile by Hopkins and Rimbault, the organ is being played with the bells and other instruments, but there is no singer. The connection between organs and bells is alluded to at Durham Cathedral, where, in 1264, Hugo Derlington, the prior, made Magnum Campanile, Organa grandiora.

The mediæval Latin name of the organ was Organa, in the plural, to distinguish it from Organum, the name applied during several centuries to harmonized vocal ecclesiastical music. It was also called Organa magna, to distinguish it from the Organa parva, of which we shall speak later. This use of the plural went from the Latin into the Spanish and English languages: in the former it is continued to this day, the instrument being known as Los Organos, while church vocal harmonized music, whether accompanied or not, is called Canto de Organo. The English equivalent to Organa was 'A pair of organs,' but the inconvenience of this lengthy nomenclature caused it to be given up in favour of the present name, an 'Organ.'

The German Organa in the 14th century, before the invention of stops, had a pedal of 32 ft., and two or three manuals, one of which acted on a Locatio or Mixture, with from thirty-six to fifty-six pipes to each key, varying from 16 ft. downwards; in modern parlance, it was a Mixture of from thirty-six to fifty-six ranks. Its tone was, according to Prætorius, 'a deep, coarse roar, combined with a horrible scream.'

About the year 1400 stops and other improvements came into use, and the organ rapidly developed into an artistic instrument.

Contemporary with the Organa magna there were two other instruments, similar in principle, but far smaller, and having a keyboard adapted to the fingers instead of to the fists. The first of these, and probably the most ancient, was the Portative, or Ninfale, which figures amongst the sculptures at Exeter Cathedral, Beverley Minster, and elsewhere, as one of the instruments of the mediæval orchestra. It was suspended from the player's neck, or placed on his knees, and blown with the left hand, while the right manipulated the keys. Its pitch was very high, owing to the smallness of its pipes, and though it soon became obsolete and left no successor, its influence seems to have remained until the time of Bach: but of this we shall speak later.

THE POSITIVE, OR Organa parva.

The third kind of organ, whose development is the subject of this article, was the Positive, the Latin Organa parva, the 'Little organ' of ancient cathedrals. It had, as a rule, two rows of pipes, and was sometimes provided with staves, by which it could be easily carried in processions by two men, like a sedan chair; and, since it had to be posita, or set down, for playing, it obtained the name by which it is still known on the continent, Positif in France, and Positiv in Germany. Its keys were very short, and could only be manipulated by the tips of the fingers, while the thumbs were not employed. It required a blower as well as a player, since it occupied both the latter's hands.

In its early days it had a compass of about eleven or twelve diatonic notes, the lowest of which was B, the hypate hypaton of the Greek system. The first semitone added, according to Prætorius, was E flat, and the complete chromatic scale seems gradually to have crept in, while the compass was little by little extended at both ends. By the middle of the 15th century it appears to have had a compass of about three octaves, starting from CC. No attempt seems to have been made at first to arrange its pipes in anything but their natural scale order, but during the 15th century, which was wonderfully prolific in improvements in organ building, the art of conveyancing allowed the Positive to take various forms. In a picture by Cosimo Tura (1432-1496) in the National Gallery, there is a Positive of three stops with its pipes arranged in a diminutive circular tower.

During the 15th century Positives were, in Germany and Italy, frequently suspended on the larger pillars of the church, 'like swallows' nests,' says Prætorius. This arrangement can still be seen in Italy, for at Padua, in the church of San Antonio, little organs are suspended from each of the four central pillars of the church. In English churches and cathedrals the 'Little organ' was frequently placed in a 'loft' specially constructed for it, or in the Rood loft, or it might be placed on the ground in a side chapel, whence it could be easily moved if required. In Italy, even at the present day, it is not unusual to see small organs on wheels in the large churches: at St. Peter's, Rome, there are at least five organs, two of which are on wheels, and at St. John Lateran there are the same number. English cathedrals and Abbey churches before the Reformation, and in some cases for a considerable time after it, had at least two, and often three organs, one of which would be the Organa magna, afterwards called the 'Great organs,' and the others, Organa parva or Positive, or 'Little organs.'

But the Positive was not only used in churches. A. G. Ritter, in his 'Geschichte des Orgelspiels,' shows that as early as the time of Dante it was used as a 'House organ,' or, as we should say, a 'Chamber organ,' in princely castles: and this caused it to be developed into an artistic instrument long before the Great organ became manageable. The necessity for rapid playing in secular music obliged its builders to use their utmost efforts to improve its tone, its touch, its bellows and its quickness of speech.

Unfortunately we have no complete description of our earliest organs; no English Prætorius has left a number of lists of stops and other interesting details. All we find is, here and there, a notice in church account-books of sums paid for mending the bellows of the Great and Little organs, or for carrying the latter, or for building an organ-loft. Even the few specifications that have come down to us from the 17th century do not, as a rule, give the pitch of the stops, a point on which Prætorius is particularly careful.

The practice of carrying the Positive, not only in processions, but into other churches, seems to have been very general in early times. Mr. Arthur Leach, in the 'Victoria County History' of Lincolnshire, quotes some passages in connection with the Positive of Lincoln Cathedral which are interesting not only as showing the use of the instrument outside the church, but also because they draw a clear distinction between singing the Organum and playing the Organa. In the 'Customs' of this church, in 1260, we read, 'On greater double feasts, when the prayer is finished, let some good singers, who have been taught beforehand by the master of the school, go and sing the organum at the lectern.' The word used is Organizent, from organizare, which meant, at that period, to sing in harmony, or parts. In 1321, in the celebration at the tomb of St. Robert, 'he who carries the organ (trahenti organa) is to receive 6*s*. 8*d*., while each of those who sing the organum (cuilibet cantancium organum) is to be paid 3 pence.' The above passages make the difference between organum and organa as clear as daylight, and should settle for ever any lingering doubt as to the origin of the expression 'A pair of organs' in England, and Canto de organo in Spain.

In the interesting articles on English cathedrals which have lately appeared in The Musical Times, there are notices of carrying Positives from place to place, not necessarily in religious celebrations. In 1407 there were two Positives in the chapel of Winchester College, which could be carried about on ash staves by two men. One of them was borrowed by Wykeham, and carried by six scholars to Bishops Waltham, where it remained for eight years. At St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, the sum of 2 pence was paid in 1508 for bringing the organs of Westminster Abbey into the church, and bearing them back again. From Hopkins and Rimbault's 'History of the Organ' we learn that in 1519 one of the organs of St. Andrew's, Holborn, was borrowed by the church of St. Mary-at-Hill, probably for a festival.

The conditions with regard to English cathedral organs about the time of the Reformation seem to have been in some respects analogous to those prevailing in some parts of Italy at the present day. It is evident that the instruments that were carried about and borrowed could not have been 'Great organs,' which had, as a rule, a fixed position on the north side of the choir in a loft; nor could they well have been little organs in Rood lofts or organ lofts, whence it would not have been easy to remove them. They must have been those whose normal position was on the floor of a chapel or of the nave. Now, if we take for example the churches of Capri at the present day, we shall find in the principal church, formerly a cathedral, a fair-sized modern two-manual and pedal organ in a loft or gallery at the extreme east end of the church, behind the high altar. This would correspond to the Great organ in the choir of the English cathedrals of four hundred years ago. On the floor of the choir in this Capri church, and concealed by the altar, is a Positive of one manual, formerly the only organ in the church, but now used for choir practices. It is no longer customary to carry organs in processions, or to lend them about; but this 'Choir organ' could, if desired, be as easily moved as a harmonium by two or three men. In two other Capri churches there are little single-manual organs in west galleries. It would be difficult to move them down from the galleries, but they are not too large to be lifted bodily. We read that during the destruction of organs under Cromwell the soldiers at Peterborough 'threw down the organ from the high loft over the choir to the ground,' and at Exeter they 'threw down the organ.' The words indicate that it was in each case thrown down as a whole, a thing that could easily be done with some of the present-day Italian church organs.

There are other points in connection with the organ in which Italy has had much in common in the past with England. Thus, she does not seem to have countenanced enormous organs like those of other continental nations. The organ on which Frescobaldi played before 30,000 listeners at St. Peter's, Rome, in 1614, had fourteen stops, the same number as the organ built by Robert Dallam for York Minster, in 1632, and extolled as one of the finest in England. An organ built at Brescia by one of the Antegnati, and among the largest of the many he describes, had a single manual and only twelve stops, one of which was divided between the pedal and manual. Its tone was built up as follows: Principal of 16 ft. on the manual, Octave of 8 ft., Fifteenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-second, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-third, another 16-ft. Principal divided between Pedal and Manual, a Flute of 8 ft. and a Flute of 4 ft. It will be noticed that there are no reed or mixture stops. This organ was built in 1580, and the specification of the famous Dallam organ at York shows that we were similar to the Italians in our idea of organ tone, only we started at 8 ft. instead of 16 ft. The York organ had for its Great: two Diapasons of 8 ft. in tin and one in wood, two Principals of 4 ft., a Twelfth, a Principal of 2 ft., a Twenty-second, and a Recorder, the last, of course, corresponding to the Italian Flute. As in Italian organs, there were no reeds or mixtures. The organ built for Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1637, and now at Tewkesbury Abbey, had a very similar arrangement of its Great stops.

Caffi tells us that the cathedral of St. Mark at Venice had, in early days, two little organs in two niches in the walls flanking the high altar, but afterwards there was only one. There were, however, always two large organs opposite one another in lofts above the choir. Somewhat similar arrangements existed in some English cathedrals in the 16th century: thus at Peterborough, and Ely, there were two organs in the choir and a third in the Lady chapel, while at Durham there were two organs in the choir and a third on the Rood screen.

How different was the German and Dutch conception of organs in the beginning of the 17th century, when Frescobaldi was playing on an instrument of fourteen stops, and Dallam was building a grand organ of the same number for York Minster, is shown by a glance at the lists in Prætorius's 'Syntagma,' published in 1618. The organ at Ulm had three thousand pipes, seventy stops and twenty-two bellows. One built at Dantzig in 1585 had sixty stops, ranging from a 32-ft. pedal upwards. Twelve of the stops were on the Pedal organ, and there were three tremulants and a drum, while one of the mixtures was of twenty-four ranks. Of several large organs at Hamburg, one had fifty-three stops, of which fourteen were on the Pedal.

Prætorius gives some plans for organs of various sizes, and among them that for 'eine gar kleine Orgel' of ten to eleven stops: this 'very small organ' is therefore nearly as large as the largest organs in Italy and England.

Occasional Notes.

Nature and art !
Come, and come strong,
To the conspiracy of our spacious song.
Bring all the pow'rs of praise
Your provinces of well-united worlds can raise ;
Bring all your lutes and harps of heaven and earth ;
Whate'er co-operates to the common mirth ;
Vessels of vocal joys,
Or you, more noble architects of intellectual noise,
Cymbals of heav'n, or human spheres,
Solicitors of souls or ears ;
And when you are come, with all
That you can bring, or we can call,
O, may you fix
For ever here, and mix
Yourselves into the long
And everlasting series of a deathless song !
Mix all your many worlds above,
And loose them into one of love !
Cheer thee, my heart !
Richard Crashaw (1613?-1649).

Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, F.S.A., organist of Chester Cathedral, has long been known to take a very keen interest in the ancient Mystery Plays associated with the city of which he is the chief musician. Therefore it must have been a source of satisfaction to him to have promoted and witnessed the revival of three of these Mysteries at the Music Hall, Chester, the plays that were performed being 'The Salutation and Nativity,' 'The Play of the Shepherds,' and 'The Adoration of the Magi.' The words of these 14th century Mystery Plays were printed in a booklet published by Messrs. Phillipson & Golder, Chester, to which were prefixed an interesting and historical introduction and notes from the pen of Dr. Bridge. The two performances, on the afternoon and evening of November 27, were silently listened to by an attentive audience, the players occupying a stage having a background of tapestry. The following music, selected and arranged by Dr. Bridge, added to the interest of the occasion :

The Shepherds' Trio—'As I outrode this enderes night.' From the Coventry plays.

'Gloria in excelsis': a traditional setting from the Chester plays, this being the only music now remaining.

'Hec est ora Dei celi,' to music adapted from the York plays.

Lullaby—'Lullaby, thou little tiny child,' from the Coventry plays.

Carol (traditional)—'We three kings of Orient are.'

Cavaliere Ladislao Zavertal, M.V.O., has just retired from the bandmastership of the Royal Artillery Band, a post he has held with distinction for twenty-five years. Born at Milan, September 29, 1849, he received his first lessons in violin and pianoforte from his parents, his father being a composer and conductor of great ability. He then obtained a violin scholarship at the Naples Conservatoire of Music, where he studied under Tosti, though composition was his chief delight. At the age of nineteen, in collaboration with his father, he composed an opera entitled 'Tita.' Soon afterwards he entered the orchestra of a Milanese theatre, and in two months became conductor and composer to the establishment. In 1871 Cavaliere Zavertal settled at Glasgow, where he conducted two musical societies and similarly assisted Hans von Bülow in his Scotch tours. After a competition, conducted by Sir (then Mr.) August Manns, he entered upon his duties as bandmaster of the Royal Artillery Band in January, 1882. He is one of the few commissioned bandmasters in the British Army : in December, 1898, he obtained the rank of honorary second lieutenant, which was followed about a year later by the full rank. The Band of the Royal Artillery has been brought to a high state of efficiency under his skilful direction, and no account of his career would be complete without reference to the excellent orchestral concerts given by the Band at Queen's Hall and elsewhere, of which the last under his baton took place (at Queen's Hall) on December 21 with its customary success.

'Toby, or not Toby musical?' is a Bach-like question which Mr. Punch has evidently addressed to himself, judging from the 'Musical Notes' which appeared in a recent issue of the genial journal associated with his name. From these notes we have ventured (jud(y)iciously we hope) to make the following selection :

The remarkable popularity achieved by Mr. Wakeling Dry's Life of Puccini (John Lane), illustrated by photographs of the gifted maestro

Driving his motor,
Wrestling at Pompeii,
In his motor-boat,
In peasant dress,
At his farm,
Snowballing,
Descending Mount Etna on a mule,

has, we are not surprised to learn, prompted a well-known firm of publishers to prepare a series of similarly-illustrated monographs of leading British composers.

The first of the series will, of course, be devoted to Sir Edward Elgar, and will be enriched with twelve instantaneous photographs of the famous composer of 'Gerontius' by W. G. Bedlam. Amongst other characteristic poses, Sir Edward will be depicted

In the uniform of the Bavarian Highlanders,
Playing pelota at Alassio,
Deerstalking at Edgbaston with Sir Oliver Lodge,
Dancing the tarantella with Mr. Robert Hichens,
Writing to the Manager of The Times Book Club,
Re-dedicating his 'Olaf' to the Crown Prince of Norway.

The second volume will have Mr. Henry J. Wood for its hero, and here Mr. W. G. Bedlam's magical camera is credibly asserted to have surpassed its own record in the graphic portrayal of the famous conductor. The plates will be forty-four in number, the most enchantingly characteristic being those which represent Mr. Wood

Standing on his head and conducting with his right foot without a baton, Descending Primrose Hill on a toboggan,
Arrayed in the gorgeous robes of the Hereditary Voivode of Mingrelia,
As Mazeppa.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke, whose wonderfully brilliant symphonic extravaganzas have caused Richard Strauss so much searching of conscience, will be the subject of the third volume. Mr. Bedlam has secured a set of superb snapshots of the great orchestral virtuoso, amongst which the following are perhaps the most arresting in their mingled charm and appropriateness :

Mr. Josef Holbrooke playing full back against the Springboks,
,, ,, playing his arrangement of 'The Bells' to Mr. C. F. Moberly of that ilk,
,, ,, sailing his model yacht on the Round Pond,
,, ,, playing spillikins with Mr. Algernon Ashton,
,, ,, ascending Ruwenzori on a giraffe.

The Bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards Band, Mr. Albert Williams, has recently taken the degree of Doctor of Music at the University of Oxford. Dr. Williams is the first bandmaster in the British Army to obtain this distinction, upon which he and the ancient and valiant regiment to which he is attached are to be warmly congratulated. We intend very shortly to give an article—historical, descriptive and illustrated—on the Grenadier Guards Band, with an account of Dr. Williams and his players, who deservedly have a world-wide reputation.

The two volumes of correspondence between Johannes Brahms and Heinrich and Elisabet Herzogenberg, edited by Herr Max Kalbeck, have just been published: one or two brief extracts therefrom may interest our readers. That Brahms and Wagner were not sworn friends is well known, but the former, though not in sympathy with the art-views of the latter, recognized the genius of the Bayreuth master. There are a few remarks in these volumes which show Brahms's attitude towards Wagner's later works. In 1882, the year of the production of 'Parsifal,' Brahms writes that he is thinking about going to Bayreuth; two months later, however, in a letter to Hans von Bülow, he is much more explicit, he cannot make up his mind: 'I need scarcely say that I fear the Wagnerites will do their best to spoil my enjoyment in Wagner when at his best.' In the following year Heinrich Herzogenberg quotes, and somewhat sarcastically, the verse 'Zum Raum wird hier die Zeit,' remarking that he cannot fathom its meaning, but supposes it indicates something bad. Brahms in reply expresses the hope that the 'deep (?) meaning words will in time become clear to him.'

Brahms gives, in a letter written in 1879, a criticism on his music, his reply thereto and a counter-reply. S. H. Mosenthal, the poet, with whom Brahms was intimate, 'complained that I took my art too seriously, and on my expressing the opinion that I was sometimes in a joyful mood, he agreed with me. "Yes," he added, "when you are in right merry mood, then you sing: The grave is my delight."' And here is a curious remark in regard to Bible words for choral music, which Brahms says he composes with such pleasure: 'Bible words are not sufficiently heathenish for me. I have now bought the Koran, but find nothing to suit me in it.'

In a letter to Elisabet von Herzogenberg (February, 1881), Brahms encloses a four-part Canon on the words 'Mir lächelt kein Frühling, mir strahlt keine Sonne, mir blüht keine Blume, für mich ist alles dahin.' This appeared in the Musikalisches Wochenblatt of April 28, 1881, and a solution by Capellmeister F. Böhme was at once sent to the editor, who published it on August 4, 1881. Herr Kalbeck states that hitherto it has not been publicly known that the Canon was composed by Brahms.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'The Yeomen of the guard, or The Merryman and his maid' was successfully revived at the Savoy Theatre, its first home, on December 8, under the management of Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, and in the presence of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, author of the libretto. The opera was first performed at the Savoy Theatre on Wednesday, October 3, 1888, the composer conducting a memorable première.

The Board of Education, towards the end of November last, issued a somewhat important circular on 'Music in Secondary Schools.' The elementary rate-aided schools have had their circulars and music codes galore for a generation or so, but as it is only recently that the State has endeavoured to influence the curricula of secondary schools, musical education in schools of this type has had to take care of itself. The term 'secondary' is misleading, because it implies education supplementary to primary. As a matter of fact the term is used to describe the kindergarten, high schools, boarding schools, &c., to which the middle and upper classes send their children and pay school fees. In such centres of light and leading music has on the whole fared badly. It is this fact that gives significance to the circular of the Board, although such a document, however impressively written, cannot of itself effect reform. The Board's suggestions and recommendations are simply prods that may be hoped to create a public opinion as to the value of music in a scheme of education, and a demand for a more respectful attitude towards the art on the part of scholastic authorities. At present, at least, there are no penal consequences threatened if the circular is ignored.

In twenty-five sections the circular deals argumentatively, persuasively, didactically, and occasionally obscurely with most of the questions that arise in connection with class and individual training in music. Very high claims are made on behalf of music as an educational subject. Some of us who give our lives to the art ought to blush to find either what the study must have done for us ethically, or what it has so miserably failed to do in our sad case. Breathing on the 'Swedish' system—whatever that may happen to be—is a recommendation, there are remarks on the voice production of children, and unison singing is recommended 'as a rule.' The tonic sol-fa method, especially as applied to the staff notation, receives a remarkable testimony as to its value, and the system of naming the degrees of the scale by figures, which has recently been revived in some secondary schools, is relentlessly condemned 'because it transgresses fundamental laws or psychology,' a peculiarly reprehensible crime that of course cannot be tolerated. There are some very good remarks with respect to girls' class-singing and some practical hints on the teaching of instruments. All musicians interested in education will hope that the action of the Board will bear good fruit. The circular is printed in full in the December issue of The School Music Review.

Professor Julius Buths, the Düsseldorf Municipal Musikdirektor, proved himself a Brahms conductor par excellence at the third subscription concert of the Stædtischer Musik-Verein on December 6. The programme included a masterly poetic and romantic reading of the fourth (E minor) Symphony; the second Pianoforte concerto in B flat, capitally played by Fräulein Elly Ney; the lovely female-voice trios with accompaniments for harp and two horns (Op. 17), most beautifully sung by a small choir of picked voices; the glorious 'Harzreise' Rhapsody for alto solo and male-voice chorus, also performed in very impressive style; and four unhackneyed songs for contralto, sung by Fräulein Maria Philippi, who was also the excellent soloist in the Rhapsody. The whole concert was one long feast of beauty and reflected the greatest credit on Professor Buths.

A firm of music-publishers recently received an order (from France) for a primer on 'The art of braining choir boys.'

THE LOST SCORE OF MENDELSSOHN'S 'MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM' OVERTURE.

That the Royal Academy of Music is a treasure-house was proved five years ago when, after having been 'mislaid' for 200 years, the complete score of Purcell's 'Fairy Queen,' partly in the autograph of the composer, was found in the library of that institution (see THE MUSICAL TIMES, June, 1901, p. 388). And now the long-lost manuscript score (in a copyist's hand) of Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture has recently been found within the walls of the 'old place' in Tenterden Street. Readers of Sir George Grove's biography of Mendelssohn in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (1st edition) will remember that the overture was first played in England at a concert given by Drouet, the flautist, on Midsummer Night, 1829, Mendelssohn himself, then a young man of twenty, conducting the performance. To quote from Grove:

> After the concert the score of the overture was left in the hackney coach by Mr. Attwood, and lost. On Mendelssohn's hearing of it, he said, 'Never mind, I will make another.' He did, and on comparing it with the parts no variations could be found.

It is only fair to Sir George Grove to say that he gives the story 'on the authority of Mr. W. H. Husk.' It is strange, however, that this 'lost' story and its sequel did not come into the Mendelssohn literature or become public property before the year 1880, when that Part of the 'Dictionary' containing the 'Mendelssohn' article was published. The story does not appear in any of Grove's analyses of the overture in the Crystal Palace concert-books previous to the year 1884, and Sir George Macfarren, always so well-informed in these matters, says nothing whatever about it in his earliest analysis of the overture in the Philharmonic book of June 24, 1872, or subsequently. The article, 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' in Grove's 'Dictionary' (1st edition), says 'the score was left in a hackney coach and irrecoverably lost' (the italics are ours).

In order to discover whether Mendelssohn made any reference to the said loss of the score in his home letters written from London in 1829, we communicated with Mrs. Wach, the composer's only surviving child, on the subject. In reply she sends an extract—kindly made by her nephew and son-in-law, Prof. Albrecht Mendelssohn Bartholdy, of Würzburg, to whom the 'green volumes' now belong—from a letter written to Mendelssohn by his mother, which was posted in Berlin on July 8, and received in London, July 13, 1829. Commenting upon this extract, Mrs. Wach writes:

> It seems to me, after reading these few lines written by my grandmother, that there was 'something' that made her feel very anxious in first reading his report about the Drouet concert, and that 'everything ending well,' it must be that Mr. Husk was mistaken in so far as, though the score may have been forgotten in the hackney coach, it was soon found again, and it surely is the very one used by Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

The overture was repeated, also under Mendelssohn's direction, at a concert for the benefit of the sufferers from the floods in Silesia, on July 13, 1829, nineteen days after its first performance here on Midsummer Night. Now, unless the band parts were lost with the score—a somewhat unlikely occurrence—it would not have been necessary for Mendelssohn to make a new score from memory, amidst all his social engagements at the height of the London season, when an ordinary copyist could have done the work quite easily; therefore, as no reference whatever is made to the loss in any letter or biography of Mendelssohn other than in Sir George's monograph, and that on the unconfirmed testimony of Mr. W. H. Husk, the said 'loss' is either a myth or a mystery. The diaries of Sir George Smart—which have kindly been referred to by Miss C. L. E. Cox for the purposes of this article—throw no light upon the loss. Under date of November 23, 1829, Smart records: 'Mendelssohn gave me a score, copied by himself, of the overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."' As a matter of fact the score was not copied by Mendelssohn. The entry in the diary, on March 1, 1830, is more accurate. It records the first performance of the overture at the Philharmonic Concert on that date, and states that 'The orchestral parts were copied from the MS. score given to me by the composer in 1829.'

The score of the overture has now been found and, through the courtesy of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, we have had an opportunity of examining it and making a few notes. Written throughout very clearly in a professional German copyist's hand, the title-page reads:

Ouverture

Zum Sommernachtstraum

Partitur.

At the bottom of this title-page is the following in Mendelssohn's own hand:

Presented to Sir George Smart by the author
F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.
London, Nov. 23th (sic)
1829.

How, when, and where this score passed from the possession of Sir George Smart into that of the Royal Academy of Music cannot be ascertained, there being absolutely nothing to show the change of ownership. One cannot help saying that it seems strange so interesting a relic of Mendelssohn's first visit to England, a score from which, by inference, he twice conducted his fairylike inspiration in this country, and before the work was printed, should have so long escaped notice—should have been lost, in fact, for seventy-seven years—until Mr. Frederick Corder, the Curator of the Academy, when examining some old music in the library, accidentally came across the manuscript. It should be recorded that Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted the overture from this identical score at the concert of the Sunday Concert Society, Queen's Hall, November 4—the fifty-ninth anniversary of Mendelssohn's death—on which occasion some interesting notes on Mr. Corder's discovery were contributed to the programme-book by Sir Ernest Clarke.

The overture was first performed by the Philharmonic Society on March 1, 1830, when it was 'conducted'—at the pianoforte, of course—by Sir George Smart. In view of that performance, Sir George, most punctilious of musicians, wrote on a sheet of foolscap paper—still preserved with the manuscript—some orchestral directions which we give literatim et verbatim:

Violini Io.

Where 'a Due' is marked the Performer on the Left side of the Desk to play the upper line.

Violini 2do.

The Performer on the Right side of the Desk to play the upper line.

Viole.

The 1st and 2nd is written in each Part, the two Performers at each Desk to play the 1st and 2nd Viole.

All to play (but Piano) where Solo is mark'd.

Baſsi.

See that the 1st and 2nd Books are placed accordingly.

Bassoons.

When the Corno Inglese di Basso is in the orchestra, the 2nd Bassoon is not to play the Notes in Red Ink, but in those Passages to play in unison with the 1st Bassoon as mark'd.

The Notes in Red Ink in the various Parts are not to be play'd, they are Ques (sic).

Yet two other notes in Sir George Smart's clear caligraphy:

> The Corno Inglesi in Front.
> The Pianos and Fortes to be well observed.

The second of these notes excites no wonder—it is the old, old story: the first refers to the part for the 'Corno Inglese di Basso' in the score, which in the published version is assigned to the ophicleide, the notation being the same. In connection with this practically unknown instrument, Professor Prout, in response to our inquiry, sends the following information:

> Like yourself, too (and doubtless many others), I had been struck by the mysterious 'Corno Inglese di Basso.' It is only the adjective that troubles me. As the part is that played by the ophicleide, I have little doubt that the instrument meant is the old Bass Horn, which Mendelssohn also uses in his overture (Op. 24) and march (Op. 103). You will find the instrument spoken of on p. 242 of my 'The Orchestra,' vol. i. It is now quite obsolete, but I remember seeing and hearing it when I was a boy.

A few variants between this score and the printed version may conclude these notes on this interesting recovery of a long-lost treasure. The manuscript contains some interesting pencillings in Mendelssohn's hand, consisting of nuances, &c., including an animato, not in the printed version, at the donkey's bray section. Of more importance, however, is the deletion of the pauses and the ritardando before the return of the first subject, the tempo primo of the published score. These were afterwards reinstated. The common-chord quaver notes in the coda—played by oboe, clarinet, and flute (solo) while the violins are busy with their pianissimo gambols, are crossed out with pencil, but, like the pauses above mentioned, they too have been reinstated in the published score. One other thing—a subtle touch to which Sir Alexander Mackenzie calls our attention: At the concluding bars, five bars before the end, the pause notes in the flutes and clarinets are slurred, Mendelssohn's idea evidently being to get a perfectly smooth and tranquil ending, notwithstanding the long breaths needed to play the passage by reason of the pauses. These slurs are not in the printed version, but their significance may not be without interest to those who conduct one of the masterpieces of music.

The 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture has so long been accepted as a classic of the orchestra, even by the detractors of Mendelssohn, that it seems strange to meet with an adverse criticism of the work after its third performance in England, especially in the Athenæum! That journal, in a notice of the Philharmonic concert of March, 1830, said:

> The overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' we have long heard of as a 'fairy performance indeed!' Now, for the life of us, we cannot find out the justice of such an opinion, unless the tickling of fiddle strings in an unusually strange and uncouth manner, through a dozen dull iterations of the same idea, constitute a musical outline of Fairyism! The imitations of a donkey's braying (in allusion, we suppose, to Bottom's transformation), and the puerile conceits in which this overture abounds, are unworthy of true genius. We agree with Burney, that imitations are to be admitted only 'when they involve no absurdity.' One particular merit, however, we observed in this composition; it really had the power of making the band play piano in two or three passages. This must have been produced by no common influence.

This could hardly have been written by Mendelssohn's friend, Mr. Chorley?

F. G. E.

MOZART'S SYMPHONY IN G MINOR.

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

Of Mozart's forty-nine symphonies the last three, and perhaps a fourth, somewhat earlier in date, are the only ones that can be said to survive in the modern concert room. These three were written between June 26 and August 10 of the year 1788, an extraordinarily short space of time for works of such dimensions and of such remarkably fine quality. The second of the three is that in G minor, and therefore the last but one of the master's compositions in this great department of music. The dates given by the composer's own catalogue and on the autograph score limit the time occupied in its composition to ten days. This is not more wonderful than the fact, which is equally well ascertained, that Handel composed the 'Messiah' in a month, and 'Israel in Egypt' in seventeen days—though in each case the wonder is not so much that the work should have been done in so short a time, as that being done it should prove of such splendid and enduring quality. At any rate, Mozart did not have recourse to the process, to which Handel so freely resorted, of easing the labour of composition by using up old materials. When the wonderful story of 'Israel in Egypt' comes to be fully told, a curious medley will be revealed. Youthful works of his own, cantatas of early Italian masters, organ fugues of early German masters, themes from this composer and phrases from that, all laid under contribution, all thrown into the vast melting-pot of Handel's genius, and issuing forth in what we now accept as one of the grandest wholes which has ever been produced. But not so the G minor Symphony of Mozart. Not only is no phrase or subject in any of its movements traceable to any other composer, but of all the symphonies of Mozart it is probably the most individual, and the most free from phrases and turns of melody to be found elsewhere in his works. The very key is significant. Of sixteen symphonies which he composed between the years 1773 and 1788 (when he wrote his last), this is the only one in a minor key. Of the whole forty-nine of his symphonies—a library in themselves—there are only two in the minor key, and these are both in G minor. Of the earlier of the two* little is known, but good as that doubtless is, he certainly reserved his most passionate emotions and his greatest inspirations for the one now under consideration.

Whatever may be thought of the E flat Symphony, a picture of graceful beauty from beginning to end, or of the 'Jupiter,' not unfitly so named for its dignity and majesty, the G minor deserves a still higher place—the place which will always be given, by those who are able to judge, to the most imaginative and most touching work of a great artist, that which seems to penetrate most deeply into the recesses of our sympathies, to lift us highest towards the artist himself, and the heaven into which he is soaring. Just as in the 'Unfinished' Symphony in B minor of Schubert there is a certain keen, wild voice, a refined individuality which seems to come more directly from the heart of the master and to penetrate more deeply into the heart of the hearer than any of his other orchestral works, so it is with the G minor of Mozart. In it he seems to come more closely to us than elsewhere, to talk to us 'as a man talketh to his friend'; not making music so much as revealing the actual personality of his beautiful, restless, laden spirit, in a mature and perfect manner not to be found in any of his other symphonies. No wonder that Schubert doated on this particular work. He used to say that 'you could hear the angels singing in it'; and so you can—if you know how to listen.

This Symphony does not differ in any respect from the then usual and recognized form, nor does the instrumentation contain anything out of the common. No trumpets, drums, or trombones are to be found in the modest array. Clarinets, then rare members of the concert orchestra, were afterwards added by Mozart to his score, and for this purpose he re-wrote the oboe parts; but otherwise no attempt was made to add to the interest of this work by anything but the intrinsic beauty of the strains themselves and their treatment. And yet such is the transcendent effect of these quiet rhythmical strains that on one occasion at Vienna, some years ago, when the first portion of the programme had been filled by the advanced music of the day and the second part began with this Symphony, the opening bars were received with such a sudden fury of applause that the orchestra had to stop and begin the movement again.

1. Allegro molto.
2. Andante.
3. Minuetto e Trio.
4. Finale: Allegro assai.

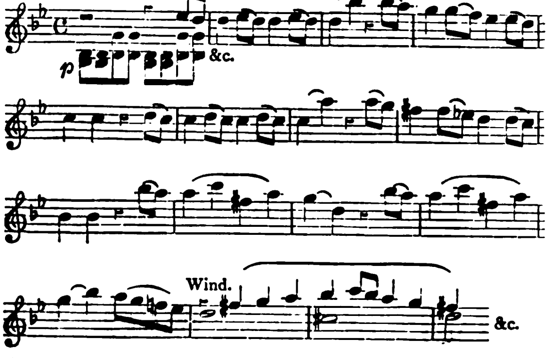
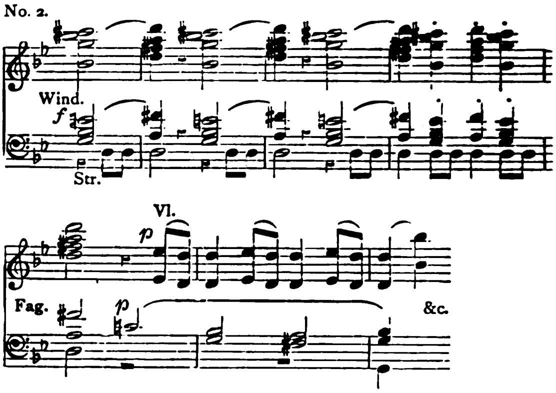
I.—The first movement is an Allegro molto, beginning at once in the strings with the main subject, accompanied by a figure played by the divided violas —of which figure more anon:

No. 1.



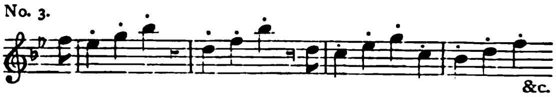
This subject is unusually long, sixteen bars. After an interesting link of four bars:

No. 2.



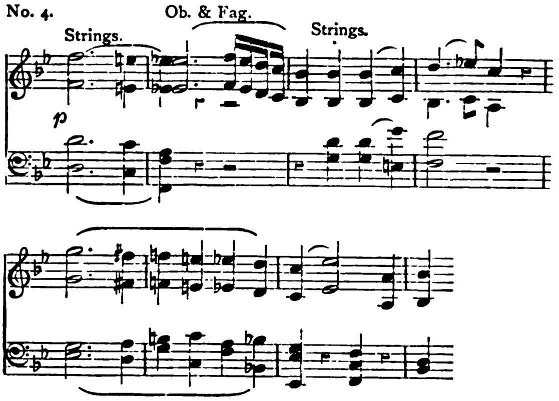
given by the entire band, the first eight bars are repeated with additional accompaniment in the oboes and bassoons. Another subsidiary theme then enters:

No. 3.



and then after one bar's silence we arrive at the second main subject:

No. 4.



This is in B flat, and is soon repeated, but goes off on a figure generated by the first bar of quotation No. 4. A developement, by no means long, of the first subject of all (No. 1) finishes the first section, which is then, according to the excellent rule of the great Haydn, repeated entire. The working-out is mainly occupied with the principal of the above themes (No. 1) modulating at once into F sharp minor, the theme being introduced by the delightful descending chromatic phrase in the oboes and bassoons, which forms the end of quotation No. 2, and has the interesting peculiarity of not coming to its close until the third bar after the original subject has re-commenced. After considerable further modulation, a chromatic passage in oboes, flutes, and bassoons leads to the reprise; and the whole ends with a Coda of twenty-four bars, a considerable extent for Mozart. I cannot find in this beautiful movement the distress which some critics have discovered—'a tide of suffering which can flow in few hearts without bursting them.' Pathetic it is, no doubt, but there is something in the definite regularity with which its various sections and even the sentences of its themes are laid out, that gives a more formal character to the music than we now associate with grief. Witness the two notes which end the two sections of the first theme in the fifth and ninth bars of No. 1, and other passages.

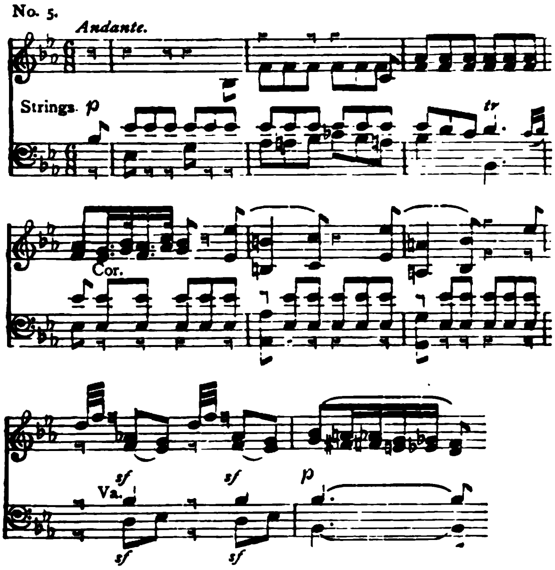
* Written in 1773; Köchel, No. 183.

With regard to the figure with which the violas accompany the principal subject at the opening, an interesting anecdote is told on Ferdinand Hiller's authority. Liszt arranged all Beethoven's symphonies for pianoforte solo, and in the preface to his arrangement he maintains that every orchestral effect can be produced on the pianoforte. When Mendelssohn read this he turned to Mozart's G minor Symphony and said: 'Let me hear the first eight bars, with the viola figure rendered as it sounds in the band, and I will believe it.'

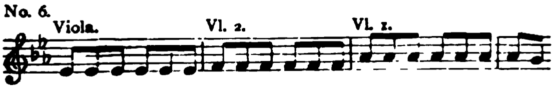
II.—The second movement, an Andante, is in every way a worthy successor to the Allegro molto. It is in E flat major, 6-8 time, and starts as follows:

No. 5.



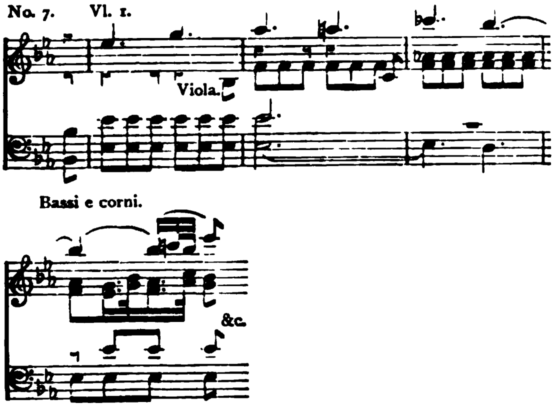
It will be noticed that the intervals in which the three first instruments are first heard are those of the old ecclesiastical phrase of which Mozart was so fond (Finale of 'Jupiter' Symphony, Credo of F major Mass, &c.), sounding as follows:

No. 6.



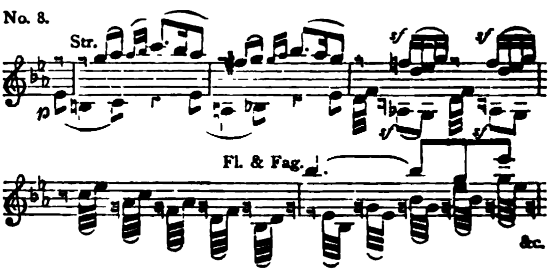
This first theme is accompanied by a bass of the most melodious kind, which is developed later on in a truly fascinating manner. On repetition of the theme, a melody is added in the first violins:

No. 7.



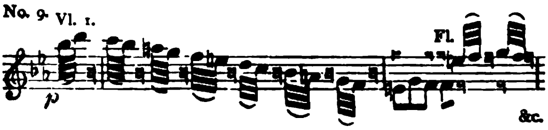
This continues in the same melodious fashion for a few bars, and ends in a melody shared between the flute and oboe:

No. 8.



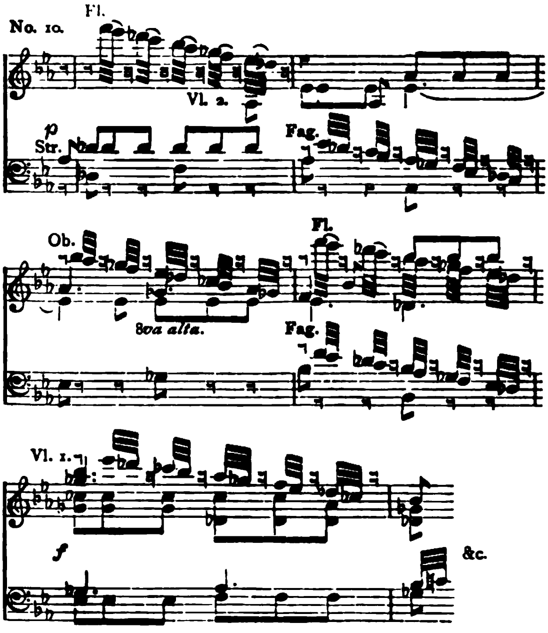
The repeated demi-semiquaver figure which comes in by chance in the seventh bar of this movement (see No. 5) is employed in the course of the last quotation, and, seeming to take Mozart's fancy for its fairylike capabilities, he continues its use:

No. 9.



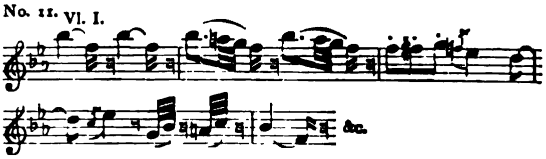
and finally gives it a very important share as an accompaniment to the first subject of all (No. 5), in a lovely episode:

No. 10.



At the end of this episode the second main theme arrives in the key of B flat:

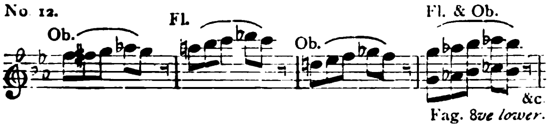
No. 11.



and with this the first portion ends.

The Andante is in the regular duplex form mostly appropriated to first movements; and the working-out opens with the original main theme, combined, but in a fresh manner, with the demi-semiquaver figure, which gradually spreads to the entire orchestra until the effect of its constant motion is so absolutely lovely that it is almost impossible to sit and listen to it. After a considerable development, the working-out ends by imitations of the melodious bass used in the opening bars :

No 12.

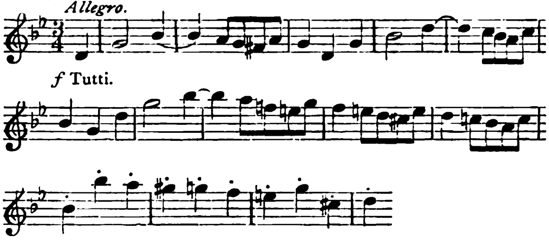


We thus return to the original key and the reprise, after which the movement ends according to rule.

The exquisite care taken by Mozart throughout the Symphony may be exemplified by the semiquaver rest which occurs after the figure of the double demi-semiquaver figure (No. 5, 8, 9, &c.), and which adds immensely to its lightness and charm ; similarly by the semiquaver rest after the F's in the second subject (No. 11), and by other touches which there is not time to mention.

III.—For the Minuet, Mozart returns to the key of the first Allegro, and employs a delightful three-bar rhythm :

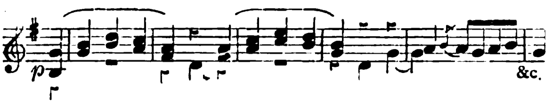
No. 13. MINUETTO.



No new matter is introduced in the second part of the strain, the singing little Coda which ends it being merely an expansion of that which closes the first part in our quotation.

Of the Trio, in G major, words seem a profanation :

No. 14. TRIO.



It was of this portion of the Symphony that Schubert, who, as a boy, often played in it among the school-band in the Convict School, used to say 'you could hear the angels singing.'

IV.—The Finale, Allegro assai, a miracle of passion and energy, though hardly of sorrow ! It remains in minor, and is remarkable for the same definite conciseness in the form of its phrases which we noticed in speaking of the opening movement. The first subject is a fiery passage of sixteen bars, made of four repetitions of one phrase, itself in two distinct halves (Mendelssohn surely betrays his fondness for this in the Finale to his C minor Symphony) :

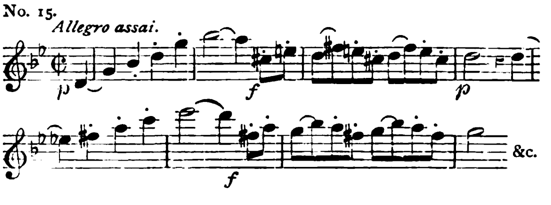
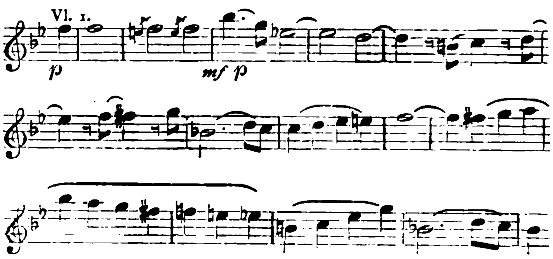
No. 15.



The same passionate course is pursued as in the first Allegro, down to the appearance of the second subject, in B flat, which is then ushered in by a pedal on the dominant (F) of the new key.

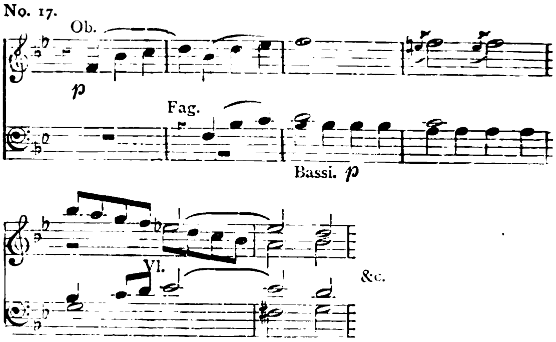
The subject itself is lovely :

No. 16.



and after completing this its allotted course it expends another sixteen bars in a free version of its first form—being one of the most beautiful things ever heard :

No. 17.



After this a rattling passage closes the first section of the Allegro.

In the working-out of the Finale Mozart again, as in the first movement, brings all his science into play : and here, as before, the unscientific hearer little suspects the amount of modulation and contrivance which animates the deeply poetical passages that form the rapid fabric of this wonderful section, and in which the science is kept clear by the art of the part-writing. The section begins in B flat major and goes through the keys of D, G, C, F minor, E flat, C minor, F sharp, &c., until it ends in the original G minor and the resumption of the first theme. An interesting variation on ordinary practice is made by repeating the second theme, not in the major but in the minor key ; and an equally interesting change is made in the concluding passages, which are developed so as to form a coda—short, it is true, but sufficient to show that Mozart knew the necessity of this portion, which he constructed so magnificently three weeks afterwards in the 'Jupiter' Symphony, but which it was left for Beethoven to show the full significance and importance of in his No. 2, a dozen years later.

We regret to record the death, at Florence, on December 6, of CONTE GIOVANNI GIGLIUCCI, elder son of the Countess Gigliucci (née Clara Novello), with whom much sympathy is felt by her English friends.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie will deliver two lectures at the Royal Institution on January 19 and 26 at 3 p.m., the subject of his discourses being, 'Latest phases of music,' with musical illustrations.

Mr. T. R. Croger is announced to deliver a course of three lectures, with illustrations, at South Place Institute, Finsbury, on 'The musical instruments used in the modern orchestra.' The lectures will be given on January 15, 22, and 29, at 7.30 p.m.

Messrs. Vert & Sinkins have been appointed managers of the new concert hall (St. Paul's) now being built in Great Portland Street.

Church and Organ Music.

A TRUE POET OF THE CHURCH.

JOHN MASON NEALE.

Very interesting is Mrs. E. A. Towle's biography of this true poet of the church, in the attractive volume recently issued by Messrs. Longmans, entitled 'John Mason Neale, D.D.: A memoir.' His short life—only forty-eight years—was embittered by ecclesiastical strife, but it had a rich fruition in an extensive and remarkable literary output, mostly on subjects connected with the Church. Some of his writings will naturally be forgotten as time goes on: not so his valuable contributions to sacred poetry, those beautiful lyrics by which his name will long be honoured in the churches.

In his schoolboy days Dr. Neale gave abundant promise of his versifying gifts. As an undergraduate at Cambridge he took the Seatonian prize—for the best English poem on a sacred subject—in 1845, and moreover won it for eleven years in succession! One of his closest friends, the Rev. Benjamin Webb, the well-known vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, said that Neale had a 'fatal facility' for writing poetry. It appears that Webb strongly deprecated hymns written in the vernacular! If he 'could not have the old Latin hymns in the Offices of the Church, he would have none at all.' Neale's reply was as sensible as it was crushing. He wrote:

> Why not have English hymns, if we have English prayers? Surely English hymns, if good, are better than none? Depend upon it we shall be acting more upon the general principles of the Church, in making the best of a bad thing—allowing the universal abrogation of Latin to be so—than in saying, if we can't have that, we'll have none.

Neale's genuine love of poetry led him into a region of productiveness in which he was unrivalled—his English translations of Greek and Latin hymns. He was no less skilful in turning English verse into Latin, concerning which Mrs. Towle relates the following interesting anecdote:

> When the Bishop of Salisbury and Keble were compiling a hymn-book, Neale was invited to assist them. He called at Hursley Parsonage, and, after talking with his guest, Keble left the room to search for papers, and was unexpectedly detained. When he returned, Neale observed with a touch of reproach that he had always understood the 'Christian Year' to be entirely original. Keble replied that it most certainly was. 'Then how do you explain this?' and Neale drew forth a Latin version of one of the poems, and placed it before him. Keble, too simple-minded to be suspicious, was confounded, and could only protest in distressed astonishment that he had never seen the original before; but, though relieved, he can hardly have been less surprised when Neale explained that he had taken advantage of his absence to turn the English into Latin.

His biographer, in referring to his wonderful facility in translating from the Greek or Latin into English, says: 'This ease, however, never led him into careless haste; and, in the case of some hymns, he would spend hours and even days in seeking for an English word most faithfully expressing the mind of the writer.' Of his original hymns the best known is 'Art thou weary, art thou languid?' which, like all the beautiful lyrics which came from his pen, is absolutely free from sentimentality, either of thought or diction. As Mrs. Towle says: 'His original hymns have a freshness, and vigour, and animating hopefulness calculated to strengthen and refresh the weak and faint-hearted.' And the same can be said of all the English translations of this sweet singer of the 19th century. No wonder that Sir Henry Baker, when compiling 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' wrote a long letter to Neale begging him 'to gather out of your abundant store such Greek hymns and others as you think most suitable to congregational use.' It is pleasant to find that, 'with the exception of his writings on the Eastern Church, there was probably no part of his literary work that, in retrospect, gave Neale such unmixed pleasure. His hymns not only appealed to the scholar and the student, but they quickened and inspired public and private devotion. Little children learned them by heart; the old and the solitary turned to them for comfort.' The selected list of popular hymns, original and translated, given at the end of this review article, will show how widely Dr. Neale's splendid work in the cause of English hymnology has been appreciated. A high churchman himself, his hymns are sung in churches of all denominations. Could anyone wish for a higher reward than to have provided so rich a contribution to the worship-song of the great congregation?

Dr. Neale, who outlived his friend and brother-poet John Keble by five months, died on August 6, 1866, his own hymn, 'Safe home, safe home, in port!' being sung as his body was carried to its last resting place in East Grinstead churchyard.

We have only touched upon one feature of Dr. Neale's sanctified and useful life. The 300 or more pages which form Mrs. Towle's excellent biography contain much that is of absorbing interest, and constitute a book that should find many readers. So musical are Dr. Neale's verses that one would not be surprised to find that he himself was musically gifted. He wrote: 'I have a zeal for it [music], but not according to knowledge.' He however enjoyed listening to music, especially oratorios, and Handel's in particular. The memoir of this true poet of the church is enriched with a portrait of Dr. Neale and other illustrations, including the facsimile of a letter.

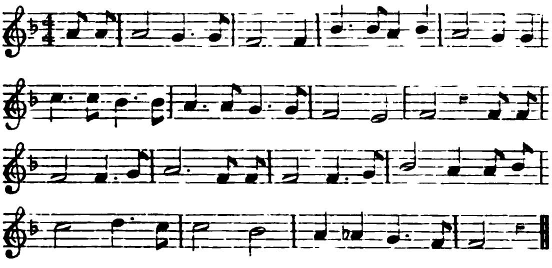
The following is a selected list of Dr. Neale's hymns and translations which have found their way into hymnals of various denominations:

All glory, laud, and honour.
Art thou weary, art thou languid?
Blessed city, heavenly Salem.
Brief life is here our portion.
Christ is made the sure foundation.
Christian, dost thou see them?
Come, take by faith the body of your Lord.
Come, Thou holy Paraclete.
Come, ye thankful, raise the anthem.
Draw nigh and take the body of the Lord.
For thee, O dear, dear country.
Jerusalem the golden.
Laud and honour to the Father.
Let our choir new anthems raise.
Light's abode, celestial Salem.
Now that the daylight fills the sky.
O come, O come, Emmanuel.
O happy band of pilgrims.
O sons and daughters, let us sing!
O wondrous type! O vision fair.
Of the Father's love begotten.
The day is past and over.
The day of resurrection.
The heav'nly word proceeding forth.
The strain upraise of joy and praise.
The world is very evil.
To the name of our Salvation.

'THE SANDS OF TIME ARE SINKING.'

The authoress of this hymn, Mrs. Anne Ross Cousin (née Cundell), died at Edinburgh on December 6, aged eighty-two. Of the lyrics which came from her pen the best known is 'The sands of time are sinking,' which first appeared, as a poem of nineteen stanzas, in the Christian Treasury just half a century ago. It soon became very popular, especially in Scotland, and has found its way into many English hymnals. Another hymn by her has also found acceptance—'O Christ, what burdens bowed Thy head.' Mrs. Cousin was a lady of scholarly tastes and artistic temperament, and in her younger days she was an excellent pianist.

The tune associated with 'The sands of time are sinking' is 'Rutherford,' so named after Samuel Rutherford from whose writings Mrs. Cousin drew her inspiration in writing the poem. 'Rutherford,' however, is of French origin, having been composed by Chrétien Urhan. It originally appeared in 'Chants Chrétiens,' published at Paris in 1834, where it is set to the hymn 'Eternel, O mon Dieu, j'implore ta clémence,' in the following form :



The curious and unexpected A flat in the penultimate bar has the appearance of an excrescence or a misprint, but as it appears in various editions of the book up to (at least) the eighth, issued in 1857, the flattened note must be accepted as the intention of the composer. The English version of the tune, which does not contain the A flat, was made by Dr. Rimbault, and first appeared in 'Psalms and Hymns for Divine Worship,' originally published by Messrs. Nisbet in 1866.

CHRÉTIEN URHAN

The composer of 'Rutherford' was such a remarkable man that a few biographical facts may not be unacceptable. The son of a violinist, Chrétien Urhan began to compose for the violin and pianoforte, his favourite instruments, before he had received any lessons in music. His precocious talent attracted the attention of the Empress Josephine, whereby he became a pupil of Lesueur. He entered the orchestra of the Opéra in 1816 as one of the violas, afterwards becoming one of the first violins, and on Baillot's retirement in 1831 he succeeded to the post of 'first violin-solo.' A brilliant concert performer, not only on the violin, but on the five- and four-stringed viola and the viol d'amour, Urhan had so studied all instruments played with the bow that he could preserve the characteristic quality of tone of each. He had a particular method of tuning, by which he produced varied and striking effects of tone. So highly did Meyerbeer estimate his great gifts that he wrote for him the famous viol d'amour solo in the accompaniment to the tenor air in Act 1 of the 'Huguenots.'

Short in stature and having no personal attractions, Urhan was a musician with a striking personality. He dressed like a clergyman and was regarded, not without reason, as eccentric; but his religion was untainted by bigotry, and he had a kind and charitable heart. As an ascetic he restricted himself to one meal a day, often of bread and radishes, and during the thirty years that he played in the orchestra of the Opéra he never once glanced at the stage, doubtless owing to his religious scruples. Urhan styled all his compositions 'romantic.' He left two string quartets, two quintets for three violas, violoncello, double-bass and drums ad lib.; some pianoforte pieces (two and four hands), and Melodies for one and two voices, including a Romance on two notes only! It should be added that Urhan was for some time organist of the Church of Saint Vincent-de-Paul, Paris, and that he was godfather to Julius Stockhausen, the singer.

THE FRUITION OF A CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL.

The Rev. H. H. Woodward, Precentor of Worcester Cathedral, writes :

> Since your kind account of our Cathedral Choir School in The Musical Times a year ago, you may be interested to know that two of our old choristers—the Rev. E. H. Tupper, curate of Wantage, and the Rev. H. J. Mercer, curate of Woolwich Parish Church, have been appointed Minor Canons of Worcester.
> I think this is the only cathedrals which has trained its own Minor Canons as boys in its own Choir School, and it has occurred to me that you might think the incident worthy of notice in The Musical Times.

Not only do we gladly make this announcement as an encouragement to all cathedral bodies who have their choir school, and as an incentive to other Deans and Chapters who are without this valuable adjunct to the equipment of their cathedrals, but we warmly congratulate Mr. Woodward, the Warden and Bursar, on this latest outcome—not the only one—of his inception, twenty-four years ago, of the Worcester Cathedral Choir School.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

An interesting selection of sacred music was performed in the College Chapel on Sunday evening, December 2, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Cyril B. Rootham. Here is the programme :

ORGAN SOLO—Prelude and Fugue in B minor .. J. S. Bach
Dr. ALAN GRAY.
MOTETT for double chorus (eight parts)—
'The surrender of the soul to the Everlasting Love' Cornelius
CONCERTO in E major, for solo violin, string orchestra, and organ .. .. J. S. Bach
Solo violin .. .. .. Mr. HAYDN INWARDS.
Organ .. .. .. Dr. ALAN GRAY
'VESPERAE DE DOMINICA' (No. 1), for solo voices, chorus, orchestra, and organ .. .. Mozart
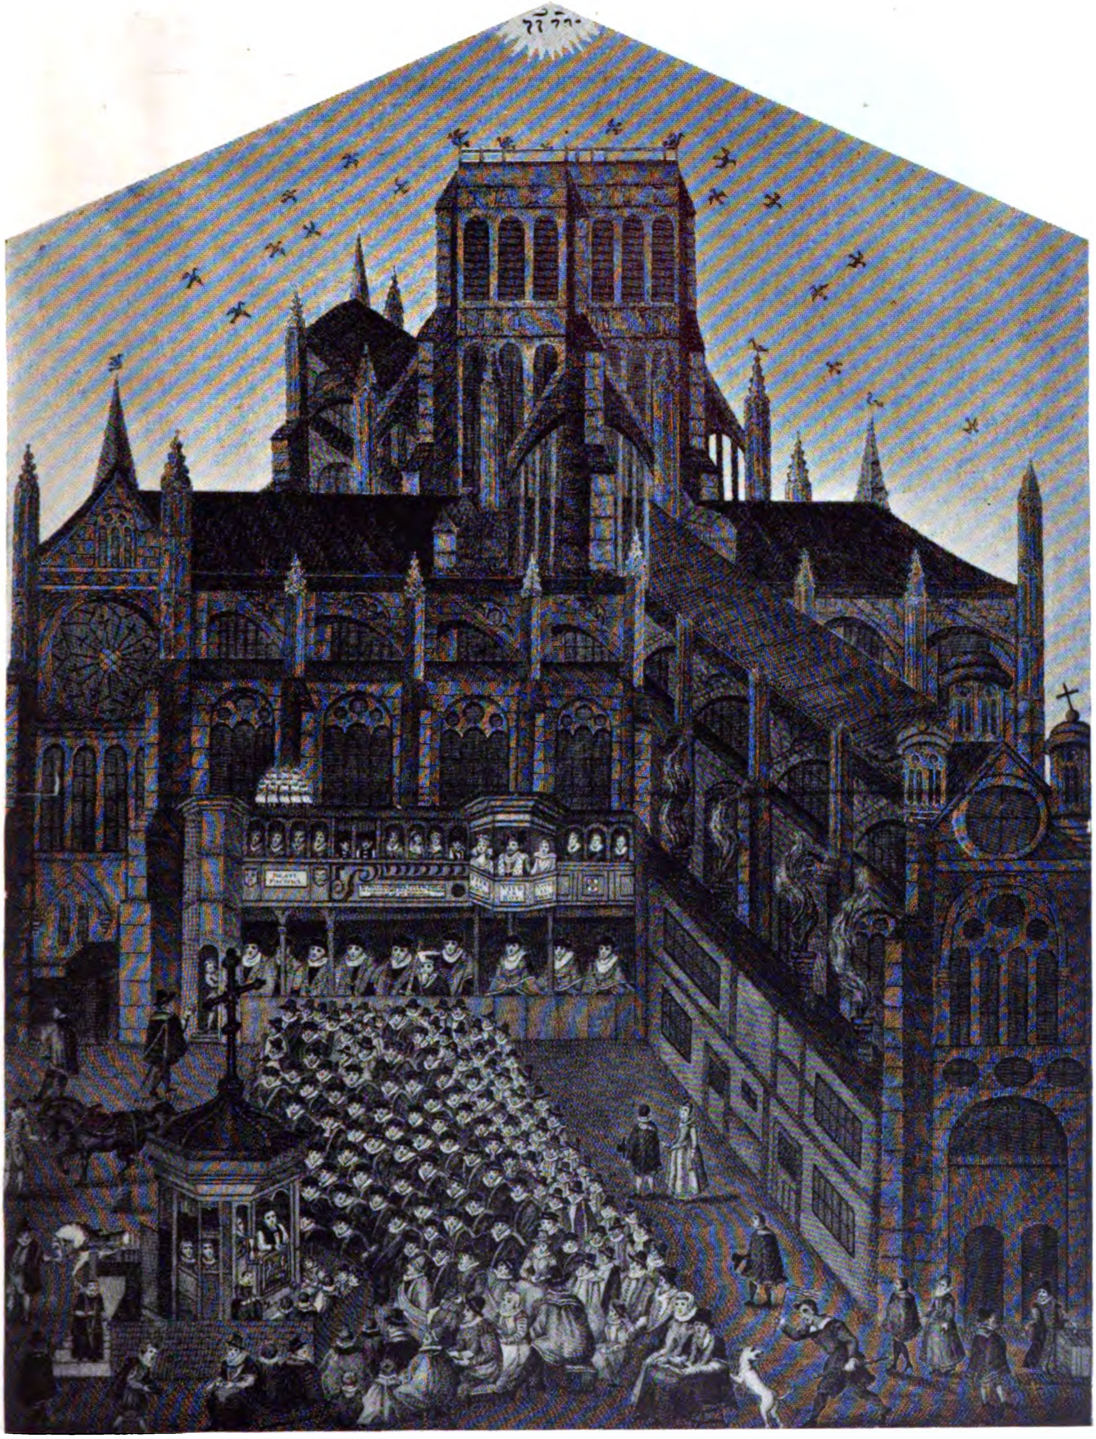
Soloists : The CHAPEL CHORISTERS, Messrs. S. DUNN,
A. THOMPSON, JOSEPH REED and H. HUNT.
At the Organ : Mr. RONALD HURRY.

The programme notes contained the following information regarding the Mozart piece :

> This work is the first of two Sunday Vespers written by Mozart. It was composed in the year 1779, when the composer was twenty-three years of age. It is scored for solo voices, chorus, organ, first and second violins, basses, trumpets and drums. Each of the six movements is complete in itself, and ends with the Doxology; the treatment of the 'Gloria Patri' in each case is distinctive, though it is closely linked with the rest of the movement by being set to the music that forms the principal subject of each Psalm; and it is surprising to note the variety of appropriate and expressive musical renderings of which these words are capable, in the hands of so versatile a composer as Mozart. The whole work is characteristic of Mozart at his best; beautiful melodies, appropriately dramatic treatment of certain words, independent and clear-cut orchestral parts, serving throughout as finely-worked embroidery round the voices—all these features stamp the work as the creation of a great artist. The two 'Vesperae' are practically unknown in England.



ST. PAUL'S CROSS IN THE YEAR 1620.

THE OCCASION OF A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE KING JAMES I. AND HIS QUEEN.

Brahms's 'Requiem' gave sanctified pleasure to a large congregation at St. Paul's Cathedral, on December 4, when the work was performed by the cathedral choir and a full orchestra, under the direction of Sir George Martin, with Mr. Charles Macpherson at the organ. The 'Requiem' was preceded by Sir George Martin's devotional setting of Psalm cxxx. (De profundis) for choir and orchestra. A pleasant surprise was the singing of the Advent Hymn to the time-honoured tune 'Helmsley,' which, heartily joined in by the congregation, proved to be one of the most impressive features of this annual Advent service. On a future occasion Pierson's harmonization of the tune might be discarded, and the old harmonies reverted to; and a fine climax might be secured if the full orchestra, the organ and the voices united their forces in the last verse of Charles Wesley's Advent hymn.

THE CHURCH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

The twelfth annual meeting of this Society was held at St. Peter's (Eaton Square) Mission House, on St. Cecilia's Day. Dr. Walford Davies, who presided, congratulated the members on the high standard of their aims and work, and expressed a hope that his dream of a great combination of players and singers might in time find its expression in frequent renderings in our churches (not concert rooms) of such masterpieces as Bach's church cantatas, Brahms's 'Requiem,' &c. The report stated that the present membership of the Society is 227, of whom 108 are professional and 33 amateur players.

A special orchestral service was held on the same day at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Wilton Road, when Elgar's 'Sursum corda' formed an appropriate prelude to a service which was arranged to illustrate the effective use of the orchestra in worship. T. A. Walmisley's Magnificat in D minor, specially orchestrated for the Society by Dr. Alan Gray, was sung, and the anthem was Dr. G. J. Bennett's 'My God, I love Thee.' The service, conducted by Dr. G. F. Huntley, concluded with Stanford's Te Deum in B flat. The honorary secretary of the Church Orchestral Society is the Hon. Richard Strutt, Rayleigh House, Chelsea.

The Guardian has recently added a new feature to its columns entitled 'Notes on church music,' which will appear from week to week. The 'Notes' are intended to be useful and practical to all those who take part in the services of the churches, and the subject-matter is to be so varied as to include historical, biographical and antiquarian, information, in addition to reviews, organ news, and answers to correspondents. This practical acknowledgment of music in the services of the church by an ecclesiastical journal of such long continuance and high repute as The Guardian is extremely gratifying.

A DEVONSHIRE COMPOSER.

DR. H. J. EDWARDS.

Dr. Henry John Edwards—the production of whose new oratorio is recorded on p. 39—was born at Barnstaple on February 24, 1854. He is the only son of the late Mr. John Edwards, for half-a-century a prominent figure in the musical life of Devonshire, his native county. About sixty years ago Mr. John Edwards founded the Barnstaple Musical Society, of which he remained the conductor until 1886, when he was succeeded by his son, the present holder of that office. The influence and the work of Dr. Edwards and his father have given to North Devon a musical reputation that is most unusual in a country district. Mr. John Edwards was 'chief musician' at Barnstaple Parish Church for forty-five years, and his son has held the organistship of the church since he was thirteen, at which tender age he played at the first North Devon choral festival held at Barnstaple.

His first music lessons were received from his father. He subsequently studied in London under Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, Banister and other masters. In 1876 he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford, followed by the Doctorate in 1885. His oratorio, 'The Ascension,' written as an exercise for his Doctor's degree, was performed with much success at the Sheldonian theatre, and has since been frequently performed in different parts of the country, notably at the North Devon Festival at Ilfracombe and at the Western Counties Festival at Exeter. His other works include the motet 'Praise to the Holiest,' produced at the Hereford Festival, 1891, and the church cantata 'The Epiphany,' in addition to instrumental pieces, church services, anthems, part-songs, songs, &c.

Dr. Edwards is recognized as one of the most accomplished and brilliant pianists in the West of England, and as an organist he occupies a high position. He is a member of the examining staff of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, and he has been signally successful as a teacher. Last year he was appointed organist of the Grand Lodge (Freemasons) of England, by the Most Worshipful Grand Master H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught, to whom his latest work, 'The Risen Lord,' has, by special permission, been dedicated. In addition to the conductorship of the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society, Dr. Edwards has, since 1896, been conductor of the Exeter Oratorio Society, which, under his direction, has more than maintained its high reputation. It is noteworthy that the Barnstaple Society has had only two conductors during the sixty years of its existence—Dr. Edwards and his honoured father. Barnstaple has every reason to be proud of a native musician who possesses the gifts of Dr. H. J. Edwards.

The Indebtedness of Handel to works by other composers: a presentation of evidence. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

[Cambridge, at the University Press, 1906.]

Handel's indebtedness to other composers—and, as the contents of the present volume show, to himself—has been the theme of many writers from the days of Burney onwards. 'The task of singling out the compositions on which he drew most largely, and the labour of publishing them, have been already performed by the late Dr. Friedrich Chrysander, ably followed by Dr. Max Seiffert,' remarks Mr. Taylor in his preface. But by selection from these materials, he has been able to present in a single volume 'a study of the whole subject'; moreover in a convenient form, as under the Handel extracts are printed, bar by bar, the passages in the various writers from which he borrowed, the latter, when requisite, being transposed to facilitate comparison.

The question has often been asked, what led Handel to borrow so freely? He had, it is true, to prepare his operas and oratorios often at a very rapid rate, and this might lead some to think that he did this to gain time. It may, however, be questioned whether picking out certain phrases from other composers, and making them fit in with ideas of his own, would not have cost more time—to say nothing of trouble—than composing a whole movement himself. From some examples of borrowing from Keiser, in the early days before Handel quitted Hamburg, noted by Dr. Max Seiffert and quoted by Mr. Taylor, it would seem to have been his habit almost ab initio, for those borrowings were made in the years 1707 and 1708.

The plan of the book before us is excellent, and the contents are sure to interest musicians. Although there is no need to describe them in detail, some of Mr. Taylor's remarks call for comment, and one or two for criticism. Dr. Chrysander had noted borrowings by Handel from Gottlieb Muffat's 'Componimenti musicali,' but the date of publication of the latter not being definitely established, it was open to doubt as to who was the borrower. Mr. Taylor, however, by describing some entries made by Handel in the Fitzwilliam autograph books, shows, almost beyond a doubt, that he was the culprit.

Mr. Taylor has, of course, much to say about the 'Israel in Egypt' and the disputed borrowings from a Magnificat by Erba and a Te Deum by Urio. Recognized authorities, he tells us, 'are not at one as to whether Handel was appropriating a work by another composer or refurbishing one of his own,' but he adopts the former opinion. The story of Buononcini palming off a madrigal of Lotti's as his own, and his consequent disgrace, is related in full. Handel gave out, amongst other things, a Kerll Canzona as his own, and yet he was not condemned. Why was this? There are all sorts of theories on the matter, but it still remains a mystery. And then, it is indeed curious to find Handel filching not only from this same Lotti, but even from Buononcini himself. Mr. Taylor mentions the borrowing from the former, but according to a note by Bartleman in a volume in the Fitzwilliam Museum, the theme of a song by Buononcini entitled, 'Peno, peno,' is identical with 'Zion now her head shall raise' in 'Judas Maccabæus.' With regard to the Lotti borrowing, we read that it was recognized by Crotch, but the author adds that to it 'notice has not hitherto, as far as I am aware, been publicly called.' The passage in question, and the discovery of it by Crotch, is however given in the series of articles entitled 'Handel's Borrowings,' by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, in THE MUSICAL TIMES in 1901, an interesting contribution to the subject which Mr. Taylor does not mention.

Our author in his Introduction (p. x.), quoting a passage from an article in the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, for 1818 (p. 280), states: 'The article is unsigned,' but that in his copy of the volume—which, by the way, belonged to his grandfather, Richard Mackenzie Bacon, editor of the periodical—'it is headed in manuscript, "W Horsley, Esq."' But we find that the article is signed, and thus: 'Your Constant Reader, C. T.'

The house in St. Martin's Street, being chronicles of the Burney family. By Constance Hill, with illustrations by Ellen G. Hill, and reproductions of portraits, &c. [John Lane.]

A delightful book, not a dull page from cover to cover—such are the pleasant thoughts that arise in one's mind after reading these chronicles of the Burney family. So graphically and naturally is the story told that one seems to be taken into the very midst of that remarkable circle of 18th century folk which included Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, and David Garrick, all friends and guests of the Burneys. Miss Hill takes her readers into Dr. Burney's study, called 'the chaos,' and lets them peep into the room where the genial historian of music is having his wig frizzed, curled and powdered, while Garrick looks on and subjects the hair-dresser to a running fire of criticism. Anon Dr. Johnson comes on the scene, and in answer to a question relating to J. C. Bach's concert, the great lexicographer, with see-sawing motion and a very humorous smile, says: 'Bach, sir? Bach's concert? And pray, sir, who is Bach? Is he a piper?'

The period covered by this fascinating contribution to Burneyiana is from 1774 to 1783, during the time that gifted family resided at Sir Isaac Newton's old house in St. Martin's Street, Leicester Square. While the writer has naturally availed herself of existing Burney literature, she has been fortunate in obtaining new matter, as for instance an interesting letter from Garrick, hitherto unpublished, in which the great actor gives his opinion upon the singing of Gabrielli at Naples in 1764 and the state of Italian music at that time—'all execution, without simplicity or pathos,' he says. There are many references to Pacchierotti, the great singer—'Sweet Pacc,' as the Burney girls often called him—who seems to have set his affections upon Fanny before M. D'Arblay threw himself at her feet. It is not possible within the limits of space to refer to a tithe of the good things contained in these chronicles, nor would it be fair to do so. No book has hitherto furnished such life-like descriptions of the Burney circle. ''Tis a sweet family!' exclaims Mrs. Thrale, and 'Sweet Pacc' rejoins, in his courteous way, 'Sense and wit inhabit here; sensibility has taken up her abode in this house.' The charm of the simple home life at St. Martin's Street is reflected in Miss Hill's happy style, which flows on as pleasantly as a sunlit stream in summer, while the excellent drawings of Miss Ellen G. Hill and the portraits (including that of Dr. Burney, which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES) add to the attractiveness of a volume that forms one of the choicest gift-books of the season. We cordially commend the volume to our readers, and venture to think it will afford them unalloyed pleasure.

The symphony writers since Beethoven. By Felix Weingartner. Translated from the German by Arthur Bles. [W. Reeves.]

Herr Weingartner as a conductor has won well-deserved fame, while his merits as a composer have been duly recognized. He now comes before us as a critic of post-Beethoven symphonists; but he first tells us—and most musicians will agree with him—Wagner's opinion that the ninth Symphony was a 'direct transition' towards the art-work in which all the arts are combined is not altogether justified. Absolute music 'has not lost its right to exist as an absolute art in itself.' Then comes the review of the post-symphonists: Schubert appears as the 'feminine complement' of Beethoven; Mendelssohn was 'clever and elegant'; Schumann, in trying to become a classic, damaged his fundamental nature; so the author runs through the schedule of symphony writers, none of whom, he rightly states, equalled, far less surpassed, Beethoven.

With Berlioz, however, there came a new departure. The French composer worked on 'poetic basis' lines, but 'without injuring the form of the symphony'; on the other hand, Liszt allowed form to be determined by the basis of the music. Herr Weingartner admires Strauss's 'wonderfully powerful "Tod und Verklärung,"' but in that composer's later works he 'breaks away from what I understand by the word music.' And so say many of us! We give here the briefest outline of a book written by a musician thoroughly well acquainted with the works he discusses. The English translation, we regret to say, is by no means above reproach.

Tchaikovsky. By Edwin Evans. (The Master Musicians series.) [J. M. Dent & Co.]

Tchaikovski. By E. Markham Lee. (Bell's miniature series of musicians.) [George Bell & Sons.]

The exhaustive biography of the eminent composer, written by his brother Modeste Tchaikovsky, of which Mrs. Newmarch has furnished an excellent English version, naturally puts the two monographs under notice into the shade. Nevertheless they fully answer their purpose, especially to those who have not long pockets, in giving an outline of Tchaikovsky's remarkable and romantic career, and in describing the works which he composed.

By far the greater part of Mr. Evans's book (139 pages) is devoted to 'Tchaikovsky: the musician,' the remaining fifty-two pages being assigned to biographical matter. Dr. Markham Lee's miniature tome is in the nature of a note-book survey of Tchaikovsky's career, and makes a very readable little volume that goes easily into the pocket. By the way, Dr. Lee adopts the letter 'i' as the final in spelling the composer's name. Both books are illustrated; but the value of the series of which they respectively form a part would be increased, especially for the purpose of reference, were they to contain an appendix giving dates, places, and conductors of first performances of the composers' works in England.

The Bond of Music: an anthology. Edited by Duncan and August Macdougall. [Truslove & Hanson, Ltd.]

This attractive gift-book is sure to meet with eager acceptance. Its wide range of selected passages of prose and poetry from English literature, happily illustrates the story of music's sympathy and power. The thoughts on music of great thinkers, from Anacreon to Ruskin, are here gathered together and set forth in pleasant sequence. A specially interesting feature of this excellent anthology is 'Musick's Duell,' by the 17th century poet Richard Crashaw, and he would be hard to please who could not find something to suit his fancy in these pages. It was a happy thought to frontispiece the volume with a photogravure of Raphael's 'St. Cecilia.' In a future edition a strictly alphabetical index of first lines, in addition to the index of writers now provided, would add to the value of the compilation from a reference point of view.

Quartet for Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and Violoncello in E minor. By William Y. Hurlestone. [Goodwin & Tabb.]

It is always sad to read or hear the music of composers who died young, having, like Schubert, Bizet and Goetz, achieved much and thus having given great promise for the future. The Quartet under notice is a sound, clever work, but it has higher qualities—spontaneity and clearness of utterance. The opening Allegro has strong thematic material. The principal subject in E minor and the second in E flat major will not escape notice. The Andante is based on an expressive theme. The Scherzo is lively, while a bright Finale in the major key, preceded by a minor Lento, based on the principal subject of the opening movement, brings the work to an effective close.

Correspondence.

SIR CHARLES STANFORD ON MUSIC PUBLISHING.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—If you wished your readers to form a sound judgment upon the contents of my speech of November 18, you should, in accordance with the etiquette of the best British journalism, have either printed it in full or referred them to some source where they could see its entire content. This proceeding would have made clear the fact that my speech was an appeal to the publishers, not an attack upon them; and that the note struck was not 'discordant' except in so far as it pointed out how some discords (and there exist many which are essential and even agreeable) can be best resolved. By the omission of the greater portion, which contained the mainspring of my arguments, you have produced the impression that I made a series of wholly unbusinesslike and unpractical requests. How far removed it was from 'reviling' the publishers is proved by the fact that two of their number, personally unknown to me, cordially thanked me for what I said. You challenge, not without some apparent justice, my general statement about Belaïeff's catalogue. Not having it by me, I asked a friend who had it how many pages it contained, and his reply was '210.' I was not made aware that so much of it was index, although anyone would assume that an index would be included in that, as also in my four pages assigned to English work. But even allowing your elimination of sixty-four pages devoted to songs and pianoforte music (both of which were included in my general summary of absolute music), and admitting it at your own figure of twenty-four, the comparison of the publications of one Russian publisher with all the English publishers put together is in the proportion of six to one. If, then, you object to my taking Belaïeff as an example, I shall quote the catalogues of Breitkopf, of Schott and of Simrock, with far worse results for England in comparison. Or I shall quote what one of the leaders of American music told me, when I asked him how the United States fared in this respect: 'The leading publishers of the U.S.A. make a point of publishing a certain amount of high-class orchestral and chamber music and paying the composers for it, if only for the sake of giving dignity and artistic weight to their catalogues.'

I did not, as you imply, ask the publishers to become dispensers of charity or pioneers of philanthropy. I pointed out that the line which all the other great nations of Europe take in a business matter such as this is not likely to be Utopian, for they are no fools in commerce, but that they take it because in the end it is a far-sighted and sound policy to do so, and they have proved their case. What I asked for was not the investment of 'an unlimited capital' in such publications, but of 'some small portion' of the profits (i.e., the interest) derived from works which produce the quickest and largest returns on the capital invested in them.

You say that the remedy rests with the composers themselves and the genius and aptitude which they display. How are they to display it? In manuscript? Two of our rising men produced chamber works which delighted 400 listeners at the Broadwood Concerts last season. Where are they to be found in print? In a foreign country some publishers would have considered it their business to go and hear such works, and if they gained such success as was the case in these two instances, they would be within the reach of all music-lovers at once. Not one of the leading English publishers was in the room. I suppose that you would not deny genius and aptitude to Sir Hubert Parry: a comparison between the list of his chamber music in Grove's Dictionary (as far back as 1880) and that in any English publisher's catalogue will be instructive. Would this be possible in the case of any composer of his calibre in any other country?

Then you say that the remedy lies with the conductors. How are they to get works and repeat them when they are in manuscript? What inducement have they to purchase them when the price of those orchestral compositions which do get into print are prohibitive in comparison with those of foreign publication?

Lastly, you cite the public, who are to learn to believe that native music is worth listening to, when they can only procure a meagre fraction of it to play or to study. And you forget that your strictures upon the public for apathy as regards native music apply almost entirely to western London, and that to the rest of Great Britain and to the many circles of enthusiastic amateurs about the country they do not apply at all. But these circles can get foreign publications easily and cheaply, and the few English works which they can buy are handicapped by their price.

The main point of my contention is that the printing of a few works in England alone will not make the slightest impression. Mr. F. Simrock himself told me that works published in England alone were isolated and stillborn—'todgeschlagen.' All the foreign publishers have one foot in their own country and one elsewhere. Those who are not German have branches in Central Europe: those that are German have branches here in England, where you would have us believe that music of the type they publish does not pay. Why, then, do they come here? If English publishers do not carry out that prime necessity in the event of their building up a list of native high-class absolute music, I know perfectly well that their action would be only philanthropic and foredoomed to failure. On the lines that the publishers of other countries have followed, I cannot see why this policy should not have a success equivalent to theirs.

It was for this policy that I appealed. I 'reviled' no one. None of my unprejudiced listeners or readers will be found to support such a distortion of my attitude in the matter. The leading publishers seemed to think that the support of the leading composers of this country was necessary to the success of their championship of their rights of property. It seems, to say the least, a pity that any of them should resent and allow misrepresentation of the appeal now made to them for a little support to a side of native art which they have admittedly neglected. If the business of Messrs. Agnew (whom you cite), and of their predecessors and colleagues, had been carried on without interest in or sympathy for the pictures of modern classical masters, it is only too probable that the Tate Gallery would not have been required or built.

WAGNER IN AUSTRALIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—In reference to the article on 'Wagner's Music in England' which appeared in your issue of September last, you will be interested to hear that the first performance of Wagner's 'Lohengrin' took place in Melbourne, Victoria, on August 18, 1877.

A local admirer of Wagner wrote to him apprising him of the performance and received an interesting letter in reply, to the effect that he was surprised that his work was given at the Antipodes so soon after the first performance in England.

Yours faithfully,

F. W. D. Moore.

Geelong, Victoria.

M. Alphonse Mustel ably demonstrated at Bechstein Hall on December 18 the remarkable expressive capabilities of the Mustel and Mustel Celesta organs. The pieces played by him furnished full scope for the display of charming varieties of tone, no less than for many beautiful effects of crescendo, diminuendo, &c. Moreover, so responsive is the touch of these instruments that rapid passages can be played upon them with facility and certainty of clearness, which is more than can be said for the ordinary harmonium. An interesting feature of the evening's music was the exhibition of the Maestro piano, a wonderful mechanical instrument which gave forth in life-life fidelity (so to speak) some reproductions of the performances of Messrs. Paderewski, Pachmann and Busoni.

DIAMOND JUBILEE OF THE EXETER ORATORIO SOCIETY.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

In the year 1846 some Exeter music-lovers, enthused by an oratorio performance they had heard in London, formed the Exeter Oratorio Society. Its first meeting, at which twenty-one persons were present, was held at the rooms of Mr. George Risdon, a bass singer at the cathedral. Forty members attended the next gathering, when the entrance fee to the Society was fixed at half-a-crown a head, and the subscription at one shilling a month, afterwards reduced to the sum of eight shillings a year. The first chorus-master was a double-handed executant, a bass singer and double-bass player named Turner, a relative of the great painter of that name, while the life and soul of the new organization was one Michael Rice. A man of humble origin and a self-taught violinist and musician, Mr. Rice had all the qualifications of a vigorous and resolute leader of the band. He always conducted the performances with his fiddle bow, his coign of vantage being a high, baize-covered chair, upon which he sat with a pair of fiddles placed at his feet. When executive difficulties arose, Rice would snatch up one of his violins and triumphantly pilot the band into smooth waters; and should a string break in the course of his impetuous 'pulling the band together,' he would change his fiddle with lightning rapidity. His son afterwards became leader, a post he held until 1880: thus the leadership of the two Rices, father and son, covered a period of thirty-three years.

At the first concert given by the Society, on April 8, 1847, at Congdon's Royal Subscription Rooms, Exeter, the 'Messiah' was performed, and so great was the demand for seats that tickets were sold at a guinea each! Under various conductors the Society steadily kept on its way, though not without financial ups-and-downs (the first treasurer was named Down). In 1869 the 'Creation' was given twice within a fortnight, because on the first occasion a furious gale threatened to lift the roof from the Victoria Hall, and Montem Smith had a narrow escape from being himself unroofed by a slate that fell on the spot where a moment before he had stood. ''Tis an ill wind (or even a boisterous gale) that blows no one any good,' a proverb that proved to be true on this occasion, for at the repetition performance there was 'a bumper house.' In July, 1891, Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed in the open air, in the beautiful grounds of Streatham Hall, the solos being presented in character, and twenty-five prettily clad children sang 'With a laugh as we go round' as they danced round the Maypole. In the following year (1892) 6,000 people attended a performance of 'The Messiah' in a huge temporary hall which had been erected for a political meeting. The foregoing are some of the interesting incidents in the history of this excellent organization.

The diamond jubilee festival of the Exeter Oratorio Society was celebrated at the Victoria Hall on November 27 and 28, with three choral and orchestral concerts, in addition to a new oratorio produced on this eventful occasion. A band and chorus of some 400 performers—which included members of the Western Counties Musical Association (Exeter Branch) and the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society—gave every proof of their earnestness and zeal in the great event which had brought them together. If the sopranos carried off the honours of the choir, the remaining sections of the vocal forces furnished evidence of their good quality, and all were enthusiastic. The band, ably led by Mr. John Pardew and reinforced by some players from London, gave a good account of themselves, the sixteen ladies who played on stringed instruments adding natural grace and refinement to the general effect.

The first concert was devoted to Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' skilfully conducted by Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral. The principal soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Madame Siviter, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, while the subordinate parts were well filled by Miss Maude England, Messrs. Sydney Harper and S. J. Bishop. Miss Lakin received well-deserved commendation for her rendering of 'O rest in the Lord,' and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies idealized the part of the Prophet, singing without book and infusing all that is dramatically good into the important music assigned to him. Needless to say that in such familiar strains—given to the world concurrently with the birth of this Society—the choir found full scope for their artistic zeal and, as has been well said, they came off with flying colours. In so doing they reflected credit on the honorary chorus-master, Mr. F. J. Shapcott, who has so skilfully discharged the duties of this important office for the past eleven years.

Around Dr. Edwards's new oratorio 'The Risen Lord'—successfully produced on the afternoon of November 28—did public interest in what was done chiefly gather. This was entirely natural. The composer is a Devonian by birth and long residence, as well as by large and useful work in a considerable social centre. With a population not the least clannish in these kingdoms, and taking justifiable pride in the story of their fair county, the fact that Dr. Edwards intended to produce a work which might recall to public memory by no means undistinguished achievements in the past was, perhaps, more certain to stimulate sympathy and secure support than anything else could have been. None the less on this account can we overlook another consideration, also of potential importance. Dr. Edwards is the conductor of the Society in honour of whose diamond jubilee the festival was set on foot, and one of the two local musicians to whose skill and care the performances were entrusted. Here, without searching for more, are reasons sufficient to explain the solicitude and hearty desire of success which started 'The Risen Lord' upon its career.

The author and compiler of the libretto, Mr. Joseph Bennett, long ago marked the events of the time between the Resurrection and the Ascension as supplying excellent material for an oratorio. Indeed, he still wonders why, generations before, his predecessors did not turn the matter to account. There is here a choice of scenes so varied in character, so rich in changeful expression, so picturesque and pathetic that, but for their long neglect, one would account them irresistible. Unlike some others, Dr. Edwards saw their value at once, took kindly to them, and accepted four, viz., the scene at the Sepulchre on the Resurrection morning; that on the road to Emmaus; that, including the miracle of the fishes, on the Lake of Gennesaret; and the final scene of the Ascension. These events are so treated as to preserve as many as possible of the scriptural passages; the links connecting these together taking the form, for the most part, of free, unrhymed verse, with here and there, after the manner of Bach and Mendelssohn, a rhymed chorale. The form is largely familiar, but the composer did not run away from it on that account. Apparently the cry 'conventional,' always supposed to convey a crushing argument, has no terrors for him; which is well—very well.

Determining the nature and form of the music, Dr. Edwards was careful to avoid a clashing of styles which, so to speak, do not synchronize. The general plan largely agrees in this respect with the fashion of the period to which the libretto, in great measure, belongs. Yet the rigid division into 'numbers' that marks an earlier observance is not here submitted to, though, on the other hand, the composer by no means disdains a 'full close' at the end of a section. This implies, of course, that he reserves to himself full liberty of dealing with sections as each may seem to require, instead of conforming them to a general law which may not suit particular cases. In like manner there is no obligation to avoid full development wherever a sense of effect demands it, nor any necessity to make complications with recurring themes, though these enter into the structure of the work and therein play a modest part. This reasonable and common-sense arrangement, with its mild blending of the useful in new and old, speaks much, as we think, for the composer's judgment and, let us add, something for his courage. Matthew Arnold's 'sweet reasonableness' is not greatly in vogue just now, as far as concerns music. If it be asked in what the composer's art can claim to be distinctive, a reply is easy. We find the 'what' in its prevailing harmonic method. For example, the sequence of chords is by no means easily anticipated. Frequent surprises give a fillip to attention, and keep interest on the stretch. Especially is this the case in the cadences, where the ordinary procession of subdominant, dominant, tonic, is frequently eluded, the composer getting home through a plagal cadence, or, often, by passing to the tonic major from its relative minor. The effect is sometimes archaic, but agrees well with the subject and the demands of the verbal text. Making passing mention of the fact that the general character of the music is now and then relieved by fugal episodes, we may speak of the orchestral part of the score, which is not the least surprising in the ensemble, so full is it of fancy such as never, by excess of complication, becomes obscure, or in any respect unbeautiful. In the Lake scene there is a long and charming barcarolle, which might well be used as an independent piece. Not a few of the choral portions make a clear mark, while the vocal solos are always grateful and appropriate. The part for the Lord is one of sustained dignity. All met with justice at the hands of Madame Emily Squire, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. S. J. Bishop. The composer conducted, and at the end was vociferously applauded. This is not an oratorio to be overlooked.

'The Risen Lord' was preceded by Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' (conducted by Dr. Wood), and the 'Meistersinger' overture concluded a memorable concert in the history of the Society.

The concert on the evening of the second and last day—November 28—was of a miscellaneous character. Here is the programme:

Dramatic Cantata ..	The spectre's bride	Dvorák.
Prelude	Die Meistersinger	Wagner.
Three Elizabethan Pastorals	An Idyll Amongst the willows The morris dance	A. Herbert Brewer.
	Mr. John Coates.
Epilogue ..	Britons, alert! (Caractacus)	Elgar.
	The National Anthem.

Detailed criticism of this concert is unnecessary. The choir again did themselves credit, and Mr. John Coates repeated his Hereford success in the trio of Elizabethan Pastorals composed by Dr. Brewer. Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe rendered efficient service at the organ at all the concerts.

In conclusion, some names must be mentioned of those who so wholeheartedly entered into the work of this Diamond Jubilee Festival, and to whom full acknowledgment is due for the efficient services they rendered on this interesting occasion. First and foremost, Dr. H. J. Edwards, who has held with distinction the conductorship of the Society since 1896, and to him reference is made and his portrait given on page 31. Dr. Edwards had an efficient colleague in Dr. Wood, whose experience and geniality made him a valuable asset in the festival proceedings. And then all honour to the Executive—the indefatigable President, Mr. H. M. Imbert-Terry, D.L.; the Hon. Secretary, Mr. W. C. Knill; the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. C. J. Ross; and the other members of the Committee for their untiring zeal in the cause of music in the 'Ever faithful city' of Exeter.

SPANISH MUSIC.

The Rev. Henry Cart took this little-known subject as the theme of his lecture delivered at the Musical Association on December 11.

The lecturer began his discourse by referring to the great difficulty in obtaining any information about Spanish music in this country. Not only were the Spaniards a people unto themselves, but both their character and their country keep them apart from other nations. San Isidoro is the leader of the early Spanish School of Church Music. Alphonso the Wise, King of Castile and Aragon, was a great patron of music and the sister arts, as was also Don Sancho, who belonged to the end of the 13th century. The golden age of Spanish music, however, commences with Ramis de Pareja in 1440. The famous Queen Isabella, la Catolica, had a whole body of musicians in her service, and she encouraged both the sacred and secular composers of her time. Juan del Encina, the real founder of the secular theatre in Spain, was a priest. Tapia was remarkable for founding a Conservatoire at Naples, to obtain money for which he begged from door to door. Morales is well known. Guerrero was also a distinguished musician, and had as a constant patron the great emperor Charles V. Cabezon was a great organist, but nearly all his compositions have disappeared. Victoria is, again, a familiar name; he may be considered the most characteristic of all the great Spanish composers. Salinas, though blind nearly from birth, was a remarkable organist, and became professor of music at the University of Salamanca, where he had been a student. Cerone, who wrote in Spanish that stupendously long treatise 'El Melopeo,' was not a Spaniard, but an Italian, and therefore does not come into the picture. Cervantes, Lope de Vega, and Calderon, by their marvellous writings, did much to encourage and establish the secular school of music. A cleverly-written pamphlet by Señor Cecilio de Roda discusses the question of music in Spain in the time of Don Quixote. Another work entitled 'Hommage à Calderon,' published at Madrid in 1881, gives some curious and interesting information about music and musicians of the 17th century.

Mr. Cart, after reading extracts from the writers just named, then went on to say that music in Spain has fallen to a low level, but there are many encouraging signs of a healthy revival. Italian opera came in with the Bourbons, and still holds so firm a sway as to push aside all original native compositions. Musical criticism is in a parlous state; the services of the same critic are utilised for a bull-fight, an opera, or a concert; the only good critic is Señor de Roda. The gipsy dances of Spain are the oldest and most characteristic, while the songs sung even to-day by nurses to children are based on the old Gregorian tones, and in some cases these, with peculiar rhythmic additions, become dances. Of present-day composers Chapi and Breton are well-known and to Spain we owe Manuel Garcia and his daughter Madame Malibran, as well as Señor Sarasate. As men who have worked well for the cause of music in their country there must be mentioned Eslava and Fuertes.

The interest of the lecture was enhanced by the musical illustrations. Of these a String quartet in B minor, composed by Jean Chrysostome de Arriaga (1808-28) when he was sixteen, had never before been heard in this country. Two Trios by Señor Arbos, based on dance measures and skilfully treated, were also played, the executants being Señor Arbos, Señor Rubio, Señor Sobrino, Messrs. Frank Bridge and Thomas Morris.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

Madame Liza Lehmann worthily occupies so esteemed a position among lady composers that great interest pertained to the first performance in London of an operatic version of Goldsmith's play 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' for which she had been commissioned to write the music. After a preliminary trial in Manchester (noticed in The Musical Times of December last, p. 837), the work was presented to a London audience on December 12, at the Prince of Wales Theatre. The music itself is graceful and refined, and is written with that attention to the requirements of the vocalist that so pleasantly characterizes this lady's vocal works.

In the first act are a merry duet 'If fairies gave you a wish,' sung by Olivia and Sophia; a light-hearted 'Blackbird song' for the latter character; and a sympathetic ditty for the Vicar 'Though fortune turn her wheel.' To the Vicar is also assigned Moore's ballad 'Drink to me only with thine eyes,' with which, somewhat oddly enough, he reproves Squire Thornhill's rather free sentiments, and there is a charming quintet, one of the best numbers of the work. The second act contains a captivating song for Olivia 'My heart was at rest'; a merry duet between Burchell and Sophia, 'If you want to be quick, be slow': a humorous setting of Goldsmith's 'Mad dog' for the Vicar, and the old ballad 'Come, lads and lasses' for the harvesters. The most notable numbers in the third act are a duet between the Vicar and Olivia, the inclusion of the old song 'It was a lover and his lass,' and a setting of 'When lovely woman stoops to folly' in slow waltz rhythm.

The lyrics were written by the practised pen of Mr. Laurence Hausman, and they were delivered with admirable emphasis by Mr. David Bispham as the Vicar, Miss Isabel Jay and Miss Edith Clegg, who respectively impersonated Olivia and Sophia, and by Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Richard Temple, who severally appeared as Squire Thornhill and Mr. Burchell. For the sake of completeness it should be added that the characters of Mrs. Primrose, Moses, Jenkinson and Farmer Williams were sustained respectively by Mrs. Theodore Wright and Messrs. Arthur Eldred, Charles Lander and Powis Pinder. The ensemble reflected great credit upon Mr. Hamish MacCunn, who conducted the opera, and upon Mr. Richard Temple, the stage manager.

THE FOLK-SONG SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Folk-song Society was held at the Royal Academy of Music on December 6, Sir Ernest Clarke in the chair. The report showed a most remarkable increase in membership and activity of the Society during the past year.

In the course of the business part of the meeting two prominent collectors earnestly urged that the Society should lose no opportunity of making clear its position as regards the meaning of the word 'Folk-song,' seeing that this (an awkward, borrowed term at best) is understood and used by many persons to denote national or popular music generally, whether by known or unknown composers. It is certainly to be regretted that there is no satisfactory word to apply to those primitive and communal ballads and airs which, in every country, have been produced by illiterate people; those tunes which, artlessly coloured and transmitted orally amongst themselves for centuries, remain unknown till the collector chances to seek for and secure them. The term 'traditional' would seem on the whole the best to apply to these survivals, and it is for the purpose of collecting such songs exclusively that the Folk-song Society exists. Dr. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Cecil Sharp, Sir Charles Stanford, Mr. W. H. Hadow and others took part in the discussion.

This was followed by an interesting exhibition of phonographic records of songs collected in Lincolnshire by Mr. Percy Grainger, who demonstrated the value of a recording-instrument for the purpose of accurately noting peculiarities of rhythm, intonation, expression, speed and dialect in the singing of country people. One ballad called 'The six Dukes' was of special interest owing to the beauty of both words and tune, but above all for the fact that it evidently relates the history of William Duke of Suffolk, murdered in 1450, and closely connected with Lincolnshire, in which county this ballad has recently been rescued.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

For the winter term operatic performances were chosen the Spinning Scene from the second act of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' and the third and fourth acts of Verdi's 'Falstaff,' performed at Tenterden Street on December 12. Criticism is not called for on these occasions, as the committee of management expressly state that these attempts are to be regarded as part of the educational course; but it may be said in Wagner's opera Miss Josephine Ottlee as Senta and Miss Dorothy Webb as Mary showed musical intelligence, and that the chorus was neatly rendered. The excerpts from 'Falstaff' must have provided the operatic class excellent practice, and proofs of painstaking rehearsal were manifested by the principal exponents—the Misses Mary Fielding, Dorothy Webb, Aileen Hodgson and Margaret Wilton, and Messrs. John Bardsley, Thomas Gibbs, Cecil Pearson, Musgrove Wright and David Evans. The instrumental portion was played by Miss Mary Burgess and Mr. Benjamin Dale, the former at the pianoforte, the latter at the organ, and Mr. Edgardo Lèvi conducted.

An orchestral concert, conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, took place on December 14 at Queen's Hall, when the most important student work was a Symphonic scherzo by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, a brisk, breezy, exhilarating composition, built up with vivacious themes and brightly scored. The other novelties were two songs respectively entitled 'Longing' and a 'Viking's war-song,' which were effectively sung by Mr. David Evans. The former song is graceful and refined, but the latter, breathing martial ardour, is a fine manly song that stirs the pulse. The composer is Mr. Hubert Bath, and the applause was so great that he had to leave his kettle-drums, which he had been playing in the orchestra, and come down to the front of the platform to bow his acknowledgments. Miss Grace Hazelhurst, gifted with a rich contralto voice, and Miss Aileen Hodgson, the possessor of a fine soprano voice, sang with admirable effect, Miss Juliet Capron and Mr. John Mundy played respectively the violin and violoncello in a manner that attested to well-trained talent, and Mr. Sydney Rosenbloom and Miss Dorothy Grinstead showed much promise as pianists.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music:—Sainton-Dolby Prize (contraltos) to Edith Kirk (Leicester); Bonamy Dobree Prize (violoncello playing) to Edith J. Evans (London); R.A.M. Club Prize (organ playing) to Montague F. Phillips (London); Rutson Memorial Prizes (sopranos) to Ida Kahn (London), (tenors) to Hubert Baker (Kirby Misperton); and Westmorland Scholarship (vocalists) to F. Percival Driver (Leicester).

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Two novelties, each of decided merit, were produced at the orchestral concert given on December 12, under the direction of Dr. W. H. Cummings, at the City of London School. The first was a manuscript overture by Mr. W. E. Lawrence, by whom the work was conducted. The thematic material is not strong, but it is cleverly woven, and forms a homogeneous composition of pleasing character. The form and instrumentation are modern, but not aggressively so, and eccentricity and noisiness are pleasantly absent. The other novelty was the first movement of a Pianoforte concerto in C minor (manuscript) by Miss Ethel Scarborough, the solo part of which was played with notable firmness of touch and executive fluency by the composer. The movement follows long accepted form, and the pianoforte part is prominent, but pleasantly so, throughout. The principal themes are melodious, significant, and well contrasted, their treatment is rational and interesting, the scoring is effective, and the performance left a desire to hear the remainder of the work. Miss Doris Cloud showed much promise, but some doubtful intonation, in Max Bruch's Violin concerto in D minor, and Mr. Wallace Anderson and Miss Eva Colton sang, both possessing voices which should repay further training.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

For several reasons particular interest attaches to the concerts given under the auspices of the Royal College of Music Patron's Fund, not the least being that they supply opportunities for any hidden genius to make himself (or herself) known. Hitherto the successful candidates for recognition have indicated that with a few exceptions all our young talent is being trained at one of the three London great music schools. This has its satisfactory side, but it negatives a prevalent idea that geniuses are languishing in our hedgerows. There were eleven composers, all under forty years of age, represented at the seventh concert held on November 27 at Bechstein Hall, and of these seven were alumni of the Royal College, the remaining quartet of composers being students (or ex-students) of the Royal Academy of Music, the Guildhall School of Music and the Birmingham School of Music, and one was avowedly self-taught.

Mr. Dan Boyes, the self-taught composer, contributed settings of Christina Rossetti's lyrics, 'When I am dead' and 'Gone were but the winter.' It may be concluded from the text chosen that Mr. Boyes is youthful; he certainly shares the present craze of our budding young composers for pessimistical and harrowing subjects. The music is thoroughly modern in character, chromatically harmonized, and indicates much talent. Melancholy interest attached to the production of a cycle entitled 'Baby songs,' by the late W. Y. Hurlstone. Unpretentious in character, the music of these songs shows the 'touch of a vanished hand'—one that musicians had learned to esteem. All the above, and two clever songs severally entitled 'Night' and 'Invocation,' by Mr. Ernest B. Farrar, were beautifully sung by Miss Phyllis Lett, a lady who is gifted with a voice having much affinity in tone-colour with that of Miss Muriel Foster. Miss Bessie Cartwright gave a charming rendering of two dainty songs respectively named 'Talk to my heart, oh winds,' and 'As o'er her loom the Lesbian maid,' composed by Mr. Thomas Morris, who has had the courage to write the accompaniments for wind instruments—flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn. The vocal element in the programme was completed by three other songs, 'The sea hath its pearls' and 'O fair, and sweet, and holy,' by Mr. R. Chignell, and 'A Summer song,' by Mr. A. Wall. All these were carefully interpreted by Mr. Chignell, but none of them can be said to possess distinction.

Of the instrumental music the most satisfactory was a Prelude and Double-fugue in E for two pianofortes by Mr. Julius A. Harrison, a composer who comes from the Birmingham School of Music, on which institution he reflects much credit, for his work is strong, manly and intellectual. He is also an excellent pianist, as evidenced by the interpretation of his work, with the co-operation of Mr. Arthur Cooke. Six Preludes for the pianoforte by Mr. Felix Swinstead proved brief sketches of the modern impressionist school. More satisfactory were a Pianoforte quintet in E by Mr. Joseph Speaight, and a Scherzo-Fantasia in D minor for string quartet by Mr. H. Gilson, both well-written and melodious compositions, but devoid of pronounced originality.

It may be added that in fulfilment of one of the clauses of the Patron's Fund, grants have been made to Miss Phyllis Lett for the purposes of further study; to Mr. Edmund Phillip, for study abroad; to Mr. G. von Holst, towards the expenses of publishing his cantata 'King Estmere'; and to Mr. F. Tapp, for the cost of copying band parts.

London Concerts and Recitals.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

That the remarkable popularity of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy is fully maintained was proved in a very obvious manner by the large audience that assembled at the Royal Albert Hall on November 29, when the work was sung by the Royal Choral Society, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge. Those who attended the concert heard an excellent interpretation of the characteristic music, for it is so familiar to the choir that they can devote the whole of their attention to the various nuances with which the work abounds. Owing to the conditions of the performance the finest effects were obtained in the more massive choruses, but where lightness and delicacy were required it was forthcoming with entrancing combination of softness and rich volume of choral tone. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Dalton Baker, who fully sustained their reputation. Mr. H. L. Balfour presided with his usual skill and good judgment at the organ.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

In our last issue we chronicled the recent performance of 'Everyman' (H. Walford Davies) and 'The Bells' (Holbrooke) given by this Society, and now, within the space of a few weeks, we have to notice their first performance of 'The Kingdom' (Elgar) at Queen's Hall on December 10. Only assiduous rehearsal and ability to assimilate new music quickly could have successfully accomplished this feat. The performance was a highly creditable one to the choir. Increased familiarity will no doubt lead to greater refinement and delicacy and, it may be hoped, to more warmth of colour, but even as it was the technique of the performance afforded ample scope for praise. Apparently no trainer has yet discovered the means by which a more powerful and resonant tone can be developed from London basses. Notwithstanding this lack of sonority some fine climaxes were secured: notably, that at the end of the first section, at the words 'O ye priests.' The highly dramatic passage in the section entitled 'In Solomon's porch,' with its vivid and exciting semiquaver figure in the accompaniment, was also well sung, although it was taken, as were other of the Allegro movements, rather too fast. The orchestra was not the best feature of the performance. The prelude was cold and stiff, and therefore failed to move hearers. On the other hand some of the accompaniments to the solos were well subordinated. Miss Gleeson-White was to have sung, but owing to indisposition she was unable to appear, and her place was taken at short notice by Miss Norah Newport, who showed excellent musicianship as well as an expressive style. Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Dalton Baker were the other soloists, and all sang with distinction. The soprano solo in 'The Arrest' was again a striking feature, and the highly elaborated concerted music in the last section, 'The upper room,' was often deeply impressive.

The setting of the Lord's Prayer at the end still awaits interpretation. We feel convinced that when a conductor can find time to give sufficient attention to this original passage, and a choir can be brought to grasp its moods, a fine and deep expression will be realised.

We may hope that all this and much more is possible with 'The Kingdom' when its inspirations have become familiar. Meanwhile, we must be grateful to Mr. Arthur Fagge, the industrious conductor of this useful Society, for giving us the opportunity of gaining further acquaintance with this work.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The programmes of the Saturday afternoon symphony concerts conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood at Queen's Hall could scarely be surpassed for eclectic combination of the best in old and modern music. On December 1 the selection consisted of the Theme, Variations and Polonaise from Tchaikovsky's Suite No. 3 in G, Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Mozart's Clavier concerto in E flat and César Franck's symphonic poem for pianoforte and orchestra, 'Les Djinns.' The pianist in the two last-named works was M. Raoul Pugno, whose interpretations of Mozart's music are always delightful.

The concert on December 15 was honoured by the presence of the Queen and Princess Victoria, and was further distinguished by Miss Johanne Stockmarr's expressive and brilliant playing in Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto No. 2, in G. This work is so little known in England that a few words concerning it may be permitted. It was produced by Anton Rubinstein on May 18, 1882, at the initial symphony concert in the Exhibition of Art and Industry at St. Petersburg, and with pronounced success. It comprises the usual three distinct movements, but no break is made between the second and third. The first section is somewhat over-developed, but its themes are vigorous and melodious, and the solo part is effective. The Andante is a dreamy reverie of poetical character, and the Finale is extremely gay and robust. The other pieces in the programme were the same composer's Symphonie Pathétique, No. 6; the overture to Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel,' and 'Siegfried's journey to the Rhine,' from Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung.'

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The third concert of this season's series was given at the Queen's Hall on December 3. The chief items of the programme were the 'Dante' symphony (Liszt), the 'Enigma' variations (Elgar), and the symphonic poem 'Till Eulenspiegel' (Strauss). The first-named work is not often heard, and it is not hazardous to foretell that with all its merits it is not likely to gain in public favour. The first movement, with all its terrific turbulence, certainly arrests attention, but the second movement does not atone for its dreary length by the inherent beauty of its themes and their treatment. The last movement affords occasional thrills which are assisted by a female-voice choir, consisting on this occasion of about fifty students from the Royal Academy of Music. The performance was altogether a fine one, and the same praise may be bestowed on the interpretations of the variations and the symphonic poem. Mr. Charles W. Clark displayed fine vocal style in Marschner's 'An jenem Tag,' and Weber's 'Où donc cacher la honte.'

At the fourth concert, given on December 17, which was attended by the Queen, Smetana's effective overture to 'Die verkaufte Braut,' an opera to be revived soon in London, and two movements from the 'Romeo and Juliet' (Berlioz) symphony were items. Much interest was taken in the performance of Donald Francis Tovey's Pianoforte concerto in A major, which was finely played by the composer. The music has considerable charm and exhibits scholarly attainments. A magnificent performance of Schubert's great Symphony in C concluded the concert. Londoners are supremely fortunate in having the opportunity of hearing this magnificent orchestra under Dr. Richter.

MR. ALBERT SPALDING'S CONCERTS.

The four orchestral concerts given by the young American violinist Mr. Albert Spalding, at Queen's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, were concluded on December 14. On that occasion the concert-giver was heard in Mendelssohn's concerto and Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction and rondo capriccioso,' playing with refinement and earnestness full of promise for the player's artistic future. No novelties were included in this programme, but, 'in accordance with several requests,' Mr. Herbert Bedford's 'Symphonic interlude' originally produced at the first concert was repeated, and excellent interpretations were secured of Richard Strauss's tone-poem 'Don Juan' and Mr. Landon Ronald's scena 'Adonaïs,' the vocal part of the latter being sung by Madame Ella Russell.

At the previous concert on November 28 there was given the first performance of an 'Overture to a comedy' (MS.) by Mr. Balfour Gardiner. This proved gay and spirited enough to be an overture to the 'Merry wives of Windsor.' The first theme in particular chatters along with busy consequence, and the brightness, vivacity and verve of the music are maintained with an exhilarating effect that resulted in hearty applause and a call for the composer. On this evening Mr. Spalding was the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, giving also the initial performance of a graceful 'Cantilene' for violin by M. Bemberg, and Mr. Landon Ronald achieved, through the medium of the London Symphony Orchestra, an impressive interpretation of Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E minor (No. 5).

An 'evening of British music' was given on December 7 by the Concertgoers' Club at the Langham Hotel, when Mr. Hamilton Harty's vivacious and interesting Pianoforte quintet in F minor was excellently rendered by the composer and Messrs. J. Saunders, H. W. Warner and E. Yonge. Some songs, &c., composed by Mr. Harty, were also sung, one of which, entitled 'Lane o' the thrushes,' is a gem of modern vocal art. These were beautifully interpreted by Madame Agnes Nicholls; and others, particularly one entitled 'Phantoms,' by Mr. Cecil Engelhart, were charmingly rendered by Miss Sarah Silvers. Miss Irene Scharrer gave an excellent rendering of a Polonaise by Mr. Felix Swinstead, and Mr. J. Saunders introduced two musicianly violin solos by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke.

Herr Sandor Raab, who made his first appearance in London at Bechstein Hall on December 4, is a Hungarian pianist who possesses the excitable vitality of his countrymen. He has a technique that enables him to give full expression to his emotional feelings, and he is manifestly sincere. His renderings of soft passages were delightfully sympathetic and crisp, but those of vigorous character were often exaggerated.

Miss Irene Scharrer gave a pianoforte recital at Æolian Hall on December 4, which she began with the Variations which form the three last movements of Mr. Benjamin J. Dale's Sonata in D minor, and secured the first-prize offered last summer by Mr. Mark Hambourg for the best concert-room piece. They are of great executive difficulty, but the clever young pianist, who is only eighteen, played them with apparent ease and most brilliantly.

At his recital on December 5, at Bechstein Hall, M. Maurel sang the 'Chanson du Grain' from Mr. De Lara's latest opera 'Sanga,' produced last year at Nice. The song is very picturesque and finishes with a stirring climax, and so delighted the audience that it was repeated. The composer accompanied at the pianoforte. Mention is also due of Signor Caffetto, a tenor with a fine voice, of whom we should hear more.

At Mr. Geoffrey Besant's vocal recital at Steinway Hall on December 5 was heard, for the first time, a clever Pianoforte quintet in E (Op. 17) by Dr. Percy Buck, which was admirably performed by the composer and the John Saunders Quartet.

Miss Ethel Attwood's pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on November 28, was specially interesting by the production of a Pianoforte trio, by Mr. Richard Walthew, which proved to be a melodious and tersely written composition. The work was played by Miss Attwood, Miss Ethel Marsh and Mr. C. A. Crabbe. Two manuscript compositions for the pianoforte were performed—an 'Elevation' and 'Bourrée,' by Mr. J. H. Moore. A Novelette in A flat for two pianofortes, by Mr. Sveinbjornsson, also proved attractive; it was brightly rendered by the concert-giver and the composer.

Music in London Suburbs.

The annual concert given by the Acton Choral Society took place on December 6 at the Public Baths, Acton, under the direction of Mr. T. King Holtham. The programme included Cowen's cantata, 'The rose maiden,' as well as several part-songs, and instrumental selections. Miss Edith Blockley, Miss Maude Clough, Mr. Arthur Parsons and Mr. J. Herbert Marks were the soloists.

Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts I. and II.) was efficiently performed in the Bermondsey Town Hall on December 6. The soloists were Miss Bessie Cartwright, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Bertram Mills. Dr. J. E. Borland conducted.

The Walthamstow Choral Union gave a performance of Cowen's cantata 'The sleeping beauty' on December 6 in the large hall of the Baths. The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Woodall, Madame Adeline Vaudrey, Mr. Herbert Emlyn and Mr. Charles Tilbury. Mr. John Evans was the conductor.

'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed by the Streatham Hill Choral Society at Streatham Hall on December 11, under the direction of Mr. Edwin J. Quance, before a large audience. The choir numbered 140 voices, and the professional orchestra (leader Mr. T. H. Morrison) consisted of forty performers. Great care had been expended on the preparation of the work, and the performance was an excellent one, the choir singing with great intelligence. The principal soloists were Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Fred B. Ranalow.

A performance of the 'Creation' (Parts I. and II.) was given before a crowded audience by the East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society, in the New Lecture Hall, East Finchley, on December 13, the solo vocalists being Miss Alice Motterway, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. George R. Ceiley was the conductor.

The Lewisham Choral Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' in the Court Hill Schools on December 13. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Charles Copland, and Mr. Frank Idle conducted.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' at the Crystal Palace on December 15. The solo vocalists were Miss Esta D'Argo, Mr. Ernest Pike and Mr. F. Ranalow. The latter artist, who sang at two hours' notice in place of Mr. Harry Dearth —who was too unwell to attend—deserves particular mention for the able manner in which he fulfilled the duties thus suddenly imposed upon him. The choir sang well, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society opened its seventeenth season on December 18 with a programme in which Handel's 'Alexander's Feast' occupied the principal place. The revival of this fine old work, which has not been given in Richmond within living memory, was entirely successful. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Mr. Bertram Mills, and Mr. Seaton, who undertook the tenor solos at short notice. The choir appeared to enjoy their part in the work, and gave 'Let old Timotheus yield the prize' and the closing chorus with great spirit. The programme included Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Benet's madrigal 'All creatures now are merry minded,' and Weber's overture to 'Preciosa.' Dr. Jolley conducted.

The Stroud Green Choral Association opened its second season on December 17 at Hanley Hall, Crouch Hill, when Parry's 'Pied piper' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were performed, the choir imparting the right spirit, especially in the former work. The solo vocalists were Mr. Arthur Walenn and Mr. Wilfrid Laurence, and Miss Norah Shears played two pianoforte pieces successfully. Mr. H. J. Timothy was the conductor.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Philharmonic Society's second concert of the season on November 23 was devoted to 'Israel in Egypt,' the soloists being Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Daisy Creeny, and Mr. William Green. The choruses were very well sung, and the work as a whole received an adequate rendering.

The City Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert on November 28 in the Ulster Hall. Selections from Barnby's 'Rebekah' and Cowen's 'Heroes' song were included in the programme. Madame Albu, Mr. Alfred J. Long and Herr Josef Claus sang various songs.

Mischa Elman, under the Philharmonic Society's auspices, gave a violin recital on November 30, and astonished those privileged to hear him by his magical power. The two Christmas performances of the 'Messiah' by the Philharmonic were given on December 14 and 15 to crowded houses. The singers were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Rosina Beynon and Messrs. Philip Newbury and Charles Knowles.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Fred W. Beard, conductor of the Birmingham City Choral Society, who went out to Australia in August last to officiate as adjudicator at an important Eistedfodd, has accepted a lucrative post as principal of a large Musical Academy at the Antipodes, and will therefore not return to Birmingham. The appointment of a new conductor to the Society is now under consideration.

One of the finest if not the very best performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' ever heard in this city was that given by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society in the Town Hall on December 6, under Dr. Sinclair's masterly conductorship. The familiar music never created a deeper impression, due in large measure to the superb singing of the choir and the watchful care with which the orchestral accompaniments were rendered. Madame Mary Conly, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Tree were the soloists, and Mr. C. W. Perkins occupied his accustomed place at the organ.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association gave a popular performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Town Hall on December 8, under Mr. Joseph Adams's able conductorship. The choir was evidently on its mettle and seemed bent upon sustaining its prestige. The principals were Miss Laura Taylor, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Henry Boulderson and Mr. Nat Bishop.

In place of the customary performance of a complete choral work, the Midland Musical Society placed before its supporters a programme of a miscellaneous character, which included some orchestral works and Miss Liza Lehmann's song-cycle 'In a Persian garden,' by Mesdames Laura Taylor, Grainger Kerr, and Messrs. H. Turnpenny and Quinlan. Mr. A. J. Catton conducted.

The second Harrison concert of the present series took place in the Town Hall on December 3, attracting an enormous audience, the chief features of the concert being the appearance of Señor Sarasate and Signor Busoni. The vocalists were Miss Amy Castles and the Misses Hook.

The last musical matinée in connection with the Royal Society of Artists' autumn exhibition of pictures took place on December 8. The occasion was a memorable one, inasmuch as it was the three-hundredth concert given under the management and direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack, covering a period of fifteen consecutive years. In commemoration of the event and in appreciation of his services, a presentation was made to Mr. Pollack, Mr. Jonathan Pratt, the honorary secretary of the Society, handing him on behalf of the subscribers a cheque for nearly £70.

Among the events of last month were an interesting 'Bach' concert given in the large lecture theatre of the Midland Institute on December 8 by the students of the School of Music, under the direction of its principal, Mr. Granville Bantock; the Ballad Singers' concert held at the Masonic Hall on December 4; and Madame Melba's concert at the Town Hall on December 7, assisted by the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. Mr. Max Mossel gave his second drawing-room concert of the season in the Grosvenor Room on December 13, the artists being the Max Mossel string quartet, Miss Fanny Davies (pianist), Miss Lillie Wormald (vocalist), and Mr. G. H. Manton (accompanist). The programme included Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34).——The 18th annual Scottish concert in connection with the Birmingham and Midland Scottish Society was held in the Town Hall on December 1, the executive being as usual the Glasgow Select Choir. Owing to the retirement of Mr. J. Millar Craig after forty years' service, the choir was conducted by his successor, Mr. Learmont Drysdale.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Young Men's Christian Association Choral Society, conductor Mr. W. A. Barter, gave its first concert for the season on November 29 and performed Gade's 'Erl King's daughter.' Mr. Harold Bernard led the band and the soloists were Miss Maude Wait, Miss Sybil Fox and Mr. J. W. Davey.

There was a large attendance at the annual concert of the Bristol Harmonic Male Choir at Colston Hall on November 29. In addition to the usual selection of glees, there were songs by Miss M. K. Sarah and Mr. T. Thomas. Mr. George Riseley contributed some organ solos, and Mr. Haydn Gunter played some violin solos. Mr. J. Jenkins conducted.

At the first concert of the season by the Bristol North Choral Society, held in the Victoria Rooms under the direction of Mr. C. W. Stear (in the absence of Mr. J. Bending, through serious illness), on December 1, Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was rendered, with Miss Maude Waite, Miss Eleanor Druce, Mr. Hughes Cross and Mr. Charles Knowles as the soloists. Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader of the orchestra. An excellent interpretation of the work was afforded to the gratification of a large audience.

The Clifton Quintet held their second concert for the season on December 6, at the Victoria Rooms. The executants were Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). There were admirable performances of Beethoven's 'Harp' quartet in E flat (Op. 74); Brahms's Sonata in D minor (Op. 108) for pianoforte and violin, and Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte trio in E minor (Op. 92). Mr. Parsons skilfully executed on the pianoforte Brahms's Variations on a theme of Paganini (Op. 35).

On December 8 the Society of Instrumentalists, under the direction of Mr. Riseley, gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, and afforded agreeable interpretations of some favourite compositions, Mr. Harold Bernard being the leader. Mr. Albert Spalding played violin solos with much acceptance, and the vocalists were Miss Elsie White and Miss Maude England.

The Shirehampton and Avonmouth Popular Concert Society gave a concert at the Parish Hall on December 12, the programme being entirely devoted to the works of Brahms. Four part-songs were sung by the Avonmouth Choral Society under the direction of Mr. Napier Miles, and the vocalist associated with the choir was Mrs. Edward Speyer, who sang 'The Maiden' (Op. 93A) and in the 'Rhapsody' (Op. 53). The Sextet in B flat (Op. 18) was played by Messrs. Hubert Hunt, Maurice Alexander, Ernest Lane, F. S. Gardner, R. le Duc Bucknall and Percy Lewis. The Pianoforte trio in E flat was performed by Mr. Napier Miles (pianoforte), Mr. Hunt (violin) and Mr. Bucknall (violoncello).

On December 6 the Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook (of Bristol), gave a highly creditable performance of 'Elijah' at the Knightstone Pavilion. Madame Jessie Strathearn, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Herbert Grover and Mr. Charles Knowles were the soloists, while the band, largely consisting of Bristol players, was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Wednesday popular concerts there have been some interesting performances. On October 23 Mr. H. Inwards led a performance of Brahms's Sextet (Op. 18), and Miss Fillunger sang Bach's cantata 'Jauchzet Gott,' with Mr. Morrow as trumpet-player; on November 7 there were excerpts from Bach's rarely played 'Das Musikalische Opfer,' given by Mr. Tovey, Madame Soldat and Mr. Eli Hudson; and on November 21 the Grimson Quartet included in their programme the late W. Y. Hurlstone's 'Fantasy.'

On November 16 Miss Fanny Davies and Herr Mühlfeld gave a delightful pianoforte and clarinet recital in the Hall of Trinity College.

The first of two symphony concerts took place in the Guildhall on November 1, under the conductorship of Dr. Charles Wood.

The performance of sacred music in St. John's College Chapel on December 2 is noticed on p. 30.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two performances have recently been given of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The first, on November 22, by the Amateur Operatic and Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barton McGuckin, when the solos were sung by Mrs. Stella Bowman, Miss Rosabelle Geoghegan, Mr. W. H. Jones and Mr. Jay Ryan, and the band was led by Mr. Patrick Delany. The second performance, on December 13, was by the University of Dublin Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Charles Marchant. On that occasion the band consisted almost entirely of amateurs and the solos were well sung by members of the Society.

The Orpheus Choral Society gave its first concert of the season on November 27, when Dr. Culwick conducted an admirable selection of choral pieces, which included Cornelius's 'The Tempest.' Mrs. Monsell and Mr. Alexander Tucker were the solo vocalists and Miss Kathleen Gibson the solo violoncellist. Miss Gibson is a pupil of the Royal Irish Academy of Music, who, having continued her studies in London and Dresden, has returned to Dublin. This was her first public appearance since her sojourn in Germany, and she displayed a good technique and refined taste.

The Royal Irish Academy of Music gave a concert in the Royal University on November 29. The orchestra, under Dr. T. R. G. Jozé, played Weber's 'Euryanthe' overture and the accompaniment to the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto. In the latter work, conducted by Dr. Esposito, Miss Edna Elvery ably performed the solo part. Miss Queenie Eaton, Miss Nettie Edwards, Miss Eileen Forbes, Miss Sophie Solomons and Mr. J. C. Browner were the vocalists. Mr. S. Rosenberg was the solo violoncellist and Miss Kathleen Hinds played some pianoforte solos.

On December 10 the Dublin Glee Singers, conductor Mr. Joseph Seymour, gave a concert. The choir sang excellently in a selection of choruses, which included 'Hark, Apollo strikes the lyre,' Sir Henry Bishop's original version, with two choirs and pianoforte duet accompaniment. The male-voice choir admirably sang 'Softly dream' (Fischer), and the ladies' choir was heard to advantage in a not very interesting 'Hunting song' by Stuart. Miss Nora O'Hea was the solo violinist and made a successful début in her native city. Mr. J. C. Doyle and Mr. Charles Kelly were the solo vocalists.

The chamber music recitals at the Royal Dublin Society have been continued. The artists were Miss Fanny Davies (pianoforte), her first appearance in Dublin, Dr. Peace, (organ), the Brodsky Quartet and Mr. Backhaus.

The Feis Ceoil is announced to be held from May 20 to 25.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical season was opened in earnest on November 26 by the first of the orchestral concerts, with Mr. Fritz Kreisler as solo violinist. The band fully maintained the high standard of recent years, and the readings of Dr. Cowen were full of charm and interest. The programme included Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, and Liszt's symphonic poem 'Hungaria.' These, together with Elgar's 'Cockaigne' overture, were very finely played. Mr. Kreisler was superb in the Violin concerto of Beethoven. Mr. Henry J. Wood received a warm greeting on appearing as conductor at the second concert on December 3. Tchaikovsky's 'Symphonie Pathétique' received a thrilling rendering, and specially fine readings were given of the 'Oberon' overture, Bizet's 'Arlésienne' suite, and the 'Dream pantomime' from 'Hänsel und Gretel.' At the third concert on December 10, Mr. Richard Buhlig created a most favourable impression in the highly intellectual Brahms Pianoforte concerto No. 1, and Tchaikovsky's third Symphony was played under Dr. Cowen's able direction.

A somewhat important series of Sunday orchestral concerts has been inaugurated in the newly-opened King's Theatre under the direction and conductorship of Mr. Felix Gade. The band is local and very good, and vocalists and soloists of distinction are being engaged. I am glad to say that the concerts are being well supported.

The second of the University concerts (December 12) was devoted to three of Beethoven's Pianoforte trios, played by Messrs. Denhof (pianoforte), Verbrugghen (violin) and Messeas (violoncello). Of concerts by local artists those of most outstanding interest have been the vocal recitals by Mr. Alfred C. Young, an excellent baritone, on November 21; Miss Jean Waterson, a very promising young soprano, on December 11; the violin recital by Miss Copeland (an excellent first appearance), on November 20; and the pianoforte recital of Miss Muriel Kerr Brown, who showed pronounced advance in her aft, on November 22. A lecture-recital on Old Scottish Folk-Music was given by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, assisted by her sister, Miss Margaret Kennedy, on November 24; and the first concert of the Edinburgh String Quartet (Messrs. Colin McKenzie, J. H. Hartley, De la Haye and D. Millar-Craig), on November 27.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The notable features of the Choral and Orchestral Union's concert on November 27 were the first performance here of Liszt's symphonic poem 'Hungaria,' and Herr Fritz Kreisler's dignified rendering of Beethoven's Violin concerto. On December 4, Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the accomplished leader of the Scottish Orchestra, occupied the conductor's desk with conspicuous success. With the exception of Mr. J. H. Foulds's 'Epithalamium,' which was heard here for the first time, the programme included several more or less familiar works, and served to bring out the best qualities of both conductor and band. Miss Lillie Wormald, the solo vocalist, sang with much charm excerpts from Mozart, Bach and Ambrose Thomas. Local pianists were much interested in the first appearance here of Mr. Richard Buhlig, at the fifth classical concert, on December 11. In the solo part of Brahms's Pianoforte concerto in D minor, and in some Chopin pieces, Mr. Buhlig revealed interpretative gifts of the highest order. The programme also included Tchaikovsky's 'Polish' symphony, and a welcome novelty in Mozart's Serenade-Nocturne in D for string quartet with orchestra.

A highly interesting concert was given by the Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. B. W. Hartley, on December 3. In an attractive programme, but one not cheapened by too many concessions to what is known as the popular taste, the singing of the choir was remarkable for purity of tone and careful attention to every shade of expression. Miss Edith Evans and Mr. Henry Brearley were the solo vocalists.

The Cecilian Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. F. R. Joachim, made a very creditable appearance at their first concert on December 17. The programme, which included the overtures to 'Alceste' and 'The Barber of Seville,' and German's romance and two dances from 'The Conqueror,' was well within the powers of the players and a good rendering was the result. Mr. R. Heatherington played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor, and vocal solos were given by Miss Hilda Reynolds and Mr. Peter Melvin.

At the sixth classical concert on December 18 the Choral Union gave a successful performance of 'Elijah.' The choruses were all sung with fine effect, and Misses Gleeson-White and Gertrude Lonsdale, and Messrs. Alfred Heather and Fowler Burton, proved a competent quartet of soloists. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted as usual.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gloucester Choral Society opened the present season with a performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on December 3 in the Shire Hall, with a result that justified Dr. Brewer and the Society in their ambitious desire. The performance was in every detail remarkable—certainly one of the best ever given in the long history of the Society. Dr. Brewer had taken the greatest pains in thoroughly rehearsing the work with his chorus. There was consequently none of that hesitation which so often accounts for disaster, and the whole performance was marked with rare intelligence as well as brilliancy of execution. Mention, too, should be made of the singing of the semi-chorus. This important part of the work was entrusted to eight cathedral boys and six gentlemen from the chorus, and was sung with complete success. The soloists were Mr. Gervase Elwes and Miss Winifred Ludlam. The large band was led by Mr. W. H. Reed and included many amateurs, members of the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society. The short work written by Mr. Ivor Atkins for the last Hereford festival, 'A hymn of faith,' was included in the programme, and conducted by the composer, and was so admirably sung as to draw a letter of congratulation from Mr. Atkins to Dr. Brewer and his choir.

The Cirencester Choral Society, of which Mr. A. H. Gibbons is the conductor, gave a capital performance of 'Messiah' at the Parish Church on December 11, with band and organ. The principals were Miss Dorothy Wood, Miss Kate Fielder, Mr. Starkey and Mr. R. E. Miles. Miss Wood is a member of the Society, and sang with great taste and refinement.

A further example of the utilization of our large parish churches for such performances is noted at Stroud on December 13, when the members of the Stroud Choral and Orchestral Society, combined under the able direction of Mr. J. Edis Tidnam, gave a most creditable rendering of Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' followed by Wesley's anthem 'The Wilderness.' Mr. A. W. V. Vine (organist of Tewkesbury Abbey) was at the organ. This was Mr. Tidnam's last appearance as conductor of this Society, as he is leaving Stroud to take up an appointment at Dover College.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Zacharewitsch was the central figure of the fourth Symphony Orchestra on November 26. He played the solo part in Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and gave a remarkable reading of the difficult work.

Mr. Charles W. Black is to be heartily congratulated on the Fairfield Choral Society's performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on November 27. No more meritorious rendering of the work has been heard in Liverpool for several years. Miss Minnie Williams, Miss C. Mackinson and Mr. Val Thompson were the principals. It is to be noted that the Fairfield Society will give the first Liverpool performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' on April 9.

Mr. Charles W. Clark made a markedly favourable impression at the Philharmonic concert on December 4, when his rich and well-managed voice was heard to advantage in various songs. Señor Sarasate played Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' in his customary artistic manner, and Mr. Hamilton Harty's new 'Irish' symphony was excellently performed by the band under Dr. Cowen's careful direction.

The Symphony Orchestra programme of December 10 included Dvorák's Symphony in G, Brahms's variations on a theme by Haydn, and Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel' overture. Miss Hilda de Angelis was the vocalist.

The Orchestral Society's concert on December 15 was noteworthy for a careful rendering of the incidental music to Sibelius's opera 'Pelleas and Melisande,' given for the first time in Liverpool. Mr. Charles Tree was the vocalist and Mr. Granville Bantock conducted.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Hallé Concert, under Dr. Richter's conductorship, on November 22, Dr. Cowen's 'Scandinavian' symphony held the honoured place in the programme, in company with Dvorák's 'Hussite' overture, and Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, Mischa Elman playing the solo in the last-named work. On November 29, Berlioz's 'Faust' reached its twenty-second performance at these concerts. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Charles Clark, and Mr. Fowler Burton. At the following concert (December 6) the 'Variations and double fugue on a merry theme,' by Georg Schumann, were included in the programme, in addition to Brahms's fourth Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Melusine' overture, and Glinka's 'La Jota Aragonese' orchestral caprice. Miss Esta D'Argon was the vocalist. At the concert on December 13 Dr. Richter secured fine performances of Beethoven's second Symphony and Humperdinck's 'Moorish' rhapsody, the latter not having been previously played here. Mr. Egon Petri, professor at the Royal Manchester College of Music, exhibited excellent technique in playing the solo part of Brahms's Pianoforte concerto No. 1.

At the Gentlemen's Concert, on November 26 (conducted by Dr. Richter), Mendelssohn's Octet (Op. 20) was played by the combined strings of the orchestra with good effect. The other instrumental numbers were Spohr's 'Jessonda' overture, Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem, 'La jeunesse d'Hercule,' and a portion of Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music. Miss Frederica Richardson was the vocalist. The concert of December 10 took the form of a recital, when Miss Agnes Nicholls displayed excellent taste in rendering groups of songs in German, French, and English. Those in English included three little flower-song vignettes by Mr. Hamilton Harty, who himself admirably accompanied throughout the recital. Mr. Isidor Cohn played with his accustomed skill two of Schumann's 'Novelletten,' Beethoven's 'Sonata Appassionata,' and other pieces. At Mr. Brand Lane's third subscription concert on November 24, Dudley Buck's eight-part chorus, 'Hymn to music,' and other selections were sung, the interpretations of which testified to the excellence of the choir. The programme of the fourth promenade concert on December 8 included Dvorák's 'Carneval' overture, two Slavonic dances, and the Scherzo and Finale from the 'New World' symphony, in addition to Luigini's 'Egyptian' ballet suite, and one of Val Hamm's pieces for wind instruments—a quartet for flute, oboe, clarinet and horn. The Tunstall, Hanley and District Prize Choir, conducted by Mr. J. Whewall, created a good impression in the rendering of various part-songs. Madame Annie Walker was the vocalist.

The Vocal Society, under Dr. Henry Watson's direction, gave its subscribers (on December 12) the opportunity of hearing and comparing connectedly Stafford Smith's and Sir Hubert Parry's musical versions of Milton's ode, 'Blest pair of sirens,' the latter, however, without orchestra. A new part-song setting of the 'Wreck of the Hesperus,' by Mr. R. H. Wilson, chorus-master of the Hallé concerts, was well sung by the choir, and a song by Miss Dorothy M. Cole, to the 'King of Thule' verses, indicated on the part of the young composer—a Royal Manchester College student—a distinct lyrical vein in taste and feeling. The amateur orchestra of the Beethoven Society at its concert on December 11 played Gounod's 'Mirella' overture and Elgar's Serenade for strings (Op. 20). Miss Lucy Pierce, another Royal Manchester College student, showed excellent technique in her performance of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, Liszt's waltz arrangement of motives from Donizetti's 'Parisina,' and Chopin's Study in A flat.

The district Nonconformist Choir Union, at its annual concert on December 1, performed 'Elijah,' the principals being Madame Sadler-Fogg, Miss Hilda Nicholas, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Albert Garcia. Band and chorus numbered 500 performers; Mr. Arthur Hill presided at the organ, and Mr. J. Knowles conducted.

The death of Mr. John Henry Cockerill, the senior harpist for the past fourteen years of the Hallé Orchestra, which took place with extreme suddenness on December 13, is the subject of sincerest regret. Widely known, though unobtrusive, Mr. Cockerill was just as widely respected.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Brahms's 'Requiem' was the principal feature at the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union concert on November 28, when Dr. Coward made his appearance here as a conductor. An incisive and brilliant performance was given, although the tone of the choir was not so velvety as in the past. Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Lane Wilson were the soloists, and the Hallé Orchestra played the accompaniments.

Fröken Salicath gave a delightful vocal recital on November 27, at which were performed some unaccompanied Scandinavian folk-songs. The subscribers of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society were favoured with an ideal performance by the Brussels String Quartet on November 29, and at the Newcastle Musical Society's meeting on December 6 a Violin and Pianoforte sonata by the director—previously played at Queen's Hall—was rendered by the composer, Mr. Alfred Wall, and Mr. Oppenheim.

Haydn's 'Passion' was sung by the Catholic Choral Society on December 5, but the performance lacked reverence and hence was ineffective. We have not been favoured with a Bach cantata in Newcastle for a long time, but, strangely enough, two were sung on December 12. One was 'O Light everlasting,' which, together with Stanford's 'Revenge' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' formed the somewhat ambitious programme of the Postal Telegraph Choral Society under the direction of their new conductor, Mr. E. Bainton. The various works were rendered with commendable accuracy. Miss Hilda Wilson was the solo vocalist. The second Bach cantata was 'Schau, lieber Gott, wie meine Feind,' and formed part of an interesting Bach-Brahms evening given by Mr. Donald F. Tovey and the Harford Vocal Quartet at the Classical Concert Society.

On the same evening the South Shields Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. M. Fairs, performed Dvorák's 'At the foot of the Cross,' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam.' Haydn's 'Seasons' was performed on December 12 by the Philharmonic Society of Newcastle; Miss J. Ellis, Messrs. T. Davis and D. Price were the soloists, and Mr. G. Dodds conducted a satisfactory choir.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society (conductor, Dr. Frank Bates) gave a very successful concert on December 13, at which the principal attraction was Mischa Elman, who played Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto in D, a Nocturne by Chopin-Wilhelmj and 'Souvenir de Moscow' (Wieniawski). The band played the 'Freischütz' overture (Weber), and Beethoven's eighth Symphony. The Norwich Choral Society, who were associated with the Philharmonic, contributed two old madrigals and two numbers from Sir Edward Elgar's 'Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands.'

The Saturday Popular Concerts, under the direction of Dr. Bunnett, have been meeting with marked success this season, the audiences being very numerous and appreciative. Among other artists who have appeared are Miss Kate Rooney, Miss Phyllis Lett, Miss Winifred Siddons, Miss Evelyn Tyzer and Miss Spencer, Mr. Albert Garcia, Mr. Edgar Coyle and Mr. Foxton Ferguson.

The committee of management of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival have arranged for a concert on festival lines on April 11 next, when 'The Apostles' (Elgar), which met with such great success at the last festival, will again be performed. The London Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies have been engaged. The rehearsals for this performance and for the works selected for performance at the ensuing festival are now proceeding under the direction of Dr. A. H. Mann.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Long Eaton Choral Society gave its first concert on November 27, when the 'Messiah' was performed under the direction of Mr. J. S. Derbyshire. With an efficient orchestra and chorus of some 150 performers a good performance was attained with the co-operation, as soloists, of Madame Norledge, Miss Lilian Dews, Mr. Tom Child and Mr. James Coleman.

The first of the two orchestral concerts given by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society took place on November 29 under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill, the orchestra being led by Mr. Lyell Tayler. The programme included Mozart's 'Magic flute' overture, Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Cowen's Suite of English dances and Sullivan's 'Macbeth' overture. Dr. Cowen's Suite met with a hearty welcome, especially the 'Menuet d'Amour,' which had to be repeated. The vocalist was Miss Edna Thornton.

At Miss Cantelo's chamber concert on December 12 the Brodsky Quartet played Haydn's Quartet in G, and the programme included Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata (Op. 7), Brahms's sonata for pianoforte and viola, and Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 81). The ensemble playing throughout was extremely fine and therefore most enjoyable.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the present term took place on October 25 in the Town Hall, when Herr Kreisler gave an excellent violin recital, his chief solos being Bach's Adagio and Fugue in G minor, and Vieuxtemps's Concerto in F sharp minor (No. 2). The vocalist was Miss Cartwright, who sang several songs with great charm.

On November 3, in the same building, Herr Backhaus gave a concert, assisted by Herr Sebald (violinist) and Madame Ella Russell. The cycle of pieces played by Herr Backhaus included Mendelssohn's rarely-heard Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, and three Chopin Studies. Herr Sebald's principal contribution was the Finale from Max Bruch's G minor Concerto. Madame Ella Russell gave four songs of various nationalities with great acceptance.

On November 15, also in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Choral and Philharmonic, and the Bach Choir united their efforts, and gave an excellent concert, ably assisted by a band composed of members of the London Symphony Orchestra, and conducted by Dr. Allen. The performances of the two vocal works, Verdi's 'Stabat Mater' and Dr. Walker's 'Hymn to Dionysus,' were exceedingly interesting as being sung for the first time in Oxford. The band gave an excellent rendering of Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony, with the exception that the Finale of the latter was taken too slowly, the stringed portion of the orchestra especially finding it very difficult to accommodate themselves to the slow tempo.

The professor of music, Sir Hubert Parry, gave an interesting lecture on 'The function of thematic material in musical organization' to an appreciative audience, illustrations being well rendered by Miss W. Evans, Miss Colton and Mr. Bolton. The Vice-chancellor was present at the lecture, which took place in the Sheldonian Theatre on November 28.

On the following afternoon Dr. Joachim and the Berlin Quartet gave a chamber concert in the Town Hall in connection with the Musical Club. The programme consisted of three quartets — Mozart's in D minor (K. No. 421), Brahms's in B flat (Op. 67), and Beethoven's in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4). Of course, they were as nearly as possible perfectly played, but in this concert it was again demonstrated that three quartets in succession, without any relief between them, constitute a strain on the audience, if not, indeed, upon the performers. A song or a violin solo interspersed would afford the much-needed repose and relief.

The Grenadier Guards Band visited Oxford on December 6 in order to witness the conferring of the degree of Doctor of Music upon their chief, Mr. Albert Williams, the first bandmaster in the British Army who has achieved that distinction. The Band generously offered to give a concert in aid of the Radcliffe Infirmary, which took place in the Town Hall with the greatest success, the proceeds amounting to the sum of £60. The various pieces were rendered with that artistic finish for which the Grenadier band is famous, the 'Invitation to the waltz' being most superbly played. Dr. Williams conducted a most enjoyable afternoon's music.——On December 8, in the Town Hall, Mischa Elman gave a concert in conjunction with Mr. Percival Garratt, a promising local pianist. The clever young violinist played Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's 'Chaconne,' and Mr. Garratt's contributions to an enjoyable concert were Brahms's 'Rhapsodie' (Op. 119) and the Toccata from the fifth Concerto of Saint-Saëns.

The Sunday evening concerts at Balliol College have been continued as usual under the able direction Dr. Walker, and we have had visits from the Ludwig Quartet (under the auspices of the Musical Union), Señor Sarasate and Señor Sobrino (violin and pianoforte recital).

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

December musical activities largely were limited to various performances of the 'Messiah,' of which at least two dozen have recently been given.

The Norton Lees Choral Society gave a successful concert on December 13. The programme included Stanford's 'Revenge' and 'Cavalier songs,' which furnished the excellent choir with congenial work. Mr. Horace Reynolds doubled the rôle of conductor and solitary soloist.

The Heeley Wesley Choral Society is still progressing under Mr. E. G. Laycock's zealous direction, Romberg's 'Lay of the Bell,' performed at their opening concert on December 6, being full of choral merit and with but few shortcomings.

The Yorkshire chorus (Leeds and Sheffield) which toured in Rhineland during the last week of September, 1906, gave a concert in the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on December 15. A number of excerpts from 'The Dream of Gerontius' were given, under Dr. Coward. Finely as the chorus sang, the experiment was not successful, the absence of an orchestra detracting from the enjoyment of the work. Three choruses from the 'Messiah' and a number of mixed-voice and male-voice part-songs were beautifully sung by the splendid choir, under the direction of Dr. Coward. The soloists were Miss Lillian Dews, Mr. William Burrows and Mr. Frederic Austin. Mr. John Groves and Mr. W. S. Jessop were the accompanists.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society performed 'Elijah' on December 6, under the direction of Dr. Coward. The singing of the chorus was marked by spirit and requisite expression. The balance of parts is, however, faulty, and should receive the earnest attention of the committee.

At the first season's concert of the Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra, held in the Albert Hall on December 14, Mr. J. H. Parkes directed a very creditable performance of Prout's third Symphony in F. Edward German's Symphonic poem, 'Hamlet,' also was essayed with some success by the enthusiastic members of this amateur Society.

The first performance in Sheffield of Elgar's 'The Apostles' aroused considerable interest, and a brilliant audience crowded the Albert Hall on December 18. Under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society gave an impressive and beautiful rendering of the oratorio. There was a large orchestra of local players reinforced by members of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The fine chorus of the Society sang the music with a full grasp of its emotional and dramatic import. The luscious quality of the ladies' voices was evinced in the searching chorus 'And the Lord turned.' The male-voice choruses were sung with technical mastery and picturesque tone-colour. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Harold Wilde, Mr. Joseph Lycett, Mr. Robert Charlesworth and Mr. Dalton Baker. Mr. J. W. Phillips was at the organ. Mr. J. A. Rodgers prepared the chorus, Mr. Wood taking charge of the final rehearsals.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST COUNTIES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first few months of the musical season in this district are almost entirely devoted to preparation for public performances to follow after Christmas, and therefore, especially in the department of choral music, comparatively few events have to be recorded.

THE THREE TOWNS.

The first event of importance in the series of Plymouth Corporation concerts was the performance of 'The Golden Legend' on November 17 by the Guildhall Choir, with orchestra, conducted by Mr. H. Moreton, when the choir sang with even more than their usual expressiveness and brightness of quality. Mr. John Pardew led the band, and the principals were Misses Ethel Cadman and May Peters, Messrs. Samuel Masters and Harry Dearth.

The experiment of weekly town concerts for the people is being once more tried by the Stonehouse Urban Council. Mr. W. J. Hart has been appointed town organist, and under his management a series of twelve concerts, at which local talent will be heard, was initiated on November 7.

At the first of Mr. Frank Winterbottom's symphony concerts, given in Stonehouse Town Hall on November 5, a novelty was introduced in a symphonic poem, founded on Shelley's 'Alastor,' by Mr. Ernest Blake, and made a good impression as being the work of a clever and imaginative musician. At the concert on December 4, the Baroness Overbeck conducted a suite, 'La reine de neige,' which she composed as ballet music to Andersen's fairy tale 'The snow queen.' Originality was chiefly displayed in the orchestration, which however was often exaggerated rather than satisfying, and the ideas lacked cohesion. The Baroness also conducted a performance of her suite 'Salome,' which was played in a former season. The symphony at this concert was Mendelssohn's 'Scotch,' conducted, of course, by Mr. Frank Winterbottom. The organization of a new 'Three Towns Symphony Orchestra,' which was recorded at the end of last season, has had a gratifying and stimulating influence on societies already in existence. Dr. Weekes's private Orchestral Society has formed a scheme of subscription symphony concerts, the first of which, on November 21, was highly successful. A crowded hall and a noticeable increase of care in the performance were pleasing elements of success. Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony was played, also Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony.

The Plymouth Amateur Operatic Society, which throughout an existence of seven or eight years has given annual performances of Gilbert-Sullivan opera, this year made a new departure and presented the comic opera of 'Erminie' throughout the week beginning December 3.

The revival of interest in part-singing, especially for male voices, which has been marked throughout the West of England, has reached as far south as Plymouth, where a male-voice choir started on October 8 with twenty men, and with Mr. David Parkes as conductor, and has already increased to over forty members. A choir of boys, numbering over thirty voices, is being trained conjointly, and will join the men for performance of glees and madrigals.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

The Choral Society which has been conducted in Tavistock by Mr. Manley Martin has ceased to have a separate existence, and has amalgamated with his Society in Plymouth. Another has sprung up in Tavistock, conducted by Rev. Leigh Murray, which promises to do useful work. A concert of tentative character was given last season, and on December 17 the Society made its first appearance as an organization, giving enjoyable renderings of Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, with a small band led by Mr. Alfred Serle. On December 5 St. Budeaux Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. B. Barnicott, gave a creditable rendering of Gaul's 'Una,' with the Misses May Groser and Mabel Traheir, and Messrs. Bert Hallett and G. S. Meadows as principals. Every encouragement is deserved by this energetic little Society. On December 6, the Teignmouth Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. A. J. James, performed Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Calm sea and prosperous voyage' overture, in a programme containing other miscellaneous items. Exmouth Choral Society on December 12 performed Elgar's 'The black knight' and 'The banner of St. George,' with Madame Emily Squire as principal and Mr. Raymond Wilmot as conductor.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

The Taunton Choral Society gave its first concert on December 11, and the Madrigal Society on the 17th of the same month, both performances conducted by Mr. Herbert Chalmers. The small town of Wellington has a flourishing choral society of 100 voices, which is rehearsing, under Mr. Allan Allen, 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Golden Legend' and 'Tannhäuser,' for performance in the spring.

TRURO AND FALMOUTH.

Only two choral societies in Cornwall have so far given performances. The Truro Philharmonic Society performed Barnett's 'The ancient mariner' on December 11, with Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Maud Davies, Mr. Albert Collings and Mr. Walter Belgrove as soloists. Mr. Herbert Sanders conducted, and the chorus and orchestra were augmented by members of Falmouth Philharmonic Society, in whose town a preliminary performance was given on the preceding date.

The Diamond Jubilee of the Exeter Oratorio Society is specially noticed on page 39.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On December 4 the Stafford Choral Union gave an excellent concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' which reflected great credit on the members and their conductor, Mr. H. Drury. The soloists were Madame Amy Kendal, Miss Jessie Dennis, Mr. Samuel Masters, Mr. John Ridding and Mr. Charles Tree, all of whom were highly successful. The choir sang excellently throughout, and the orchestra, composed of local amateurs and Birmingham professionals, under the leadership of Herr Suck, did their work well, while Mr. J. Jackson presided at the organ.

On December 6 the North Staffordshire District Choral Society opened its season at the Victoria Hall, Hanley, with a performance of 'Elijah.' The event was of special interest from the fact that the new President, Mr. T. Twyford, High Sheriff of the county, had signalized his assumption of office by taking steps to secure a large and distinguished patronage for the Society. The selection of Mendelssohn's masterpiece this year was specially appropriate, it being just sixty years since the oratorio was produced at Birmingham. The honours of the Hanley performance fell to the choir, the choruses being superbly rendered. The principals were Miss E. Linden, Miss Alice Lakin and Mr. Dalton Baker. Mr. W. Sherratt presided at the grand organ. Mr. James Whewall, the conductor of the Society, is to be highly complimented on the continuous growth of his choral forces. That the Society should have taken such prominence in the district in so short a time is largely due to confidence in his skill and judgment as a conductor and choir-trainer, which on this occasion was more than ever justified.

On December 13 the Darlaston Choral Society also performed 'Elijah,' under the able conductorship of Mr. Thomas Johnson. The soloists were Madame Aston, Miss K. Miller, Mr. F. Mullings and Mr. James Coleman. The choir sang their part in a manner which merits warm commendation. In the absence of an orchestra the accompaniments were skilfully played on the organ by Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist of Birmingham Town Hall.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

This has been a busy month in Yorkshire, busier, I incline to think, than any similar period for many years past. On one day there were six concerts of genuine artistic interest, on another ten, so that it is hardly possible to do justice to every deserving concert, and in some cases one's chronicle must be reduced to the limits of a bare record.

At Leeds the Municipal Orchestra, founded and conducted by Mr. Fricker, the Town Hall organist, gives concerts which are under the patronage, or, as a cynical person might put it, in the clutches, of the Corporation. The result is that the concerts are given free of charges for rent or lighting, but that they are also subject to the rule of the Council and the criticisms of its members, one of whom recently complained at a Council meeting that the programmes were too 'classy.' Against this sort of 'encouragement' they struggle on, but the concert on November 24 indicated the thin end of the 'popular' wedge, the programme consisting of part-songs and the like, sung by a couple of local choirs, pieces which, though excellent in their way, are not of the same calibre as the music given at the orchestral concerts. Of these a good specimen was afforded on December 8, when Mr. Frederick Cliffe visited Leeds and conducted his C minor Symphony, the remarkable Op. 1, which, when rejected by the Leeds Festival, and produced by Sir August Manns, made such a sensation. It was pleasant to find that, after a gulf of many years, it sounded so fresh and charming. Mr. Cliffe also directed two movements of his Violin concerto, the solo part being ably played by Mr. Elliott, the leader of the orchestra. At the same concert Sibelius, represented by his 'Swan of Tuonela' and 'Finlandia,' made his first appearance in a Yorkshire programme, and the deep impressiveness of his very individual music made a profound effect.

On December 5 Dr. Richter came with the Hallé Orchestra to one of the subscription concerts, and conducted a very fine performance of Brahms's fourth Symphony, which had never before been heard at Leeds. The Philharmonic choir, on the same occasion, gave a very bright and forcible reading of Mr. Cliffe's 'Ode to the north-east wind.' The composer was present, and from the fact that three of his works have been heard at Leeds within a week, it would seem that he is receiving some recognition in his native county. A renewed interest in chamber music may, I hope, be implied from the fact that two local quartet parties now flourish at Leeds. The older one, the Leeds Bohemian, has made its concerts the rendezvous of the most truly musical audience in the county, and on November 28 it gave excellent performances of quartets by Mozart in B flat, Schumann in A (Op. 41, No. 3) and Arensky in G (Op. 11, No. 1), while on December 12 the Rasch Quartet gave quartets by Haydn and Beethoven (Op. 135), and Dvorák's so-called 'Dumky' Pianoforte trio, with good effect. An event of more than common interest was the performance, by students of Leeds University, of 'The Clouds' of Aristophanes on November 29 and 30, which deserves mention here because the clever and allusive music composed (and compiled) by Sir Hubert Parry was employed, and was given under the direction of Mr. T. J. Hoggett with an effect which would have been better had the prevalent conversation allowed it to be more audible. As it was, the Finale, which the composer had enlarged for the occasion, was quite ruined by extemporised accompaniments certainly not intended by him. There has been some special music at the Leeds Churches to mark the Advent season. At the Parish Church, where Dr. Bairstow's exceedingly artistic organ-playing is a noteworthy feature of the musical services, there were given, on December 17, two of Bach's church cantatas, 'Sleepers, wake' and 'Thou Guide of Israel,' together with Purcell's fine unaccompanied anthem, 'Remember not.'

At St. John-the-Evangelist's, Brahms's 'German Requiem' was given under Mr. Albert Jowett's direction on December 11, and in this connection may be mentioned the performance of that work in Ripon Cathedral on December 14, under Mr. C. L. Moody, of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' at Huddersfield Parish Church on December 12, under Dr. Eaglefield Hull, and of 'St. Paul,' in Wakefield Cathedral on December 17, under Mr. Hardy.

BRADFORD.

On November 24, the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, of which Mr. Allen Gill is the very able conductor, gave a programme that included some Wagner pieces and, among other things, Dvorák's 'Carnaval' overture, all of which were played with much zest and go. Mr. Lewis Oddy was the pianist, and played pieces by Chopin and Mendelssohn with great neatness. At the subscription concert on December 14, 'The Dream of Gerontius' received a fine interpretation, under Dr. Cowen, the soloists being Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown. The performance was of quite exceptional excellence all round, but especial mention should be made of the wonderfully finished singing of the semi-chorus, and of the artistic performance by Mr. Brown of the bass solos. Mr. Isidor Cohn, a pianist whose brilliant attainments are well known in this part of the world, gave a recital on December 4; and on December 13, at one of the Harrison concerts, Sarasate and Busoni visited Bradford and made a great effect by their admirable playing, their performance of part of a Rubinstein Sonata being a wonderful example of beautiful tone production on the part of both artists.

OTHER TOWNS.

Sir Hubert Parry paid a visit to Halifax on November 22, when he conducted his 'King Saul' at one of the Choral Society's concerts. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Dorothy Wiley, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. Herbert Brown and Mr. Herbert Parker, while the chorus sang intelligently.

At the concert of the Scarborough Philharmonic Society on December 4, exceedingly good performances were obtained by Dr. Ely, the conductor, of Parry's 'The love that casteth out fear' and 'The pied piper.' The former had not before been heard in the North of England, and though the special effects obtainable in Gloucester Cathedral could not of course be reproduced, the impressiveness of the music was made apparent. Madame Amy Dewhurst and Mr. Plunket Greene were the principals.

At Hull the Symphony Orchestra has been continuing its series of afternoon concerts with increasing efficiency and larger audiences. On November 22 Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony was given; on December 6, Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony was very smartly played, and Saint-Saëns's seldom heard 'Henry VIII.' ballet music was a feature of the programme. On December 20, Schumann's first Symphony was chosen, and all the performances have been most ably conducted by Mr. Arthur Wallerstein. On December 11 the performance by young Mischa Elman of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto gave especial interest to the Philharmonic Society's concert, and Dvorák's 'New World' symphony was among the works conducted by Mr. J. W. Hudson. The York Musical Society, on December 11, gave Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The soloists were all exceedingly good—Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin—and the band and chorus responded well to Mr. Noble's energetic beat, the spirit and verve of the music being happily caught. The Wakefield Chamber Concert on December 12 took the pleasant form of a song recital by Miss Agnes Nicholls. Miss Nora McKay played some violin solos very artistically, and Mr. Hamilton Harty's accompaniments reached something near perfection.

The Pudsey Choral Union, under Mr. H. H. Pickard, revived Handel's 'Samson' on November 26. The Morley Choral Society gave 'St. Paul'—which is in unusual favour this season—on November 21, under Mr. H. Fricker's direction. 'Judas Maccabæus' was the work chosen for the Batley Choral Society's concert on December 4, Mr. John Fearnley conducting. The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society gave 'Elijah,' under Dr. Coward, on December 6, and the Doncaster Musical Society, on November 22, gave Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The mere enumeration of these concerts will show how impossible it is to do more than briefly chronicle them.

More than a bare record, however, must be given to the Middlesbrough Musical Union concert on December 5, seeing that it introduced something new to the North of England—if not a wider area—in Bach's cantata 'The sages of Sheba,' of which an excellent performance was given under the direction of Mr. Kilburn, the solo parts being ably filled by Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown. The Grail scene from 'Parsifal' was another very interesting feature, and a third was Grieg's Pianoforte concerto, the solo part in which was very brilliantly played by Mr. Backhaus. The whole programme certainly reflected the artistic enterprise that has always characterized this Society.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The first performance here of Strauss's 'Salome,' on December 5, was a triumph for the composer, who conducted, no less than for Fräulein Emmy Destinn, who was unsurpassable in the character of the delectable heroine. Herr Ernst Krauss, as Herod, and Herr Hoffmann, as Jochanaan, were also excellent, and the scenery, costumes, &c., were of unusual magnificence.——At the second concert of the Royal Orchestra, Herr Felix Weingartner produced a new symphonic poem, founded upon Corneille's 'Polyeuct,' by Edgar Tinel. The work, which illustrates the festival in the temple of Jupiter, is in three sections, melodious, spontaneous in invention, and superbly scored.——At the third Philharmonic concert Prof. Arthur Nikisch produced a brilliant new overture (the second) to E. Humperdinck's opera 'Die Heirat wider Willen,' while at the fourth concert Max Reger's 'Serenade' for small orchestra was played for the first time in Berlin and warmly received.——The Singakademie gave a Brahms concert under Prof. Georg Schumann's direction on November 25, when four of the master's most solemn works were given, viz.: the 'German Requiem,' 'Nœnia,' 'The song of the Fates,' and the 'Song of Destiny'—a severe task for the choir, which however they splendidly surmounted. ——At the first of Herr E. N. von Reznicek's orchestral chamber concerts on November 23, a new and very charming overture to a Christmas fairy-tale, 'Das Christ Elflein,' by Hans Pfitzner, was brought to a first hearing and enthusiastically received. The work is scored without trumpets, trombones or other heavy brass. At the same concert a Suite for string orchestra by a new composer, Franz Dubitzki, was produced. It proved a strangely unripe work, though it was not devoid of some originality.——That charming English pianist, Miss Evelyn Suart, scored a brilliant success at her concert on November 30, at which she performed concertos by Mozart, Rachmaninoff and Saint-Saëns. The public displayed quite remarkable enthusiasm. On the same day the Brussels String Quartet produced a new Quintet for pianoforte, violin, two violas, and violoncello (an unusual combination) by Paul Juon. It proved to be a valuable work, fresh, individual and essentially musical, and was greeted with evident delight.——On November 29 a young member of the Court Opera Orchestra, Herr Otto Urack, displayed extraordinary talent as a conductor at a concert given by himself for the purpose of introducing a new 'Fantasia for orchestra' of his own composition. The work is so palpably an imitation of Richard Strauss in his most extravagant mood that an opinion of Herr Urack's creative gifts can scarcely at present be formed. His conducting of his idol's 'Tod und Verklärung' and other works was, however, quite remarkable for a youth of twenty. The Vienna Male-Voice Society has given some stirring concerts, very much in the style of those given in London some months ago. Quite extraordinary scenes of enthusiasm, not devoid of a deep political significance, were enacted. German-Austrians are always sure of a warm welcome in the capital of the German Empire; how much more such splendid interpreters of German lieder! At a concert of modern music given by Herr Walter Meyrowitz in the Mozartsaal, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's 'Norfolk rhapsody' was performed.

BRUXELLES.

At the popular concert under M. Dupuis, Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings was performed with success, as well as a new symphonic poem, 'Gethsemane,' by M. Ryelandt, a pupil of M. Edgar Tinel.

COBURG.

'Herrat,' a three-act grand opera by Felix Draeseke, was performed here for the first time on November 13 in the presence of the veteran composer, who celebrated his seventieth birthday with this conspicuous event. The work, which was conducted by Hofkapellmeister Lorenz, was warmly received.

COLOGNE.

Prof. Georg Schumann's latest orchestral work, 'Overture to a drama,' was produced at the Gürzenich concert of December 6 with decided success. 'Vendetta,' a new opera by Signor Emilio Pizzi, was produced at the new Opera House and well received.

COPENHAGEN.

A new comic opera, by Carl Nielsen, entitled 'Mascarade,' was produced at the Royal Theatre on November 11, and very favourably received by public and press alike. The libretto is based on a comedy by Holberg.

DORTMUND.

Richard Strauss is still increasing his demands on those anxious to perform his works. For his latest effusion, the male-voice 'Bardengesang,' he needs an orchestra of 122 players, of whom twelve—i.e., four each horns, trumpets and trombones—are to play behind the scenes. At the production, by the Dortmunden Lehrergesang-Verein, on November 21, the orchestra was reduced to sixty-five players, but though the chorus numbered 220 stalwart singers, they were all but inaudible, certainly not a word could be understood through the din made by the instrumentalists. What it would be with the full complement of 122 players doing their level best can scarcely be imagined.

DRESDEN.

Byron's 'Manfred,' with Schumann's music, has been revived at the Court Opera. On December 8 Max Schillings's new three-act music-drama 'Moloch' was produced at the Royal Opera. It is seven years since Schillings produced his last opera. He is a slow writer, but his music always bears the impress of deep thought and the most painstaking workmanship. These qualities are again conspicuous in the new drama, which therefore did not fail to impress, though its lack of spontaneous invention was noticeable. The performance, under Hofkapellmeister Schuch, was splendid.

DÜSSELDORF.

Mr. Isidore de Lara was present at the first performance in Germany of his opera 'Moina' at the local Stadttheater, and enthusiastically received. —— The Brahms concert recently given by Prof. Buths is referred to on p. 23.

ESSEN.

The Committee of the Musikalische Gesellschaft spent a few mauvais quarts d'heure on December 8. On the evening of that day Herr Siegfried Wagner was to conduct a lengthy programme of music by himself, his great father and his grandfather, but an hour or two before the concert was to commence he received a telegram containing the distressing news of his mother's serious illness, and for some time it was doubtful whether he would conduct or be called to the bedside of Frau Cosima Wagner. Not to disappoint the Society and the public, Herr Wagner decided to keep his appointment, but he begged the indulgence of the audience and their permission to omit the jolly 'Kirmess Dance' from his opera 'Herzog Wildfang.'

GENOA.

Signor Stanislao Gastaldon, the composer of the much-sung romance 'Music a proïbita,' has written a new and strange work entitled 'Dante's sonnet,' which was produced here without meeting with much favour. It is a setting of the sonnet 'Tanto gentile e tanto onesta pare,' sung by a tenor in the character of Dante, and amidst scenery depicting Florence in the 14th century. The prize-opera 'Hermes,' by Attilio Panelli, on the other hand, was warmly received on its production on November 8. The libretto of his work is founded, by Enrico Gomitti, on a novel, 'Homo sum,' by the German writer Georg Ebers. A prize of 10,000 lire (£400) had been awarded by the jury in a competition instituted by the town of Bologna; but the Town Council refused to accept the verdict, and the composer is still waiting for his money.

GLADBACH.

At the second subscription concert of the Cæcilia Choral Society, Peter Cornelius's beautiful comic opera 'The Barber of Bagdad' was performed as a cantata, and to the evident delight of the audience. Prof. Messchaert was perfect as the Barber, and Musikdirektor Hans Gelbke conducted the excellent rendering of the attractive music.

HEIDELBERG.

Prof. Ph. Wolfram revived a symphony in D by Johann Christian Bach (the 'English' Bach) at the second historical concert of the local Bach Choir. The work has been discovered (in orchestral parts) in the Grand-Ducal library at Darmstadt.

MANNHEIM.

A 'new edition' of Handel's 'Belshazzar,' by Herr Johannes Reichert, was produced at the local Musikverein under the direction of Dr. Kutzschbach. The editor's work consists chiefly of cuts, and changes in the order of choruses and airs. F. Schubert's rarely heard third Symphony in D was revived at a Philharmonic concert under Musikdirektor Gaulé. Operatic literature seems to have been enriched by a lyric drama in one act, 'Il Viandante' (The wanderer), by Enrico Bossi, the composer of the famous oratorio 'Paradise lost.' The new work was produced at the local Court Theatre on December 9, and was enthusiastically received. The action takes place in Sicily, in the year 134 B.C., and the climax consists of a grand duet between the Wanderer and the heroine, Damia. The music is melodious, characteristic and highly dramatic—in one word, masterly. The composer was present and warmly greeted.

MAYENCE.

The effective and affecting two-act opera 'The hunchback,' by Mr. Alick Monraven (alias Maclean), was revived at the Stadttheater on November 18, and once more gained the enthusiastic approval of a crowded audience. It is so rare that operatic novelties last beyond their first season (unless they are by 'fashionable' composers), that Mr. Maclean's continued success is all the more gratifying. The work bids fair to prove a turning point in his career, and lead him to success in his native country also.

MÜLHEIM a/d RUHR.

Little has lately been heard of August Bungert, whose 'Odyssey' music-dramas created so much discussion some years ago. The silence which so suddenly closed round the undeniably gifted composer seems strange, and can, perhaps, only be accounted for by the ascendancy of Richard Strauss, and the existence of a few successful, and a very great number of unsuccessful, writers of one-act lyric dramas. That Bungert has gifts superior to those of the majority of these composers and would-be composers, was proved at a Bungert concert given here on November 22 by the (string) band of the 159th infantry regiment, under Kapellmeister Laetsch. The programme included a glowing symphonic poem, 'On the Wartburg,' some fragments from his music to Goethe's 'Faust,' an overture to an opera, 'Victrix love,' a fragment from the musical tragedy 'Kirke,' and some songs. Herr Bungert, who is a native of Mülheim, was greatly fêted.

MUNICH.

It seems passing strange that Richard Strauss meets with more opposition in this his native city than almost anywhere else. Whereas his new opera 'Salome' has been received with the utmost enthusiasm wherever it has been performed in the Fatherland, it was greeted with hisses—by a small minority of the audience, it is true—when it was performed here for the first time, on November 25, under the inspiring direction of Felix Mottl. Perhaps the good people of Munich cannot forgive the redoubtable Richard II. for having poked fun at them in his previous opera 'Feuersnot.'

PARIS.

A 'neo-classic symphony' by M. d'Harcourt was produced at the Lamoureux concert under M. Chevillard on November 11 with much success.——At the Colonne concert of November 25, a new orchestral work in two movements entitled 'Carillons flamands,' by M. A. Périlhou, was brought to a first hearing. The two movements are entitled 'Le glas (Bruges)' and 'Kermesse (Anvers).' They were received with great applause.——Another novelty was 'La halte divine,' by M. E. Trémisot, produced at the Lamoureux concert of December 2. It forms part of a large work in seven episodes bearing the strange title of 'La Bhagarad-Gî'a.'——A notable event was the production of the work which gained this year's Crescent prize, viz., the third symphony, with vocal soli and chorus, by M. J. Guy Ropartz, a pupil of César Franck. It is in three movements bearing programmatic titles. The symphony is the work of a master of his art, and it was enthusiastically received. The performance took place at the Conservatoire under the direction of M. Georges Marty.

ROME.

Elgar's 'Enigma' variations were performed here with much success at the popular concerts conducted by Signor Vessella.

TURIN.

A four-act biblical opera 'The Baptist,' by Giocondo Fino, was produced at the Victor Emanuel theatre and well received. The composer is a priest, while the author of the libretto, the composer's brother, is a barrister. At the same theatre a two-act opera 'Valda,' by Leopoldo Cassone, was produced with great success. It is the young composer's first attempt at lyric drama.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

Bangor (County Down).—The Harmonic Society gave the first concert of their third season on December 7 in the Dufferin Memorial Hall before a large audience. The choir, under the baton of Mr. Robert Jones, gave excellent renderings of 'Hear my prayer' (Mendelssohn) and 'The banner of St. George' (Elgar). The soloists were Miss Annie Hooson and Mr. Charles Keywood. The pianoforte and organ accompaniments were in the capable hands of Miss May Shepperd and Mr. A. F. Parker respectively.

Bedford.—The Musical Society gave its first concert of the season on November 27 in the Corn Exchange. The programme included Brahms's 'Song of destiny,' Beethoven's overture 'Coriolanus' and Bach's Suite in D for flute and orchestra. Pianoforte and violin solos were contributed with much success by Herr Backhaus and Herr Sebald respectively, the vocalist being Madame Lhombino. The band and chorus, numbering 250 performers, gave very satisfactory evidence of their abilities, and Dr. H. A. Harding directed the performance.

Blackburn.—The first concert given this season by the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union took place on December 10 in the Exchange Hall, when Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' was performed. The choruses throughout were well given, and the orchestra—selected as usual from Hallé's Orchestra—together with the choir, numbered 250 performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Parr, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Herbert Parker, Mr. Bridge Peters and Mr. Webster Millar. Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted.

Bromley (Kent).—The Choral Society opened its season in the Drill Hall on December 6 with a performance of Barnett's 'Ancient mariner,' which was well rendered by the choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. F. Fertel. The solo parts were sung by Miss Nellie Dunford, Miss Esther Franklin, Mr. F. H. Blamey and Mr. Graham Smart. The miscellaneous second part included Eaton Faning's part-song 'Liberty.'

Chelmsford.—Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and a miscellaneous selection were given at the first concert of the twenty-fifth season by the Musical Society, the band and chorus consisting of 130 performers, under the direction of Mr. F. R. Frye. Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor proved an attractive feature of the second part of the programme, Mrs. Waller (accompanist to the Society) playing the solo portion. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Sichel, Mr. Geoffrey George and Mr. Charles Norman; Mr. G. H. Wilby was principal violinist.

Cranleigh.—At the school concert on Wednesday, December 5, Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' were given, a most excellent performance of the latter being obtained. The solos were taken by H. A. Gates, soprano; B. T. Holland, alto; R. McD. Winder, baritone; C. V. Edwards, bass (all boys in the School), and Mr. W. F. Herbert, tenor, a master. The programme also included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, the Cranleigh School 'Football song,' and the School song 'Cranleiensis Gaudeamus.' Mr. W. A. Boxall led a small but efficient orchestra, and Mr. R. Harris conducted.

Faversham.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert in the Lecture Hall on December 13, when Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' and a miscellaneous programme, including Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor were most successfully performed under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Keech. The solo vocalists were Miss Lois Knollys, Mr. Malcombe Boyle and Mr. Robert Grice. Miss M. G. Jeffery admirably played the solo part in the concerto.

High Wycombe.—The first concert given by the High Wycombe and District Choral Association this season took place in the Town Hall on December 11, under the conductorship of Mr. George F. Andrews. The works performed were Cowen's 'St. John's eve' and Bridge's 'The ballad of the Clampherdown.' The latter work was conducted by the composer, who expressed himself as being extremely pleased with the singing of the choir. The vocalists were Miss Stella Maris, Miss Sybil Blunt, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. F. Aireton. The orchestra was led by Herr Ernst Groed, and Mr. C. H. Collins presided at the organ.

Hull.—An interesting concert, organized by Mr. W. D. Gardam, was given by the Musical Union on December 1, at the Imperial Hotel, the programme consisting entirely of songs and part-songs by Pinsuti. The excellently rendered part-music was conducted by Mr. J. R. Stringer, and Mr. Berkeley Mason was a sympathetic accompanist.

Kettering.—The Choral Society opened its season on December 6 in the Victoria Hall with a successful performance of 'Acis and Galatea,' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' The solo vocalists were Miss Maude Leake, Mr. William Maxwell and Mr. John Browning. Mr. J. W. Randall led the orchestra, and Mr. H. G. Gotch was the conductor.

Kidderminster.—The Choral Society performed the 'Messiah,' according to Prof. Prout's revised version, in the Town Hall on November 28. The choir of 130 sang with much spirit, and the solo vocalists were Madame Siviter, Miss Grace Ivell, Mr. Collins and Mr. Coleman. The orchestra was led by Mr. D. Reggal, Mr. Taylor presided at the organ, and Mr. Irving Elwes conducted.

Kimberley (Cape Colony).—The Musical Association gave its eighteenth concert in the Town Hall on November 7. The programme consisted of music by modern British composers only. The chief items were Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens.' Lloyd's 'The rosy dawn' and Mackenzie's 'Merry dwarfs' were also performed. The chief vocalists were Miss Henri van der Hoven and Mr. W. A. Carrington, and Mr. J. F. Proudman was the conductor.

KIRBYMOORSIDE.—The District Choral Society gave a very creditable rendering of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on December 13, conducted by Mr. G. F. Fletcher. The choir sang with much spirit, and a small orchestra was led by Mr. J. C. Frank, junr. Miss Lily Jeffrey sang the solos.

LEAMINGTON.—A Scottish concert was given by the Madrigal Society in the Winter Hall on November 22. The main features of interest in the programme were Charles Wood's 'Ballad of Dundee,' Mackenzie's 'Scotch' Rhapsody, a Scotch Choral Fantasia by Dr. J. Bell, German's 'Gipsy' Suite and Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave' Overture. There was a full orchestra and choir numbering 120, and the solo vocalists were Miss Nellie Finch and the Rev. Richard Spurrell. Mr. E. Roberts West was the conductor, and also appeared as solo pianist in Mendelssohn's Capriccio brillante in B minor, the orchestra in this instance being conducted by Mr. Guernsey West.

LINCOLN.—The Musical Society performed Berlioz's 'Faust' at the Corn Exchange on November 28. The choir, which had been effectively strengthened in the male voices for this concert, numbered 200 voices, and sang with great spirit and precision, while the orchestra consisted, as usual, principally of instrumentalists from the London Symphony and Philharmonic Orchestras. The solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Taggart (Margaret), Mr. Charles Saunders (Faust), Mr. Charles Tree (Mephistopheles), and Mr. C. H. Lofthouse (Brander). A very fine performance reflected great credit on Dr. G. J. Bennett.

MALTA.—The opening concert of the season by the Musical Union was given on December 6 in Lamplough Hall, Floriana, when the programme included Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, Cowen's 'Graceful dance' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' as its principal features. Mr. W. S. Robinson conducted.

PORTMADOC.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. Chas. McLean, performed Haydn's 'Creation' at the Town Hall on December 12. The solo vocalists were Miss Amy Evans, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys and Mr. Ivor Foster, and the orchestra was led by Mr. Vasco O. Akeroyd.

REPTON.—A concert was given by the Repton School Musical Society on December 5, when a selection from Haydn's 'Creation' and Parry's 'Pied piper of Hamelin' were the principal items of the programme. The choir consisted entirely of boys of the School, the solo parts being supplemented by two former members of the School—Mr. Francis Glynn and Mr. Douglas Hoare. Both choir and soloists entered with much spirit into the humour of Sir Hubert Parry's cantata, which was to be repeated on December 19. A small orchestra played the accompaniments, and performed Haydn's Symphony in C. Mr. Thomas Price conducted.

SEVENOAKS.—The St. John's Choral and Orchestral Society gave its fourteenth concert on December 12 in the Club Hall, when Handel's 'Samson' was performed by a choir and orchestra of 120 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. C. H. Bernard Aylwin led the orchestra and Mr. W. Taylor conducted.

STRETFORD.—The first open meeting of the Choral Society took place in the Town Hall on December 8, under the direction of Dr. T. Keighley. The main features of the programme were Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied piper,' and Elgar's 'As torrents in summer.' The solo vocalists were Miss Clara Broadbent, Mr. William Mair, Mr. F. Cooper and Mr. J. W. Farrow. Mr. James Lowe presided at the organ.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—Mr. Francis J. Foote's choir gave a concert on December 13 in the Opera House, assisted by a full professional orchestra. A highly interesting programme was presented, comprising Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Max Bruch's setting of the 23rd Psalm for men's voices, Dvorák's setting of the 149th Psalm (said to have been performed for the first time in England), and an orchestral tone-poem, 'Lancelot and Elaine' by Mr. Francis J. Foote, who conducted throughout. Herr Hans Wessely was the solo violinist, and played Mendelssohn's concerto.

Answers to Correspondents.

SEMI-DETACHED.—There has been no suggestion, so far as we know, on the part of the Government to tax pianos. One very strong reason against such an impost on the domestic instrument is that pianos are taxed quite enough by a good many people who play, or think they can play, upon them. Moscheles once suffered torture similar to your agonies by a next-door neighbour who played atrociously. At last Moscheles could stand it no longer, and, going into the house, he sat down at the pianoforte and brilliantly executed the piece that was being murdered, to the astonishment and collapse of the bungler who had worked such havoc with the eminent pianist's nerves. We do not, however, suggest that the methods of Moscheles should be adopted at Peckham, or in any other suburb of villainous villas.

OBOE.—In answer to your quintet of questions respecting the oboe, we have to state (1) that it is 'suitable for playing at home with the pianoforte'; (2) that it is a non-transposing instrument; (3) that it is possible 'in playing the oboe to be too sharp or too flat'; (4) that it is most desirable to purchase a good instrument, which would cost £8 or more, from makers of repute such as Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.; and (5) that the following pieces are suggested as being likely to afford pleasure to players and listeners: Four pieces (Op. 81), Notturno, Lied, Romanza and Scherzo (Hofmann); Nocturne (Luft); Serenade de Gounod and Fantaisie Originale (Lalliet); Souvenir (Proff); Bergerette (Provinciali); Serenade (Casella); La Cinquantaine, Serenade badine (Gabriel); Three Romances (Schumann); Badinage, Chant du Soir, and Menuet (Millet).

B. H. C.—Lalo's opera 'Le Roi d'Ys' was first performed in England at Covent Garden Theatre on July 17, 1901, when it was conducted by M. Plon. The work was successfully produced at the Opéra Comique, May 7, 1888. The libretto is a gloomy story founded on a Breton legend. The entirely mythical city of Ys is placed at Finisterre (Brittany.)

J. S. A.—The 'best method to gain a degree' is to qualify for it at one of the Universities. As you are an organist, perhaps you might feel your way by passing the examinations of the Royal College of Organists. The information that you are not a coward encourages us to advise you to battle with all difficulties and not be content with 'the easiest degree attainable.'

S. H. K.—Samuel Wesley composed three duets for the organ, of which two were published, but they are both out of print. We understand, however, that Mr. John E. West has under consideration the inclusion of one of these duets in his series of 'Old English Organ Music,' which he will probably arrange as a solo.

LEO.—The name of 'Leopold Wilhelm, of Nuremberg,' does not appear in Miss Stainer's primer of 'Violin makers.' In order to obtain a reliable opinion upon the instrument and its value, you could not do better than submit it to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, would examine your violin and report.

S. E. B.—It might be difficult to compile a list of all the musical settings of George Macdonald's poems, and it would probably be too long for insertion in this column. Perhaps you would mention any specific lines that take your fancy, and then we would ascertain if they have been wedded to music.

ROSEBANK.—Yes, a collection of chants arranged for men's voices is published by Messrs. Novello. At St. Paul's Cathedral Gregorian chants are sung to the Psalms when the boys of the choir are absent.

C. W. P.—Stainer's tune 'Covenant' to 'The God of Abraham praise,' is not published separately in leaflet form, but doubtless the printing of 100 copies, or more, could be arranged.

ARGYLE.—No article on the cathedral you name has appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES. Unfortunately its history—musical and otherwise—is very modern.

G. B.—Dr. Miller's 'Elements of thorough bass and composition,' for which you paid two shillings, is not of abnormal value, either historical, practical, or intrinsical.

A. A. H.—We cannot express an opinion upon teachers and the methods they use, but we have heard the gentleman you name well spoken of.

INTRODUCTION
AND ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s. ; Quartet Parts, 4s. ; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.
The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.
The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.
It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for he orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.
It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.
The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.
The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.
Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.
Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue ; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet ; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

Seventh and Revised Edition.

A HANDBOOK
OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC
CONTAINING 600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS
BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,
Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians ; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.
Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC
EDITED BY ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.
Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

A SACRED CANTATA

RECALLING SCENES IN THE LAST DAYS OF THE SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BARITONE) AND CHORUS

INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

1. On the Way to Jerusalem. 2. Before Jerusalem.
3. In the Temple. 4. The Mount of Olives.
5. A New Commandment. 6. Gethsemane.
7. Betrayed and Forsaken. 8. Before Pilate.
9. The March to Calvary. 10. Calvary.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Vocal Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence ;
Paper boards, Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.
String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts, 13s. 6d. ; Full Score MS.

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously without becoming secular, and to meet the requirements of average choirs and congregations while preserving the dignity and solemnity of English Church Music. His Cantata is a happy example of his talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choirmasters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skilful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the choral writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of melodic beauty and musicianly interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

The music which Mr. Maunder has written is marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be impressive.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A glance at the vocal score reveals a style of composition calculated to please, the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. The soli are lyrical and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

Organists and choirmasters will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the choir and congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

EDITED BY EBENEZER PROUT.

The English Translation by the Rev. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls") and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

Price One Shilling.
Words only, 10s. per 100.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

The English Adaptation by
FRED. J. W. CROWE
(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

The Accompaniments arranged for the Organ by H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904. F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves), will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score. H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Staffordshire Correspondent, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE INDEBTEDNESS OF HANDEL TO WORKS BY OTHER COMPOSERS

BY

SEDLEY TAYLOR, M.A.,

Formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

This book gives sufficient materials for independent judgment on Handel's indebtedness to predecessors or contemporaries. The task of singling out the compositions on which Handel drew has already been performed, but till now actual comparison has necessitated the hunting-up and confronting of corresponding passages, not infrequently complicated by need of transposition. Here, in a single volume, a study of the whole subject is presented, and the process of comparison made easy by the collocation of musical extracts, aided wherever requisite by transposition.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemplative than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—compiled with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautiful and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

TECHNIQUE
AND EXPRESSION
IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING
BY
FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

Small Orchestra Arrangement (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

THE ORGAN WORKS
OF JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

EDITED BY

J. F. BRIDGE, MUS. DOC., OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC., OXON.

IN this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1a) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2a) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3a) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1b) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2b) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3b) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1a and 1b are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2a and 2b, 3a and 3b, and so on.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

NOVELLO'S
CHORISTER SERIES
CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services — Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

VON BÜLOW says:

> "For a pianist, three things are necessary—the first is Technique, the second is Technique, and the third is Technique."

The MACDONALD SMITH System is indispensable for all who wish to attain the highest degree of proficiency in Touch and Technique with a minimum of work.

Mr. ——— holds the diploma of the Leipzig Conservatoire, and is a L.R.A.M. (performer and teacher), yet he writes, after practising the Exercises of the first TWO LESSONS only of the Course:

"December 13, 1906.

"As you advised, I have stopped all technical practice (most willingly, too) and yet can play much better than at any previous time."

Complete Course of Six Lessons by Correspondence, Three Guineas (by Instalments if preferred).

Write for book, 16pp., post-free.

TO MUSIC MASTERS AND TEACHERS OF THE VIOLIN.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

MODERN VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS

suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

"Mr. Samuel Masters possesses a remarkably fine voice of extraordinary power. His ringing top A's, which were produced without effort, completely filled the large hall, and undoubtedly Mr. Masters is one of the finest tenors ever heard in St. Albans. Anything more beautiful could hardly be imagined than his magnificent rendering of 'Sound an alarm,' while very artistic was his treatment of 'Call forth thy powers' and 'How vain is man.'"—Hertfordshire Mercury, April 26, 1906.

Wigan and District Philharmonic Society ("Judas Maccabæus").
"Mr. Samuel Masters sang with dramatic skill and fire: his upper notes are full and telling and of fine power. He aroused the enthusiastic feelings of his audience by his powerful declamation in 'Sound an alarm,' while the beauty of his voice was well brought out in 'How vain is man.'"—The Wigan Observer, December 29, 1906.

Leicester New Musical Society ("Jephtha").
"Mr. Samuel Masters' rendering of the music allotted to Jephtha was of a high order of artistic accomplishment. It reached its highest level in the dramatic recitative 'Deeper and deeper still' and the favourite air 'Waft her, angels,' which was beautifully sung. He also gave a spirited rendering of 'His mighty arm' and the difficult air 'Open thy marble jaws.'"—Leicester Daily Post, December 11, 1906.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

Sir Christopher Wren is always associated with St. Paul's, his magnificent monument, but it must not be forgotten that he had an official connection with the old cathedral also. As Dr. Wren he was employed soon after the Restoration to repair the cathedral, which was then in a very ruinous and neglected state. His scheme—the plans of which still exist—included the entire removal of the central tower and 'reducing this middle space into a spacious dome or rotunda, as being that by this means the church will be rendered spacious in the middle, which may be a very proper place for a vast auditory.' In spite of the incongruity of placing a dome of the Italian style upon a Gothic church, Dr. Wren had full authority to carry it out, and was only prevented from doing so by the Great Fire of 1666.

Immediately after the fire Dr. Wren, F.R.S., who had been appointed deputy surveyor-general and principal architect for rebuilding the whole city, began to fit up a portion of the dilapidated cathedral for temporary use in divine service. On January 15, 1667, King Charles II. issued an order stating that 'It being thought necessary in the mean time (till it shall please God to bless us with a more favourable juncture for doing something more lasting and magnificent) that some part of that venerable pile be forthwith restored to its religious use—was this day ordered that a choir and auditory for present use be forthwith set out.' A portion of the nave, covered with a wooden roof below the triforium gallery, was made available for the services, which continued to be held until 1673; but at present there is nothing to show whether an organ was erected, or whether the services were fully choral. Certain it is that the patching process went on, not however without producing symptoms of mal de mer in Mr. Pepys, who records in his Diary (September 14, 1668): 'Up betimes, and walked to the Temple, and stopped, viewing the Exchange, and St. Paul's, where strange how the very sight of the stones falling from the top of the steeple do make me sea-sick!'

The Dean of St. Paul's (Sancroft) was most anxious to build an entirely new cathedral. Wren (who was knighted in 1672) thereupon submitted a plan which, although approved by the King, failed to satisfy the cathedral clergy. The design was a Greek cross—a cross with four equal arms—with a great dome in the centre. The building committee rejected this plan as 'departing too far from the Gothic,' and because in the short eastern arm the space would have been totally insufficient for the usual arrangements of sanctuary and choir. Wren then set to work on other designs, being not a little hampered and hindered in developing them by amateur criticisms. At length, after having made many plans, he produced one that was finally accepted by the King, because, in the terms of the Royal Warrant for commencing the building, 'we found it very artificial [artistic], proper, and useful.' Wren had authority to make certain modifications of this design which might seem to him desirable, with the result that he evolved from his genius-mind the noble edifice which is one of the glories of English architecture.

It was not until nearly eight years after the fire that Wren (on May-Day, 1674) began to clear the ground for the foundations of the new cathedral. When he came to the middle tower—which formerly bore the steeple and which still stood some 200 feet high—he found it to be so strongly built that he blew it up with gunpowder. This blowing-up process was continued, in his absence, by one of his subordinates, with the result that a stone was shot across the churchyard into a house where some women were seated at work. Upon being ordered to use no more gunpowder, Wren resorted to the methods of the battering-ram. We are told that thirty men so 'vibrated this machine' that it 'beat in one place against the wall the whole day.' As the operation had no immediate effect, they were disposed to give up the task, but the great architect bid them not despair but try, try again. The next day the walls began to tremble at the top, and in a few hours the tower fell. Thus encouraged, Wren continued to use the battering-ram for levelling all the walls that remained of Old St. Paul's.

The first stone of the new building was laid on June 21, 1675, some authorities say by Wren, others by Thomas Strong, the master mason. Neither King, Archbishop, nor even Lord Mayor seem to have been present on so important an occasion, nor is any ceremony recorded. Such good progress was made with the building that the choir was opened for divine service on December 2, 1697, a day of thanksgiving for the peace on the Treaty of Ryswick. Concerning this service Macaulay says:

> William III. had announced his intention of being one of the congregation. But it was represented to him that, if he persisted in that intention, 300,000 people would assemble to see him pass, and all the parish churches of London would be left empty. He therefore attended the service in his own chapel at Whitehall. . . . . At St. Paul's the magistrates of the City appeared in all their state. Compton [Bishop of London] ascended, for the first time, a throne rich with the sculpture of Gibbons, and thence exhorted a numerous and splendid assembly. His discourse has not been preserved, but its purport may be easily guessed, for he preached on that noble Psalm: 'I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord.' He doubtless reminded his hearers that, in addition to the debt which was common to them with all Englishmen, they owed as Londoners a peculiar debt of gratitude to the divine goodness, which had permitted them to efface the last trace of the ravages of the great fire, and to assemble once more for prayer and praise, after so many years, on that spot consecrated by the devotions of thirty generations.

The north-west chapel was opened on February 1, 1699, and in 1710 the top-stone of the lantern was laid by the son of the great architect. (The ball and cross were subsequently added.) Thus the splendid structure occupied thirty-five years in building, and forty-four years had elapsed since its Gothic predecessor had fallen a victim to the flames. One of the most remarkable things about St. Paul's is that it was built during the episcopate of one bishop of London (Compton), under one architect (Wren), and one master mason (Thomas Strong). The cost of its erection was largely met by a tax on all coal that entered the city, and partly by private contributions from all parts of the country. Various estimates have been given as to the actual cost of the building at the time of its completion: if the estimated sum of one million sterling be accepted, then, according to the value of money at the present day, the cost was £5,000,000. During the whole time of the building Wren received a salary of only £200 per annum. It seems nothing short of a scandal that in 1718, the eighty-sixth year of his age, he should have been suspended as architect in favour of William Benson, because the latter was said to have been a favourite in high places. The venerable architect retired to his residence at Hampton Court and 'resumed his philosophical studies with as great delight as ever.' Once a year, however, this famous octogenarian used to find his way to the cathedral where, seated beneath its mighty dome, he would contemplate his majestic masterpiece. Wren lived to the great age of ninety-one. He died in 1723, and his remains rest in the crypt of the cathedral, beneath a plain black marble slab bearing an inscription concluding with the well-known words: 'Lector, si monumentum requiris, circumspice' (Reader, if you would see his monument, look around you). At the suggestion of Mylne, then the Cathedral Surveyor, this inscription was placed early in the last century on the west front of the organ screen, now in the north transept, as we see it. Barham in his 'Ingoldsby Legends' thus refers to the word Circumspice:

> Which an erudite Verger translated to me,
> 'If you ask for his monument, Sir-come-spy-see!'

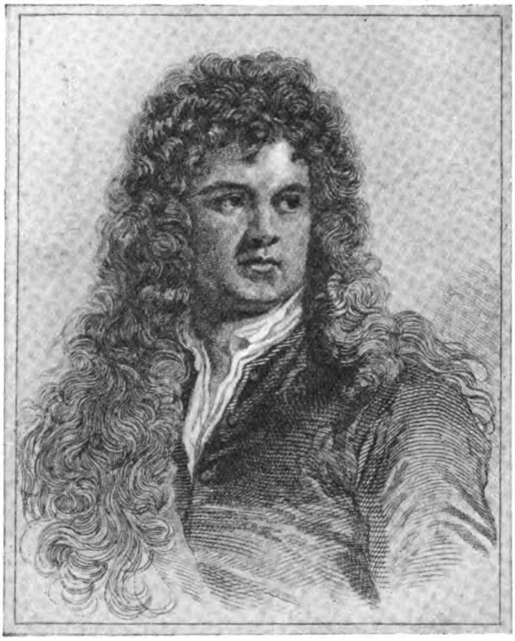
The dimensions of the cathedral are as follows:

	FEET.
External length	515
Transepts	250
Diameter of dome at the first stage (about)	140
Height of cross from the ground	365
Height of western towers	221

Any attempt to describe technically or in detail the architecture of St. Paul's Cathedral would be much beyond the scope of this article. Its external and internal features are so familiar, either from personal observation or pictorial representation, that such a description is unnecessary. A few characteristics may, however, be referred to. The plan of this most important Renaissance church in England is that of a Latin cross. Unlike other English cathedrals it is classic in design. It has been well said that the dome, which is by far the most magnificent and elegant feature in the building, rises from the body of the church in great majesty. It may safely be affirmed that for dignity and elegance no dome in Europe affords an example worthy of comparison with this. It should be observed that the true dome, that which is seen from the interior of the building, is only one of three. Wren 'would have been content to finish off the building at the height of this inner, lower dome,' but he acceded to a general wish to heighten the edifice so as to give a greater elevation to the cathedral; the lantern with the ball and cross form a splendid climax to a wonderful conception. The ordinary passer-by is unaware that there is a difference between the interior and exterior walls. As a matter of fact the upper order is simply a screen to hide the flying buttresses, and, moreover, to add strength to the great arches of the superstructure. The balustrade was added at the insistence of the building committee, but strongly against Wren's wish. He says: 'Persons of little skill in architecture did expect, I believe, to see something they had been used to in Gothic structures, and ladies think nothing well without an edging.' It was to meet the Gothic predilections of the committee that Wren added the clerestory to his original design, above the attic, in order to obtain a semblance of Gothic, or, as he put it, 'to reconcile, as near as possible, the Gothic to a better manner of architecture.'



GRINLING GIBBONS.
(After a portrait by Sir Godfrey Kneller.)

The details of the magnificent carving by Grinling Gibbons of the stalls in the choir are shown in the photograph on p. 83. For his work this consummate artist received the odd sum of £1,333 7*s.* 5*d.* No less beautiful than the handiwork of Gibbons is the exquisite ironwork, gates and grilles, of Tijou, of which a most graceful example is shown in the photograph opposite. In connection with the refined work of this master craftsman, Mr. T. Francis Bumpus writes:

> Jean Tijou was a Frenchman, but nothing whatever concerning his parentage or his life has been ascertained in France, and there is no record of any works having been executed by him there, although the production and names of nearly every skilled smith during Tijou's period are known. It is probable, therefore, that he left his native country while young and unknown. Sir Christopher Wren was his great patron in this country in 1665, when he wrote home 'My business is now to pry into trades and arts. I put myself into all shapes to humour them; it is a comedy to me, and although sometimes expenseful, I am loth to leave it.' Tijou's works may be seen at Hampton Court, Chatsworth, Burleigh House near Stamford; some iron balustrades which formerly separated the Home Park from the Long Walk at Hampton Court are now at the South Kensington Museum.
> It is singular that no mention of Wren is to be found in the peroration on the frontispiece of 'A new Booke of Drawings invented & desined by John Tijou . . . sold by the Author in London, 1693,' an interesting volume reproduced by Mr. J. Starkie Gardiner and published by Mr. B. T. Batsford in 1898. The entries relating to Tijou in the accounts of the building of St. Paul's, still preserved in the Cathedral Library, commenced with the year of the publication of the above book in 1693 and continue until 1711. With this date, all the documentary evidence with regard to Tijou ends. He certainly may have ceased working then, or perhaps only his long connection with Wren may have ended. Tijou's daughter married Laguerre, the painter.

At Wren's death the cathedral was left in a severely undecorated condition of cold nakedness. To what extent Sir Christopher designed a system of decoration is not fully known, except that he wished to line the dome with mosaics. Beyond the paintings of Sir James Thornhill (1675-1734) in the dome, nothing practical was attempted in the way of decorating the cathedral until nearly 150 years after its completion. The Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of the Prince of Wales (now King Edward VII.) in 1872, gave the impetus to the present elaborate mosaic work begun in 1892 and so skilfully designed and carried out under the direction of Sir W. B. Richmond, R.A., K.C.B. No stained glass found its way into St. Paul's prior to the year 1867, when Mr. Thomas Brown, of the firm of Longmans & Co., presented the great west window. Mr. T. F. Bumpus, in his 'The Cathedrals of England and Wales,' has, however, shown that early in the 18th century a Joshua Price, one of a family of eminent glass painters, petitioned the House of Commons to allow him to put stained glass into the central window of the upper tier in the apse of St. Paul's. This petition concludes thus:

> You'll [Parliament] be pleased to admit him to the Honour of shewing his Talent, in the upper Window towards the East, by painting the Figure of St. Paul, which Ornament Proportioned thereto, for the further Beautifying that Pompous and admired Structure, the charge whereof will be justly worth One Hundred and Fifty pounds, and the Petitioner, as in Duty bound, shall ever Pray.
> Joshua Price, Glass Painter, at his House in Holbourn, near Hatton Garden.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer of that day evidently had not £150 to spare, as nothing seems to have resulted from Mr. Price's petition.

The bells of the cathedral are placed in the two western towers. In the southern tower—which contains the remarkable geometrical staircase designed by Wren—is the bell weighing 5 tons 4 cwt., on which the hours are struck, and it is tolled at the death of a member of the Royal Family, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Dean, or of the Lord Mayor. Beneath this is the bell known as 'Great Paul,' weighing 17 tons, cast by Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, and placed in position in 1882. 'Great Paul' is rung for a short service in the north-west chapel at 1.15 daily. The north tower contains the peal of twelve bells introduced at the instigation of Sir John Stainer: its tenor bell weighs 62 cwt., and this fine peal is the heaviest in England, if not in the world.

The Crypt of the cathedral is the resting-place of some of England's most illustrious sons. Heroes like Nelson and Wellington; statesmen such as Sir Bartle Frere and Sir George Grey; and are not Sir Christopher Wren and John Rennie giants in their respective spheres? The sister arts of painting and music are worthily represented. Here sleep their last sleep five Presidents of the Royal Academy of Arts: Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Benjamin West, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Lord Leighton, and Sir John Everett Millais, Bart.; in addition to Turner, Landseer, Cruikshank, and Boehm, the eminent sculptor.

Three masters of English church music—two of them former organists of St. Paul's—who here rest from their labours but who being dead yet speak, are Dr. Boyce, Dr. Greene (whose remains were removed from the church of St. Olave's Jewry, in 1888), and Thomas Attwood—'dear old Attwood' as Mendelssohn called him, and to whom he dedicated his 'Three Organ Preludes and Fugues' (Op. 37) 'with reverence and gratitude.' Six years have passed since the mortal remains of Sir Arthur Sullivan were placed in this sanctuary of the great departed. In the crypt are monuments to Miss Maria Hackett, the choristers' friend, and Sir John Goss, a former organist, while in the east aisle of the north transept of the cathedral are memorials of Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir John Stainer, the last-named a distinguished organist of St. Paul's. It should not be forgotten that the first part of the funeral service of Sir Joseph Barnby took place in the cathedral on February 4, 1896.

Some memorable Thanksgiving Services have been held at St. Paul's Cathedral, beginning with that to celebrate the Peace of Ryswick in 1697, at the opening of the Choir, to which reference has already been made. On November 12, 1702, eight months after her accession, Queen Anne attended the cathedral in order to take part in the national thanksgiving for the success of John, Duke of Marlborough, and the British army in the Low Countries, and for the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the port of Vigo by the Duke of Ormond and Sir George Rooke. An Order in Council decreed that for that day St. Paul's should become the Queen's Chapel Royal, and that all arrangements should be in the hands of the Lord Chamberlain. This transference of authority became the model and precedent for royal receptions at St. Paul's. Marlborough's chain of successes caused the Queen to attend no fewer than eight Thanksgiving Services within ten years. An old print giving an illustration of the service on December 31, 1706 (a Thanksgiving for the battle of Ramillies), shows that a full orchestra of instruments, seated near the organ (then on the choir screen), took part in the pæan of praise on that occasion. Charles King's bright little anthem, 'Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous,' was one of the pieces performed at that service. In an old manuscript score in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus, it is headed, 'Sung at the Thanksgiving at St. Paul's, December 31, 1706, upon ye successes of ye foregoing campaign.'

King George III., during his long reign, paid several State visits to the cathedral. It is well within living memory that on February 27, 1872, Queen Victoria attended a special Thanksgiving Service for the recovery from illness of the Prince of Wales (now King Edward VII.); and who can forget that most memorable occasion—June 22, 1897—when the venerable Queen took part in a solemn service of thanksgiving for the completion of sixty years of her happy and eventful reign? That unique and pathetically grand service was held on the western steps, the music being under the direction of Sir George Martin, organist of the cathedral. An inscription has been cut at the foot of the steps to mark the spot where the Queen's carriage stood at that great event in the history of our beloved land.

The Library is a specially attractive spot to the book-lover by reason of its treasures and the variety of its contents.

Sit here and muse!—It is an antique Room;
High-roof'd, with casement, through whose purple panes
Unwilling Daylight steals amidst the gloom
Shy as a fearful Stranger.
Hark! while we muse, without the walls is heard
The various murmur of the labouring crowd.
How still, within those archive cells interr'd,
The Calm Ones reign. LORD LYTTON.

Well-housed and carefully arranged and catalogued, the books have found a home in a spacious apartment (of which a photograph is given on page 81) placed high above the south aisle of the nave at the extreme west end of the building. The gallery is supported by exquisitely carved wooden brackets executed by Jonathan Mayne at a cost of £8 10*s.* each, while the flooring consists of 2,300 pieces of oak, inlaid, and without pegs or nails. Although the Fire of London destroyed a large part of the old collection of books, the archives still contain over 2,000 manuscripts relating to the cathedral and dating back to the 11th century, as the Ninth Report in the Historical Manuscripts Commission (1883) testifies. Over the fireplace is a portrait of Henry Compton, Bishop of London from 1675 to 1714, who practically started the collection by bequeathing half his library to the cathedral. It is interesting to learn that a former librarian and minor canon was the Rev. Richard Harris Barham, author of 'The Ingoldsby Legends,' while the name of William Sparrow Simpson, formerly sub-dean, succentor, and minor canon, should ever be held in grateful remembrance for the care he bestowed upon the treasures committed to his charge as librarian, and for the excellent catalogue which he prepared and published in 1893.

It is only possible within the limits of space to refer to a few of the books and manuscripts. The handwriting of two Kings of England is to be seen in the following documents concerning the rebuilding of the cathedral after the fire:

> I will give one thousand pounds a yeare
> Whithall 20 March 167$\frac{7}{8}$
> CHARLES R.

> I will give two hundred pounds a yeare to begin from midsommer last past. July 17, 1678.
> JAMES.

The 'Merry Monarch,' however, never fulfilled his promise; he doubtless had other claims upon his private purse. Not so Queen Victoria. Here is her fine signature against a promise of £1,000 towards the decoration scheme—promised at the Thanksgiving Service in 1872, at the recovery of her eldest son, and duly paid. The librarian, the Rev. W. P. Besley, hands us a treasure which seems to have found its way—how or when is not known—from Westminster. It is a 'Deed relating to the Obits and Services in Henry the Seventh's Chapel, Westminster Abbey,' really a 'Deed of Penalties' of the year 1504. This richly illuminated manuscript—its colours of 400 years ago are still most brilliant—is thus described by Dr. Sparrow Simpson:

> A manuscript very sumptuously bound in velvet, lined with damask, with green silk tassels at the corners. On each side are five silver-gilt bosses; those at the four corners bear a portcullis, on a ground party per pale argent and vert: that in the centre bears the royal arms, with supporters, surmounted by a crown. Three clasps of enamelled silver, bearing Tudor roses, close the book. Pendent from it are four silver boxes (one box is imperfect) containing fragments of seals: the boxes are inscribed—
> Si . Archi̅ . cant. S. Capi . Winton
> Si . Capitōl . canto.
> whilst the fourth box bears on one side the arms, Gules, two keys in saltire or, impaling the arms of the Confessor. And on the other side, these two coats of arms impaling each other in chief; and below, Azure, on a chief indented or a pastoral staff paleways and a mitre gules, for Westminster Abbey. The velvet cover extends nearly a foot below the volume, and covers the seal-boxes. The initial letter represents King Henry VII. seated, giving this very volume to Abbot Islip, who kneels before him; behind the Abbot are four kneeling monks.

An interesting historical manuscript is the Vow of King Charles I., set forth in these words:

> I, A.B. doe here promiſe and ſolemly vow in the preſence, and for the ſervice of Almighty God, that if it shall pleaſe His Divine Ma^{ty} of His infinite goodneſſe to restore Mee to my iust Kingly rights, and to reestabliſh Mee in my Throne, I will wholy give backe to His Church all thoſe Impropriations w^{ch} are now held by the Crowne: and what Landes ſoeuer I now doe, or should enioy, w^{ch} have been taken away either from any Epiſcopall See, or any Cathedrall or Collegiate Church, from any Abby or other religious houſe, I likewiſe promiſe for hereafter to hold them from the Church, under ſuch reaſonable fines and rents as shall bee ſet downe by ſome conſcientious perſonne, whom I promiſe to chooſe wth all uprightneſſe of heart to direct Mee in this particular. And I most humbly beſeech God to accept of this my Vow, and to bleſſe Mee in the deſignes I haue now in hand through Jesus Christ Our Lord:
> (Signed) Charles R. Amen.
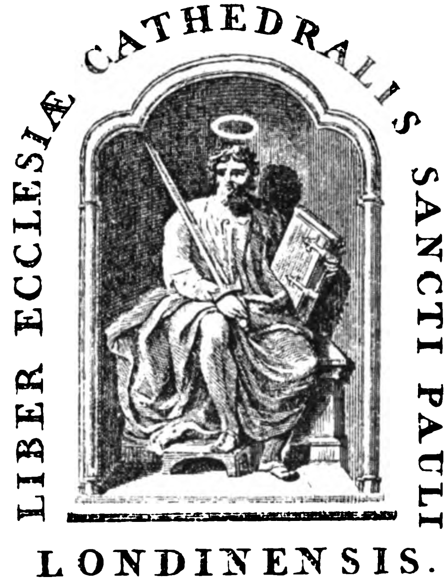
> Oxford 13. Ap: 1646.

A Psalterium cum Kalendario is probably one of the old service books formerly in use at the cathedral. Folio 9 contains the hymn Primo dierum omnium, with its musical notation on a staff of four red lines. The initial B of Psalm I. is formed of interlaced work on a burnished gold panel, with figures of our Lord, and of the devil who is playing a violin! The musical manuscripts include the autographs of Dr. John Blow's anthem, scored for strings and trumpets, 'Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord,' and Goss's 'O taste and see,' this manuscript being dated '22nd Jany., 1863,' in addition to Sir George Martin's Service in A.

Bibles and Psalters of olden times naturally find a place on these shelves. 'I believe this book to be worth £1,000' says Mr. Besley as he hands us the first edition of Tyndale's New Testament, published at Antwerp in 1526, of which the only other copy known is in the library of the Baptist College, Bristol. This is the first complete English edition of the New Testament—a precious tome which Ames calls 'The phœnix of the library.' In its original state the leaves of the Gospels and Epistles were purposely and ingeniously intermixed so as to disguise and disfigure its contents. Unfortunately its ancient form has been completely destroyed. To quote from Dr. Simpson:

> The sheets have been arranged in proper sequence and the volume rebound, thus destroying what in all probability was a contemporary binding, and, what is even more to be deplored, the striking evidence that the copy originally afforded of the methods adopted to disguise and disfigure the interdicted volumes in order to avoid detection in those early days of the Reformation, when the reading and possession of any part of the Bible in the vernacular tongue were strictly prohibited, and the search for copies vigorously carried out with a view to their destruction.



LIBER ECCLESIÆ CATHEDRALIS SANCTI PAULI
LONDINENSIS.

THE BOOK PLATE OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL LIBRARY.

A volume—which Barham (of Ingoldsby fame) regarded as 'the gem of the library'—is the quarto edition of Taverner's New Testament, 1539, which 'I believe to be unique,' says Barham in some notes thereto prefixed. He calls attention to some remarkable misprints, for instance:

> 1 John 5, 17.—All ryghtwisenes is syn.
> Revelation 17, 10.—They are also seven kynges, fyve are fallen, and one is, and an other is, and an other is not yet come. [Total = eight kings!]
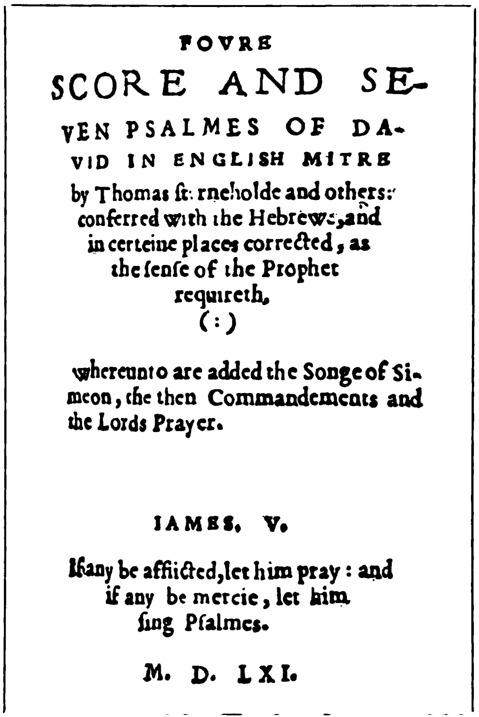
> 1 Corinthians 15, 48.—As is the earthly, suche are they that are hevenly.

Another unique volume is a tiny tome, measuring $7\frac{5}{8} \times 5\frac{3}{8}$ inches, of which we give the title-page in facsimile:



FOVRE
SCORE AND SE-VEN PSALMES OF DA-VID IN ENGLISH MITRE
by Thomas ſternholde and others:
conferred with the Hebrewe, and in certeine places corrected, as the ſenſe of the Prophet requireth.
(:)

whereunto are added the Songe of Simeon, the then Commandements and the Lords Prayer.

IAMES. V.

If any be afflicted, let him pray: and if any be mercie, let him ſing Pſalmes.

M. D. LXI.

The reader will naturally notice two curious misprints in the above title—'then' for 'ten,' and 'mercie' instead of 'merrie.'

This Psalter, 'The Forme of Prayers and Ministration of the Sacremēts &c. ſed in the Engliſh Church at Geneua,' and Calvin's 'The Catechisme of Maner to teache children the Christian religion,' which forms one book, was printed by Zacharie Durand, at Geneva. Of the sixty-three tunes, well printed in diamond-shaped notes (melody only), in the Psalter:

> Twenty-two had appeared in both previous editions, 14 in the edition of 1560 only, and 2 in the edition of 1556 only. The rest were new. Among the new tunes will again be found several French importations. The tunes for the English 50th and 104th are the French tunes for the same psalms. The 100th is the French 134th, the 113th the French 36th, the 122nd the French 3rd, the 125th the French 21st, the 126th the French 90th. The 145th and 148th are also called 'French' by Ravenscroft. Thus far there is no sign of any other direct influence. The imported tunes, so far as can be discovered, are all French; and the rest are English imitations in the same style.

The 21,000 volumes in the library, together with bound volumes of pamphlets, include some special series of books, in addition to a large collection of maps, prints, and seals. London topography is well represented, also the Plays acted by the children (choristers) of St. Paul's. Among the additions due to the industry and watchfulness of Dr. Sparrow Simpson, mention must be made of 10,000 pamphlets which he purchased during his term of office, and the large number of sermons preached at Paul's Cross. These open-air discourses bear some quaint titles; for example:

1555. A notable and very fruictefull sermon.
1582. A sermon no lesse fruitfull then famous . . . by R. Wimbledon . . . and found hid in a wall. [This homily reached a fifteenth edition.]
1585. A counter-poyson, modestly written for the time.
1609. Love's complaint, for Want of Entertainment.
1613. The White Devil, or the Hypocrite Uncased.
1616. The laver of the heart; or Bath of sanctification.
1627. The White Wolfe.
1628. Tormenting Tophet, or a Terrible description of Hell.
1640. The Love-sicke Spouse.

The earliest sermon preached in the cathedral that is preserved in the library is that by Dr. Colet (c. 1511), Dean of St. Paul's and founder of St. Paul's School. It is unfortunately incomplete, but a perfect copy is in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth.

St. Paul's became a book centre even in the 16th century. In an interesting paper read before the London and Middlesex Archæological Society on 'St. Paul's Cathedral, and its early literary associations,' Mr. Charles Welch, F.S.A., late chief librarian of the Guildhall Library, said that of thirty-two booksellers and printers in London in the year 1556, fifteen lived in St. Paul's Churchyard. From Mr. Welch's long list of names we select the following, with the quaint signs of their business premises:

JOHN BALE 1549. Wythin Paules chayne, at the sygne of S. John Baptist.
JOHN CASE 1550. Sygne of the Baule in Paules churcheyarde.
JOHN CAWOOD 1546-1578. Sygne of the Holy Ghost, Poules churcheyarde.
JOHN DAY 1572. St. Paul's Churchyard.
RICHARD FAWKES 1509-1530. Powles Churcheyarde, at the Sygne of the A. B. C.
JOHN GOUGH 1537-1543. The Mermaid in Cheapside, next to Paul's Gate.
JOHN GYBKEN 1551. Sprede Egle, Paules Church-yarde.
WILLIAM HILL 1548. Signe of the Grene Hyll in Paules Churche Yarde.
RICHARD JUGGE 1546-1577. Bible at the North door of Paules Church.
JOHN KINGSTONE 1553-1583. Poules Churchyarde at the West door.
ROGER MADELEY 1553. Sign of the Starre in Paules Churche yearde.
JULIAN NOTARY (early 16th cent.). Dwellynge in powlys Chyrche yarde besyde ye weste dore by my lordes palyes.
HENRY PEPWELL 1518-1521. Holy Trynyte, Poules Churchyarde.
THOMAS PETYT 1521-1554. Sygne of the Mayden's heede in Paules Churchyearde.
JOHN RASTELL 1528-1536. In the Cheapesyde at the sygne of the Meremayde nexte pouley's gate.
WILLIAM SERES (16th cent.). Hedgehog at the West end of Paul's Church.
HENRY SUTTON 1553-1562. Black Boy in Paul's Churchyard.
WILLIAM TELOTSON 1544. West dore of Paules.
JOHN TURK [1550?] Cock in Paul's Churchyard.
ABRAHAM VELE 1548-1586. Lamb in Paul's Churchyard.
REGINALD WOLF 1542-1573. The Brazen Serpent in St. Paul's Churchyard.

The portrait of Sir Christopher Wren, which forms one of our Special Supplements, is photographed from the original painting by Sir Godfrey Kneller in the National Portrait Gallery. For the facsimile signature of Sir Christopher we are indebted to the kindness of the Rev. W. P. Besley, minor canon and librarian of St. Paul's. It is taken from the first Paybook—Michaelmas, 1675 to Michaelmas, 1676—of the building of the cathedral. Here are set out the minutest details of payments to everyone engaged upon the work, from the eminent architect down to the humblest labourer, including all their names, together with the cost of materials, cartage, &c. The first salary payment reads :

> To S^{r} Christopher Wren, Knt. Surveyor Gen^{ll} of his ma^{tes} works, & Survey^{r} also of these works for his directions in the work this moneth [October, 1675] - - - - - £16 13*s.* 04*d.*

A brief biography of Sir Christopher is given on p. 94.

The concluding portion of this article will be devoted to the organs and organists of the cathedral and other matters musical.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE CHOIR ORGAN.

In Germany the Positive seems early to have increased in size until it was no longer portable, and then to have been incorporated with the Great organ. It was placed either in front of the Great (as in English cathedrals at a later date), and called the Brustpositiv, or behind it, and called the Rückpositiv. In England this incorporation took place very gradually during the 16th century, at the end of which the Little organ was still, in some churches, detached from the Great. The transition stage appears in the records of Waltham Abbey at the Dissolution in 1540, where there were a 'large pair of organs above, on the north side of the choir, and a lesser pair beneath.' They were close together, but apparently not joined.

The Reformation did away with the Rood, and left the centre of the screen empty. We have seen that there was frequently a Little organ on the screen: it must have stood on one or other side of, or perhaps behind, the Rood. With the abolition of the Rood there was space for the Great, which was no larger than a Continental Positive, and the rapidly-increasing demands on the executive powers of performers would make the advantage of placing both instruments under the control of a single skilled executant obvious. The Great organ was therefore placed in the middle of the screen, the Little organ was fixed to it, projecting towards the choir, the organist was placed between the two, and the combined instruments were called a Double organ. The key action of the Little organ was carried under the feet of the player. At first there was no stop action: the sliders were simply pushed in and out by hand, as in a German Positive in the collection of the Rev. F. W. Galpin, and as figured in Prætorius. Afterwards, when stop knobs were introduced, they were in the Little organ itself, behind the player's back, who had to prepare them before he commenced to play, as is the case in some Spanish organs to-day.

When the Rood loft had become by custom the normal place for the two organs, Great and Little, the Little took the name of Choir organ, not because it had any special connection with the choral body, but because it faced towards the choir of the church. It was also called the Chair organ, since it supported the player's seat. In course of time it was found convenient to place the keyboards on the north or south side of the organ, that the player might command a view of the nave as well as the choir, and the name Chair organ was then dropped, as being no longer applicable. Still later the Choir organ was sometimes enclosed in the case of the Great, like the German Rückpositiv, but it did not lose its name of Choir organ, because there was an idea that its ancient function was to accompany the choir. That this, however, was never the case, is apparent from the fact that in ancient days it was the Great, and not the Little organ, that had its normal position in the choir.

The Choir organ has always had stops of smaller scale, and fewer in number than those of the Great. It is the 'Soft organ' of old voluntary composers. The 'Chaire organ' of Dallam's instrument at York had the following stops :

1. Diapason of wood. 8 ft.
2. Recorder of tin, unison with the voice. 8 ft.
3. Principal of tin. 4 ft.
4. Flute of wood. 4 (?) ft.
5. Small Principal of tin. 2 (?) ft.

The normal number of pipes to each stop was fifty or fifty-one at this time. The compass was a little over four octaves, commencing, like the German and Italian organs, from CC. The lowest octave was usually 'short,' the CC sharp being omitted, and perhaps some other notes. The device of dividing the semitones into so-called quarter-tones was known, but hardly yet practised in England. From The Musical Times of March, 1904, we learn that the organ built in 1637 for Magdalen College, Oxford, had an almost identical disposition for the stops of its Chaire department, viz. :

1. Stop diapason. 8 ft.
2. Recorder. 8 ft.
3. Principal, No. 1. 4 ft.
4. Principal, No. 2. 4 ft.
5. Fifteenth. 2 ft.

In 1690 it was renovated by Renatus Harris, when its Recorder and second Principal were changed for a Flute and Nason, the latter being a kind of flute of 4-ft. pitch, with a very quiet tone.

In Germany an entirely different conception of the Positive prevailed. Organ tone was not by any means always built on a foundation of 8 ft., as with us. The stop corresponding to our Open Diapason was called the Principal, and of Principals there were four kinds, each of which could serve as a foundation stop. To show their importance, Prætorius, in his lists of stops, always gives the Principal, with its Octave and the mutation stops allied to it, in italics. The Great Bass Sub-Principal of 32 ft. served as a foundation for the Pedal only. The Great Principal, of 16 ft., formed the foundation of a Pedal or a Great Organ; its 'Octave,' of 8 ft., took the same place in the scheme of tone building as the Principal (of 4 ft.) in an English organ, and it had its proportional mutation stops. All other stops were more or less of the nature of accessories to the fundamental stops of the Open Diapason order, and this was also the case with the third and fourth kinds of Principal, the Equal, or Chorus, and the Little, or Octave Principal. The Equal Principal, so named because it was in unison with the voice, was of 8 ft., and could form the foundation of a Great or Positive organ; its Octave of 4 ft. corresponded in pitch to the English Principal. The Little Principal of German organs was of 4 ft., and could form the foundation of a Positive only. The importance of the above nomenclature lay in the fact that organs were named after their principals, so that an organ-builder, for example, would contract to build an organ with an Equal Principal Great, and a Little Principal Positive, and so on.

But any organ except the pedal might have one or more soft stops an octave below its Principal, acting as a 'Double' to it, just as the Double stopped Diapason (or Lieblich Bourdon) acts on the ordinary English Swell organ of to-day. A 'Little Principal' Positive generally, but by no means always, had a Gedact of 8 ft. as its 'Double,' and an 'Equal Principal' Great would have a 16-ft. stopped register, though an 'Equal Principal' Positive would not.

In a three-manual instrument, one of the Positives would generally be an 'Equal,' and the other a 'Little' principal instrument, but there were cases in which the chief Positive was of 4 ft. only, and the second of 2 ft., with a 'Double' of 4 ft.: this was a survival of the high treble tone of the ancient Portative, mentioned in our introductory remarks. The organ of the Liebfrauenkirche at Halle, on which Handel received his lessons from Zachau, was an example of the last arrangement. Built about 1500, it had thirty-one stops, of which ten were on the Great, four on the pedal (one being divided between pedal and manual, as in some Italian organs), and there were two Positives. We quote the list of their stops from Prætorius, with his italics:

RÜCKPOSITIV.

1. Principal, 4-ft. tone.
2. Mixtur.
3. Zimbel.
4. Octava, 2 ft.
5. Quinta, 9 (? 3) ft.
6. Quintadeen, 8 ft.
7. Gedactes, 4 ft.
8. Kleingedactes, 2 ft.
9. Spitzflöte, 2 ft.
10. Sifflöit, 2 ft.
11. Trommeten, 8 ft.
12. Singend Regal, 4 ft.

BRUSTPOSITIV.

1. Principal, 2-ft. tone.
2. Mixtur.
3. Zimbel.
4. Regal, 8 ft.
5. Waldflötgen, 1 ft.
6. Flachflötgen, 4 ft.

The 'Little Principal' Positive seems to have gradually disappeared during the 18th century. Bach's Arnstadt organ, built in 1703, had a 'Little Principal' organ as its only Positive, there being but two manuals. That this kind of Positive survived till the middle of the century is shown in the organ erected at St. John's Church, Leipzig, in 1744, and entirely approved by its overseers, J. S. Bach and Hildebrand. Its Rückpositiv contained:

1. Principal, 4 ft.
2. Lieblich Gedact, 8 ft.
3. Hohlflöte, 4 ft.
4. Nasat, 3 ft.
5. Octav, 2 ft.
6. Sesquialter, 2 ranks.
7. Dulciana, 8 ft.
8. Trompete, 8 ft.

Its Brustwerk had:

1. Trichter-Regal, 8 ft.
2. Sifflöte, 2 ft.
3. Spitzflöte, 2 ft.

The generality of German Positives were, however, at this time 'Equal Principal' organs. It would be an interesting experiment to play Bach's so-called 'Doric' toccata with the choir organ arranged like a 'Little Principal' positive, as could easily be done on any of the large and complete English organs of to-day.

Reed stops were invented during the first half of the 16th century, and seem to have been at once introduced on German Positives. According to Dom Bedos, the first reed stop was the Regal, which afterwards developed into the Vox humana, and became a favourite stop in English Choir organs more than a century after its invention. The organ at the Paulinerkirche (the University church) at Leipzig, which was 'very ancient' in 1618, had a Regal on its Rückpositiv. This, by the way, was a 'Little Principal' organ with no 8-ft. flue stop at all.

The Trumpet seems to have been the first reed stop introduced into English organs; it was used as a solo in 'Trumpet' Voluntaries, and was always on the Great. I have not met with any mention of reed stops in English organs before the Interregnum, nor does there appear to have been one in the instrument built in 1666 for Worcester Cathedral by Thomas Harris. A Trumpet was added by Christian Smith in 1697 to the already existing organ at King's Lynn, and it seems as if reed stops were introduced into England by the builders who came from abroad at the Restoration. The first reed stop in the Choir organ was the Vox humana, just as its predecessor, the Regal, was the first reed used in German Positives. The Choir departments of the organs built by Father Smith for Durham Cathedral (in 1683) and the Temple Church (in 1688) had each a 'Voice humane of mettle'; but no reed was found in the Choirs of the instruments altered by Renatus Harris for Magdalen College, Oxford, and built for St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, about the same time. A Bassoon, as well as a Vox humana, appears in the organ built for Doncaster Parish Church in 1749, and in that built by Snetzler for King's Lynn, under Burney's supervision, in 1754.

After the Restoration a third organ was added to the so-called Double organ. It was called the Echo organ, and was perhaps an importation from abroad. It was, as a rule, however, not of the same compass as the other two organs, being merely a duplication on a small scale of the treble portions of some of the Great and Choir stops, and its pipes were enclosed in a box. In 1712 Jordan caused a shutter to open and close in the Echo box, and thus led to the invention of the Swell organ; and so much was the new invention admired, that the Choir organ began to be considered as of secondary importance to the Swell. That is to say, an organ of two manuals now no longer consisted of a Great and Choir, but of a Great and Swell, although the Swell, following the tradition of its predecessor, the Echo, frequently had an octave or an octave and a-half less compass than its Great. Moreover, the Choir organ, when there was one, was expected to supply a bass to the incomplete Swell, which frequently had double its number of stops. Such makeshift organs were quite common in England until the third quarter of the 19th century, and are even now to be found (with pipes of glorious tone quality) in a few country churches.

The invention of railways and steamships during the 19th century, by increasing the intercourse between England and the continent, has almost entirely done away with our insular prejudice against grandeur and variety and a healthy emotion in the art of music: and, together with the introduction of the great modern orchestras, the organs in English churches and concert rooms have been brought to a size, and completeness, and beauty of tone, that rival the finest continental examples. The Choir organ holds its ancient place as a complete 'soft organ,' and is now provided with its full share of 16 ft., mutation, and reed stops. Attempts have occasionally been made to enclose it in a swell box, but this treatment is hardly likely to become general; the Choir organ has a dignity and character of its own, and will scarcely submit to an endeavour to make it imitate its very much younger and somewhat overbearing sister, the Swell organ.

C. F. Abdy Williams.

M. Alexander Constantinovich Glazounov, the distinguished Russian musician, made his first public appearance as a composer on March 30 (17), 1882, when his first symphony, composed at the age of sixteen, was performed. A committee has been formed in St. Petersburg, under the presidency of M. Rimsky-Korsakov, to arrange a musical festival to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of M. Glazounov's début as a composer. On February 9 a concert is to be given in the Hall of the Nobility, St. Petersburg, the programme of which is to consist entirely of M. Glazounov's compositions, which will include the first (juvenile) symphony and the eighth symphony. Hearty congratulations to M. Glazounov on his semi-jubilee.

SAMUEL WESLEY A BOY-POET.

Among various papers, programmes, &c., that Sir George Grove was wont to send me in the years immediately preceding his fatal illness, was a poem said to have been written by Samuel Wesley when he was eight years old. It reached me in an envelope inside which was written: 'This, I believe, is genuine, and might be useful to you. G. Grove.' Here is the enclosure, of which I now gladly make use:

An Epistle to my Much Respected Friend, Dr. Ludlow, by S. Wesley.

To you, dear Doctor, I appeal,
To all the tuneful city,
Am I not used extremely ill
By Musical Committee?

Why it 's enough to make one wild:
They court and then refuse me,
They advertise and call me child,
And as a child they use me.

Excusing their contempt, they say,
Which more inflames my passion,
I am not grave enough to play
Before the Corporation.

To their sweet city waits, altho'
I may not hold a candle,
I question if their worships know
The odds 'twixt me and Handel.

A child of eight years old, I grant
I am but light and giddy,
The solidness of Burgrum want
The steadiness of Liddy.

Yet quick perhaps as other folks
I can assign a reason,
And keep my time as well as Stokes
And come as much in season.

With Bristol organists—not yet
I stand in competition,
Like them, you know, I would be great
And do not want ambition.

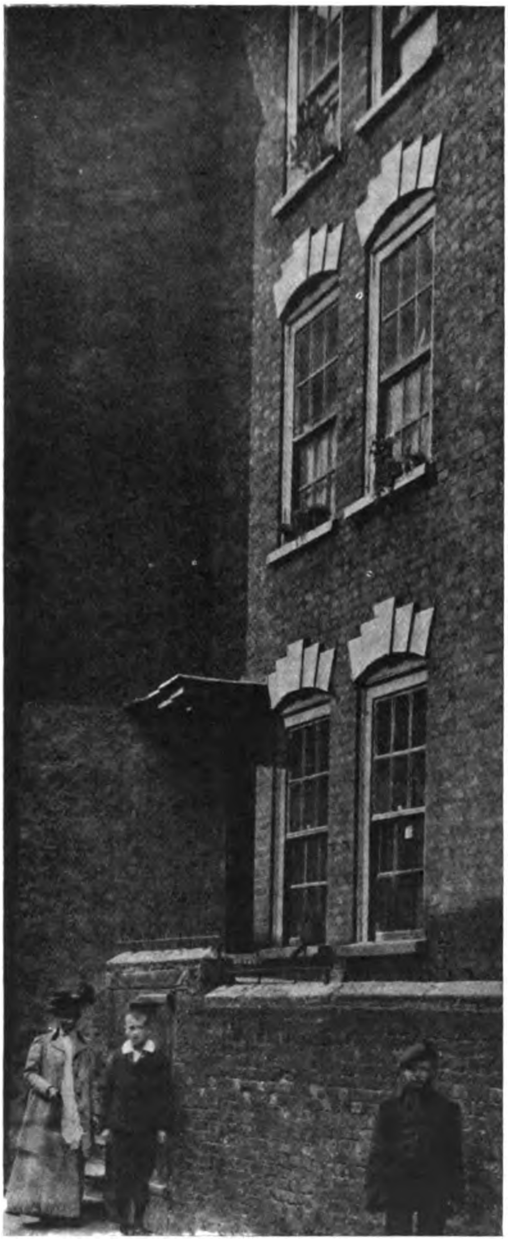
Spirit I do not want, nor will
Upon a just occasion,
To make the rash despisers feel
My weight of indignation.

The trodden worm will turn again
And shall I not resent it?
Who gave the sore affront in vain
They would with tears repent it.

Nothing shall e'er appease my rage
At their unjust demeanour,
Unless they prudently assuage
My anger with a Steiner.

A foot-note, referring to 'the tuneful city' in the second line of the poem, says: 'Bristol; where he was advertised to play at the Oratorio before the Corporation, but was afterwards refused on account of his age, being almost eight years old.'

As I could not find any reference to this juvenile rhyming or to the oratorio performance which prompted it, I placed the verses in my 'S. Wesley bundle' until an opportunity arrived for a visit to Bristol, when I could investigate the matter on the spot. The result of that investigation I shall now proceed to give, together with some notes on the childhood of that eminent English musician known as 'Old Sam' Wesley.



THE HOUSE AT BRISTOL IN WHICH SAMUEL WESLEY, THE MUSICIAN, WAS BORN.

(Photographed specially for The Musical Times by Mr. H. J. Pollard, of Bristol.)

The 'child of eight years old,' in stanza 5 of the poem, furnished me with a clue to the date of the oratorio performance at Bristol, which, as Master Sam was born in 1766, would be the year 1774. Mr. H. J. Pollard kindly searched the local newspapers for that year, with the result that he found the following advertisement in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal of March 26, 1774:

> BRISTOL, March 26.
> For the Benefit of the Infirmary.
> AT the CATHEDRAL CHURCH in this City, on Thursday Morning, the 31ſt inſt., will be performed the Grand DETTINGEN TE DEUM—a MANUSCRIPT ANTHEM—and the CORONATION ANTHEM, all compoſed by Mr. Handel.
> And in the Evening of that Day,
> The Sacred ORATORIO of MESSIAH.
> Between the parts of which Maſter Charles Wesley (by particular Deſire) will perform a CONCERTO on the ORGAN.—The FIRST VIOLIN by Mr. Shaw, Junr.—The principal Vocal Parts by Meſſrs. Thomas Norris, M. B. William Matthews, (both of Oxford) Corfe, (of Sarum) Maſter Tuke, (who is one of the principal Treble Singers at Mr. Stanley's Oratorios in London, and Pupil of Dr. Woodward of Ireland,) Price, (of Glouceſter,) and many other eminent Performers.—Several Ladies of Bath have kindly promiſed their Aſſiſtance in the MESSIAH. The principal Chorus Singers Meſſrs. Norris and Mathews (of Wells,) Mr. Welch, &c., with others from Bath, Saliſbury, Wells, Glouceſter, &c.
> Divine Service in the Morning (which will be Public) will begin at Half after Ten o'Clock, and the Oratorio at Half after Six in the Evening.
> For the Benefit of the Briſtol Infirmary there will be a Collection at the Church Door in the Morning, the Surplus ariſing both from that and the Evening Performance will be given to the Charity; a Circumſtance that cannot fail to induce the Benevolent generouſly to countenance this Undertaking.
> The Cathedral will be well aired, the Floor matted, and commodious Galleries erected for the Accommodation of the Company; of whom it is requeſted, that they will purchaſe the Books of the Evening Performance at the Church-Door.
> To prevent Confuſion and Obſtruction in the narrow Street leading from St. Auguſtine's-back to the College-green, it is requeſted that the Carriages going to the Cathedral in the Evening may draw up the Green by St. Auguſtine's Church, and in return from the Cathedral, round the Green down Orchard ſtreet.
> The Subſcribers to Mr. Shaw's Concerts will be admitted to the Oratorio gratis, agreeable to the original Agreement between them and the Committee under whoſe Care theſe Performances are to take Plece.
> Tickets for the Oratorio may be had at the Exchangh, American, Aſſembly, Weſt India, and Forſter's Coffee-Houſes; the Buſh and Fountain Taverns, White-Hart Inn, and at Mr. Joseph Smith's, Watch-Maker, in Broad-ſtreet, at 5*s.* 3*d.* each.
> N. B. All the Performers, both Vocal and Inſtrumental, are requeſted to be in Town on Wedneſday, the 30th Inſtant, to attend at the Rehearſal, which will begin preciſely at Half after Two o'Clock that afternoon.

The performance is thus noticed in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal of April 2, 1774:

> Thursday Morning, the Grand Dittingen (sic) Te Deum, the Coronation Anthem, &c. &c. were performed at our Cathedral, and a Collection made at the Church Door for the Infirmary, and in the Evening the Oratorio of Messiah, to the most Crowded Audience, ever known in this City on the like Occasion; Dr. Woodward, of Dublin, conducted the Band, with great Judgement. Messrs. Norris, Mathews, Corfe, and Price, displayed their well known and much approved abilities, Master Tuke also was justly entitled to > Applause, in short the whole Band, which was excellent, seemed to give that noble composition, their utmost assistance, and it was thro' the whole admirably performed.

An amusing sequel to these festival performances is thus recorded in the same journal:

> It has been hinted to the Managers of the Oratoria, that many Ladies and Gentlemen by their Hurry going into the Cathedral, Thursday Evening last were prevented paying at the Door as they purposed, it is requested they will be so obliging to send their money to Mr. Burgrum; to whom it is desired of those who have found Cloaks, Ruffles, or any Thing that was dropt near the Church, may be sent, that it may be restored to the owners.

It will be observed that in the advertisement Charles (not Samuel) Wesley was announced to perform 'by particular desire a concerto on the organ.' Charles was then sixteen, not eight years old (see stanza 5), in 1774; therefore, it may be assumed that Charles was a misprint for Samuel in the advertisement, and that the elder brother's name was inserted as being more familiar, the Rev. Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, being father of the boy performer; or else Samuel was suggested as a substitute for Charles. No mention is made of any Master Wesley in the account of the performance, thus the origin of the poem is confirmed.

Dr. Ludlow, 'the much respected friend' to whom Master Sam addressed his 'epistle,' appears in the Bristol Directory of 1787 thus:

Ludlow, Abraham, M.D.,
Cumberland Street.

and his name is to be found in the issue of 1801. He was doubtless the family doctor, his house being situated about five minutes' walk from the residence of the Wesleys. Messrs. Burgrum and Liddy (stanza 5) are accounted for in three letters which appeared in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal soon after the oratorio performance, two of these communications being signed respectively Henry Burgrum' and 'T. Lediard' (? Liddy). This correspondence, which refers to a rumpus concerning admission to the cathedral by a private door at the performance, need not detain us; but it fails to endorse Master Sammy's statement as regards 'the solidness of Burgrum' and 'the steadiness of Liddy,' as they appear to have been lively gentlemen.

The 'Stokes' (in stanza 6) may have been a Bristol organist; he could not, of course, have been Charles Stokes, Wesley's great friend in his manhood, as he was not born till 1784. So much for the poem which came from among Sir George Grove's odds and ends, and which, I believe, has not hitherto been printed, at all events in recent years. Moreover, so far I can discover, no biographer of the musical Wesleys has mentioned either the verses or the oratorio performance which prompted them.

Samuel Wesley—son of Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, and nephew of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism—was born at Bristol on February 24, 1766. The house still stands in Charles Street, as shown in the accompanying photograph. I went over a part of this interesting habitation, now let out in single rooms, and, from a residential point of view, situated in an uninviting part of the city. Here Charles Wesley had his home for many years—though he was frequently absent therefrom on his preaching tours—here his children were born, and here John Wesley stayed during his evangelisation visits to Bristol. Through the courtesy of the vicar of St. James's Church (the Rev. E. F. Neep), in which parish Charles Street is situated, I had the privilege of seeing the entry of the baptism of Samuel Wesley in the Registers of the church; the ceremony took place on March 15, 1766. St. James's churchyard contains the family grave of Charles Wesley, the inscription on the stone reading:

> Sacred to the memory of John, Susannah, Mary, and John James, infant children of the late Rev. Charles Wesley, M.A., of Christ College, Oxford, and of Sarah, his wife. And also of their daughter Sarah Wesley, who departed this life on the 19th of September, 1828, aged sixty-eight years.
> Hosanna to Jesus on high,
> Another has entered her rest;
> Another is 'scaped to the sky,
> And lodged in Immanuel's breast.
> The soul of our sister is gone
> To heighten the triumphs above,
> Exalted to Jesus's Throne,
> And clasped in the arms of His love.

That Samuel Wesley was a most remarkable letter-writer has been proved over and over again. He gave evidence of his epistolary genius at a very tender age. Here is a letter (preserved at the British Museum) written by Sam when only seven years old to his brother Charles in London:

> Bristol,
> April 20, 1773.
> My dear Charles,
> Last Sunday I played a Psalm at Saint James Church. Mrs. Vigor says she longs to see you & papa at Bristel. I have learnt Handel's water-piece. To-day I had some of the Highland Laddie. I saw Mr. Rooke last Sunday, he looks very bad. Mr. Allan called here yesterday. Have you seen Dr. Ford yet? Perhaps he is sowing poppie seed at the sign of forgetfulness of his old friends. I have not had a letter from him yet. I hope Mr. Worgan & Mr. Arnold is well.
> My sister & I join in Duty to papa, & love to yourself.
> I am
> Your affectionate brother.
> Samuel Wesley.
> Prudence's Duty waits on papa and you.

This letter is addressed: 'Master Wesley, at the Foundery, Upper Moor Fields, London.' This Foundery, a Government building for the casting of cannon, was partly destroyed by an explosion in 1716. Bought by John Wesley in 1739, he turned it into the first Methodist meeting-house in London. Wesley's earliest tune book—issued in 1742, the year in which the 'Messiah' was first performed—is entitled: 'A Collection of Tunes set to Music as they are commonly sung at the Foundery.' One cannot help smiling at a title which has 'Tunes set to Music.'

One more reference to Master Sam's precocity, and I have done. In the Wesley collection of MSS. at the British Museum is this precocious boy's first music book, wherein he has written his earliest compositions. It contains a Pomposo movement in D for the organ, thus superscribed: 'Pull out all the Trumpets you have on the organ.' How very like a boy!

Occasional Notes.

There is in souls a sympathy with sounds;
And as the mind is pitch'd the ear is pleased,
With melting airs or martial, brisk or grave;
Some chord in unison with what we hear
Is touch'd within us, and the heart replies.
COWPER.

The death of Mr. Edgar Frederick Jacques—which we regret to record took place at Brighton on December 30—removes a writer of striking personality from the ranks of musical journalism. Born of French parentage, in London, March 27, 1850, he was educated for a commercial career, but in 1869 he entered the profession of music. Leaving Manchester and his business ties there, he settled in London as a teacher and organist of a church. (It seems difficult to realise our departed friend in the capacity of a church organist!) From 1874 to 1876 he directed the orchestral services held at St. Andrew's Church, Tavistock Place. Like some of his colleagues on the press, he did not enter upon the joys and sorrows of musical journalism until he had reached the age of thirty-five. In 1888 he succeeded the late Dr. Hueffer as editor of The Musical World (the old journal of that name) and became its proprietor. In three years The Musical World came to an end; its last number appeared on January 24, 1891, after having existed for fifty-five years. In succession to the late Dr. W. A. Barrett, who died in October, 1891, Mr. Jacques became, early in 1892, editor of THE MUSICAL TIMES, a post he held for upwards of five years, until March, 1897. For several years he was musical critic of The Observer and The Sunday Times. His remains are interred in the pretty churchyard of Aldrington, Sussex.

Mr. Jacques was best known by his admirable analytical programmes at Queen's Hall and elsewhere, in which he tersely and lucidly described many compositions. He also obtained distinction as a lecturer, especially on Indian music, which had attracted his attention. He discoursed upon Kuhnau's Biblical Sonatas at the Royal Academy of Music, and read papers before the Musical Association on 'The laws of progress in music' and 'The composer's intention.' A temperamental and cultured man, he was known to his intimates as a brilliant talker and a warm-hearted, genial fellow overflowing with fun. As an instance of his perennial humour the following Limerick—one of half-a-dozen he dashed off and sent to the present writer—may be given:

There was a young man of Port*ug*al,
Who played very well on the bugle.
He blew, and he blew,
And he tried all he knew,
But he could not play works that were fugal!

The 'Last post' has, in imagination, been sounded over the grave of Edgar Jacques, and in recalling the brightest and best moments of his working days, we revive pleasant memories which will not soon fade.

If architecture is frozen music, then Sir Christopher Wren was a great musician, and St. Paul's Cathedral—a symphony in stone—his masterpiece. His portrait—which forms our special portrait supplement this month, one that is justified by the article on St. Paul's—suggests a few biographical notes upon the illustrious designer. Born at East Knoyle Rectory, Wiltshire, on October 20, 1632, Christopher Wren came of a clerical stock; his father became Dean of Windsor, an office held by his uncle Matthew Wren, who was afterwards Bishop successively of Hereford, Norwich, and Ely. As a Westminster scholar the boy passed to Wadham College, Oxford, where, graduating in 1650, he was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls' College, where many of his drawings are preserved. His friend John Evelyn records in his 'Diary' some interesting information concerning the clever young man. On July 11, 1654, he writes: 'At All Souls, where we had music, voices, and theorbos, performed by some ingenious scholars. After dinner, I visited that miracle of a youth, Mr Christopher Wren.' Two days later he refers to 'that prodigious young scholar, Mr. Christopher Wren, who presented me with a piece of white marble, which he had stained with a lively red, very deep, as beautiful as if it had been natural.' Wren received the degrees of D.C.L. (Oxford) and LL.D. (Cambridge) in 1661. Three years previously, at the age of twenty-five, he had been appointed professor of astronomy at Gresham College, and he held the Savilian professorship of astronomy at Oxford from 1661 to 1673. Having become a great authority on mathematics and devoted much attention to astronomical and medical subjects, Dr. Wren became a prominent member of that group of learned men who formed the Royal Society, of which he was President from 1680 to 1682.

It was not until he had passed his thirtieth year that Wren applied himself to the work of his life, architecture. Once he had begun to cultivate this field wherein his great genius was so richly to fructify, one important building after another rose in remarkably rapid succession: for instance, Pembroke College Chapel, Cambridge; the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford; and Emmanuel College Chapel, Cambridge, all built within five years. He was appointed architect to old St. Paul's Cathedral—as everybody knows, he designed the present noble edifice—and later on surveyor to Westminster Abbey. In 1684 he became comptroller of works in Windsor Castle, and in the following year M.P. for Plympton. No fewer than fifty-two churches in London—how wonderfully varied their steeples—can be placed to his credit, in addition to the Monument, Chelsea College, numerous additions to Hampton Court Palace, and the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge. He was knighted in 1672. Although a very delicate child, Sir Christopher Wren lived to the great age of ninety. He died, at his house at Hampton Court, quite suddenly while sitting in his chair after dinner, on February 25, 1723. His remains found their fitting resting-place in the crypt of the cathedral which forms the greatest memorial to his genius.

The burial of the Baroness Burdett Coutts in Westminster Abbey (on January 5) has called attention to the fact that, especially in recent years, few ladies have found their last resting-place within the walls or precincts of that great Walhalla. Music can claim two songstresses whose remains were interred in the Cloisters. On January 8, 17$\frac{40}{41}$, Mrs. Ann Robinson was buried in the West Cloister. The youngest daughter of William Turner—a lay-vicar of the Abbey and composer of the opera 'Woman's a riddle'—she married, on September 6, 1716, John Robinson, organist of the Abbey in succession to Dr. Croft, and composer of the well known double chant in E flat associated with his name. Curiously enough, in the marriage registers of Westminster Abbey, where the wedding took place, the bride is described as a widow, the entry reading thus :

> 1716. September 6. Mr. John Robinson, single man, and Ann Turner, widow.

As a singer she appeared at the King's Theatre in 1720, in Domenico Scarlatti's opera 'Narcissus,' being described as 'Mrs. Turner-Robinson' to distinguish her from her more eminent namesake, Anastasia Robinson, who sang in the same opera. It appears that the opera of 'Narcissus' was brought over from Italy by Thomas Roseingrave, who not only conducted the performance, but, according to Burney, 'composed several additional songs' to the work, 'in the style of his friend Mimo Scarlatti.' The music of the opera, with Roseingrave's excrescences, was published by Walsh in 1720.

In the North Cloister of Westminster Abbey is the grave of Mrs. Cibber—'Mrs. Susanna-Maria Cibber,' as the burial register records the name—who was buried February 6, 1766. The sister of Dr. Arne, Mrs. Cibber achieved fame as a singer in oratorio. Although her voice was small, it was indescribably plaintive ; moreover, she was an intellectual singer, whereby 'her powers of expression enabled her to impress most forcibly upon the mind of the hearer the meaning of the language to which she gave utterance.' No wonder, therefore, that Handel—with whom she was a special favourite—wrote the contralto songs in the 'Messiah' and in 'Samson' for this gifted vocalist.

The committee of management of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival have taken a new departure in announcing that they will offer a prize of twenty-five guineas for the best libretto, the musical setting of which will be performed at the Festival in October, 1908. The names of the adjudicators are Mrs. Newmarch, Mr. Francis Coutts, and Mr. Ernest Newman. The first four clauses of the 'Conditions' are as follows :

1. Authors of either sex must be of British birth—that is, of the United Kingdom or of the British dominions beyond the seas.
2. There are no restrictions whatever as to the choice of a subject, save that it must be secular, i.e., romantic, historical, or classical, and that it must not be Biblical, nor must it be adapted from the lives of the saints.
3. As to the literary form, the author is free to write in verse or prose, rhymed or un-rhymed.
4. The libretto may be laid out for chorus only, or for chorus with not more than four principal characters. The libretto should not occupy more than thirty minutes in musical performance, or fifteen minutes in the reading.

Mr. Frederic Oddin Taylor, honorary secretary of the festival, will receive the competing librettos up to March 31.

The prospectus of the ninety-fifth season of the Philharmonic Society has been issued. M. Edouard Colonne will conduct the first concert and Dr. Cowen the remaining six. Special interest will be taken in the first visits to England of the composers Jean Sibelius and Christian Sinding — the former will conduct his new Symphony in E flat (No. 3), and the latter his Violin concerto, M. Johannes Wolff playing the solo part. Mr. Arthur Hervey is announced to conduct the first performance of his Prelude to an unpublished opera 'Ione.' Georges Enesco's Symphony in E flat is announced to be played for the first time in London. Madame Sophie Menter is sure to be warmly welcomed on her re-appearance, and Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat is just suited to her temperament and executive powers. The symphonies, other than those already mentioned, are : Eroica and Pastorale, Beethoven; No. 2 in D, Brahms; and Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, Schumann. Overtures will be represented by Benvenuto Cellini, Berlioz; Les Abencerages, Cherubini; Butterfly's Ball, Cowen; Carneval, Dvorák; Cockaigne, Elgar; Hebrides, Mendelssohn. Other orchestral pieces that are promised include the symphonic poem 'Cleopatra,' G. W. Chadwick; Serenade Nocturne No. 6, in D, Mozart; symphonic poem 'Don Juan,' Richard Strauss; Irish Rhapsody, No. 1, Stanford; Suite No. 3, in G, Tchaikovsky, in addition to various concertos and vocal pieces. If the promises outlined by the prospectus are fulfilled, the forthcoming concerts of this time-honoured Society, so nearly approaching its centenary, will be of unusual interest and importance.

Sullivan's opera 'The Gondoliers ; or the King of Barataria,' was revived at the Savoy Theatre, its birthplace, on January 22, with gratifying success. Produced on December 7, 1889, under the composer's and librettist's personal direction, this fanciful creation owed its success to the inimitable lines of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, no less than to Sullivan's spontaneous melodies and dainty orchestration. Could anyone improve upon this rhyming picture of the easy-going monarch who promoted everybody ?

Lord Chancellors were cheap as sprats,
And Bishops in their shovel hats
Were plentiful as tabby cats—
  In point of fact, too many.
Ambassadors cropped up like hay,
Prime Ministers and such as they Grew like asparagus in May,
  And Dukes were three a penny.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has returned home after his successful tour in America. He gave concerts and recitals of his own music at New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington, &c., at which the programmes chiefly consisted of chamber music and songs ; but he had also opportunities of conducting performances of his 'Hiawatha' music and 'The Atonement.' The newspapers spoke very highly of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's genius—'one of the most original and delightful of all present-day English composers,' said one journal, adding, 'he is an ornament to his race and a credit to England : and it is pleasant to know that the English, certainly as proud and as cautious a people as the Americans, do not draw the colour line where genius and noble accomplishments are concerned.' It is not surprising to learn that the composer of 'Hiawatha' looks back upon his tour in the United States with feelings of pleasure and gratification at the reception accorded to him and his music.

Sir Frederick Bridge has furnished another instance of his versatility in 'The Shakespeare and Music Birthday Book,' which Messrs. Bosworth & Co. have recently published. The selection of extracts from the treasure-store of the great bard is so good as to add to Sir Frederick's many titles that of A. Q.—'The apt quotationist.' In proof thereof the following samples may be given :

Mozart—January 27.

'Tis strange that death should sing.—
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death ;
And from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.
King John, V. 7.

How wonderful that Shakespeare should have forecasted Mozart's swan song—the Requiem—'a doleful hymn.'

Dr. S. S. Wesley—August 14.

Enchanting harmony. Love's Labour's Lost, I. 1.

Give me mine angle,—we'll to the river : there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes ; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Antony and Cleopatra, II. 5.

No one could improve upon 'Enchanting harmony' for absolute appropriateness to Samuel Sebastian Wesley, nor suggest anything better to illustrate his piscatorial proclivities ; moreover, the subtleness of the second extract—S. S. Wesley is honoured by two quotations !—adds to its aptness : the composer of 'The Wilderness' engaged in fishing while his music is being played by a pupil 'far off' (in the cathedral).

Algernon Ashton—December 9.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a man's funeral.
Tempest, II. 2.

This quotation speaks for itself. The foregoing extracts suffice to indicate the nature of the book, and the excellence of the selections. One more example must, however, be given. Here it is :

Sir Frederick Bridge—December 5.

Viola. Save thee friend, and thy music : Dost thou live by the tabor ?
Clown. No, sir ; I live by the church.
Viola. Art thou a churchman ?
Clown. No such matter, sir ; I do live by the church ; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.
Twelfth Night, III. 1.

Sir Frederick has here reflected himself perfectly. Is he not organist of Westminster Abbey ? And is not his domiciliation situated in the Cloisters of that venerable fane ?

A Safonoff of the seventeenth century ! M. Henri Quittard, in his recently published, valuable and interesting volume on Henry Du Mont, a remarkable composer of the seventeenth century, in speaking of the new style of motet with accompaniment of violas, refers to a picture in the museum at Troyes, in which a motet by Etienne Bergerat is being performed in presence of Louis XIII. The scene is in the open air, in a garden. Two singers and six instrumentalists, playing on treble and bass viols, are in front of the composer, who, seated in a chair with the music on his knees, is conducting with his hand ('il dirige de la main les artistes'). Bergerat himself ordered this picture to commemorate this eventful day in his career. The name of the artist is unknown, but the date of the performance was September, 1630.

The Rev. F. W. Galpin writes :

In the December issue of The Musical Times there was an illustration and short description of an organ formerly at Cheshunt Great House, and said to have been made by one of the monks of Waltham for Cardinal Wolsey. A question was raised as to its history. Some years ago I had the opportunity of examining the instrument, and the following notes and conclusions may perhaps be of interest to your readers.

The net result of the examination tended to show that the organ—at any rate in its present state—was in reality constructed during the second half of the 17th century.

1. It has not got the 'short octave' in the bass, which is especially characteristic of 16th century and early 17th century instruments.

2. The bellows are placed beneath the keyboard and moved by a foot-pedal, a principle adopted about the middle of the 17th century. Previous to this the small organs were blown either by a pair of bellows placed behind the case and lifted alternately, or within the case and worked by a strap put through the side.

3. In the 16th century and the earlier years of the next, the ends of the sliders for the various stop registers projected through the side of the case and were pulled in and out by the hand. In this organ they are moved by small levers as described and figured by Mersenne (1635).

4. Among the stops is the Sesquialtera. This name is unknown to Prætorius (1620) or Mersenne. In England it first appears in the organ of Bernard Smith (c. 1660), but in the specifications of Dallam, Loosemore and Harris—the English organ-builders of the earlier part of the century—it is not to be found.

An organ very similar to the Cheshunt instrument in size and construction, all the pipes being of wood, is in the possession of the Rev. Canon Hichens, of Canterbury. It also contains a sesquialtera with stop levers, and is evidently of post-Commonwealth 17th century workmanship.

The organ therefore cannot be identical with either of those sold at the dissolution of Waltham Abbey in 1540, and it is an open question whether it is the same as the old organ sold by the parishioners of Waltham to the Churchwardens of Cheshunt early in the 17th century, as recorded in The Musical Times of September, 1906. If so, it has been remodelled in later times. At any rate, it is very satisfactory to know that it is now being cared for and properly repaired.

The famous grand ducal Court Theatre at Weimar, wherein two of the masterpieces of opera, viz., 'Lohengrin' and the 'Barber of Bagdad' (Cornelius), were first performed, is doomed. A new structure is now in course of erection which will shortly be opened. It seems as if the elements meant to forestall man's destructive work on the historical building, for just before Christmas a fire broke out in it which did considerable damage. The Grand Duke has now ordered the theatre to be finally closed on February 16, but not before there has been performed once more on its stage a short cycle of those pieces which have made it famous in the history of art and literature. These pieces, with the dates of performance, are as follows : February 9, Iffland's drama, 'Die Jäger,' with which the house was opened on October 22, 1825 ; February 10, Wagner's 'Lohengrin,' produced under the direction of Franz Liszt on August 26, 1850 ; February 12, 'The Barber of Bagdad,' by Peter Cornelius, produced, also under Franz Liszt, on December 15, 1858 ; February 14, Schiller's 'The Robbers,' and February 16, Goethe's 'Iphigenia,' after which last-named a 'Solemn scenic epilogue,' by Richard Voss, with music by Ludwig Thuille, will close the history of the building so closely connected with the lives and works of a larger number of great men than perhaps any other theatre in Germany.

On December 29, 1906, at the church of St. Cross, Holywell, Oxford, the marriage took place of Mr. John Frederick Randall Stainer, B.C.L., M.A., eldest son of the late Sir John Stainer, and Miss Ruth Alice Mallam, third daughter of the late Mr. H. P. Mallam, of Oxford. The ceremony was performed by Canon J. O. Johnston, Principal of Cuddesdon College, and uncle of the bride, who was given away by her eldest brother, Mr. J. S. Mallam. The service was choral, the hymns sung being 'The Voice that breathed o'er Eden,' to a tune written by Sir John Stainer, and 'O perfect love,' by Dr. W. H. Monk. A beautiful rendering of Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen concluded the service. Hearty congratulations to Mr. Stainer and his bride!

An interesting letter was sold by Messrs. Sotheby on January 22. Written by Dr. Charles Burney on November 3, 1774, it contained the following reference to his 'History of Music':

> My work has been much impeded by a long and severe indisposition. I fear this will prevent my keeping my word with my subscribers by publishing the first vol. of my History as soon as Xmas; however, I have been in the press some time, and hope I shall not be obliged to trespass much upon your indulgence . . . .
> I have purchased, at so great an expense, ornamental plates for my two volumes, engraved by Bartolozzi from designs by Cipriani, that I fear I must hold my hand as to further ornament.

On the same occasion was sold the autograph score of the 'Ode on the death of Dr. Boyce,' set to music by Charles Wesley: it is dated by him at the beginning, 'Sunday, February 7, 1779,' and at the end 'June 19, 1779.' The words of the Ode, written by the Rev. Charles Wesley, the composer's father, begin 'Father of harmony, farewell!'

'Pills for candidates' is a title that Mr. Davison was wont to use in the Musical World when he reprinted a music examination paper. In turning over the pages of that periodical for the year 1858 we came upon the following 'Pill,' which was prescribed in an examination paper of St. John's College, Cambridge:

> Bach's 'Well-tempered Clavier' consists of two books, each containing the same number of fugues. In the first book, instead of having (as usual) one subject, one fugue has two, and another has a prime number: in the second book, two less than half the number of fugues in it have two subjects, and one has the same prime number as before, which is a measure of the whole number of fugues, and also of the whole number of subjects diminished by 18. If the whole number of fugues were increased by 1, 1-7th of the result (which is an integer) is less by 2 than 1-3rd of the whole number of subjects in the first book. How many fugues are there, and of what kind?

'J. W. D.,' a master of sarcasm, thus commented upon the above 'Pill':

> We are pleased to see the venerated name of John Sebastian Bach on a university examination paper. It gives rise to many reflections, and among the rest to one not exactly favourable to men of science and learning who have been in the habit of ignoring music and snubbing its disciples. If these ciphered and lettered pundits could only form a notion of what kind of man was Bach—how far his science went beyond theirs—how to master the entire secret of harmony was a task more difficult than any they could accomplish—and how to use, as he used, the knowledge his indomitable perseverance had acquired was the result of a genius to which not one of them can pretend, they might perhaps be disposed to modify their tone, and incline their heads when a genuine musician passed.

Very few, if any, Parish Magazines can rival that issued month by month in connection with St. Anne's Church, Soho. This well-edited 'Soho Monthly Paper' (as it is called) consists of thirty pages of varied and interesting matter concerning the many activities of the ancient parish. The January issue contains extracts from the article on 'Soho and the house of Novello,' which appeared in The Musical Times for December last, to which is appended the following editorial comment:

> We should like to express our appreciation of the debt which Church music, and indeed all music, owes to the firm of Novello, which has been the means of causing the noblest productions of the most inspired musicians to reach the millions, who formerly had little enjoyment of the art within their reach. We wish it all success in its new premises.

The curiosities of concert-programmes are legion. Here is one of those excellent music-makings whereby Mr. Dan Godfrey and his merry men delight the Bournemouthians. Although the music performed was not sacred, two of the composers whose works were performed are (according to the programme) saints. Here is the evidence:

8. Dance . . 'Macabre' . . Saint-Saëns
9. Song . . 'Be thou faithful?' . St. Paul

Although St. Paul was one of the Apostles, there is no evidence that he composed any vocal music: and if he had done so, would his faithful strains include notes of interrogation?

Church and Organ Music.

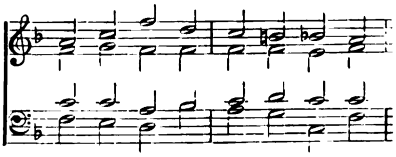
DEERHURST AND ITS COMPOSER.

No hymnal would be considered complete which excluded the tune 'Deerhurst,' composed by Mr. James Langran. Has it a history? What is the life-story of its composer? These questions will find their answers in the subjoined chit-chat upon the jubilant strain and him who created it.

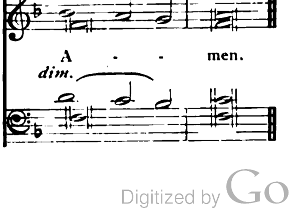
If we turn to The Musical Times of November, 1859, we shall find (on p. 152) the following entry under the heading 'During the last month published by J. A. Novello':

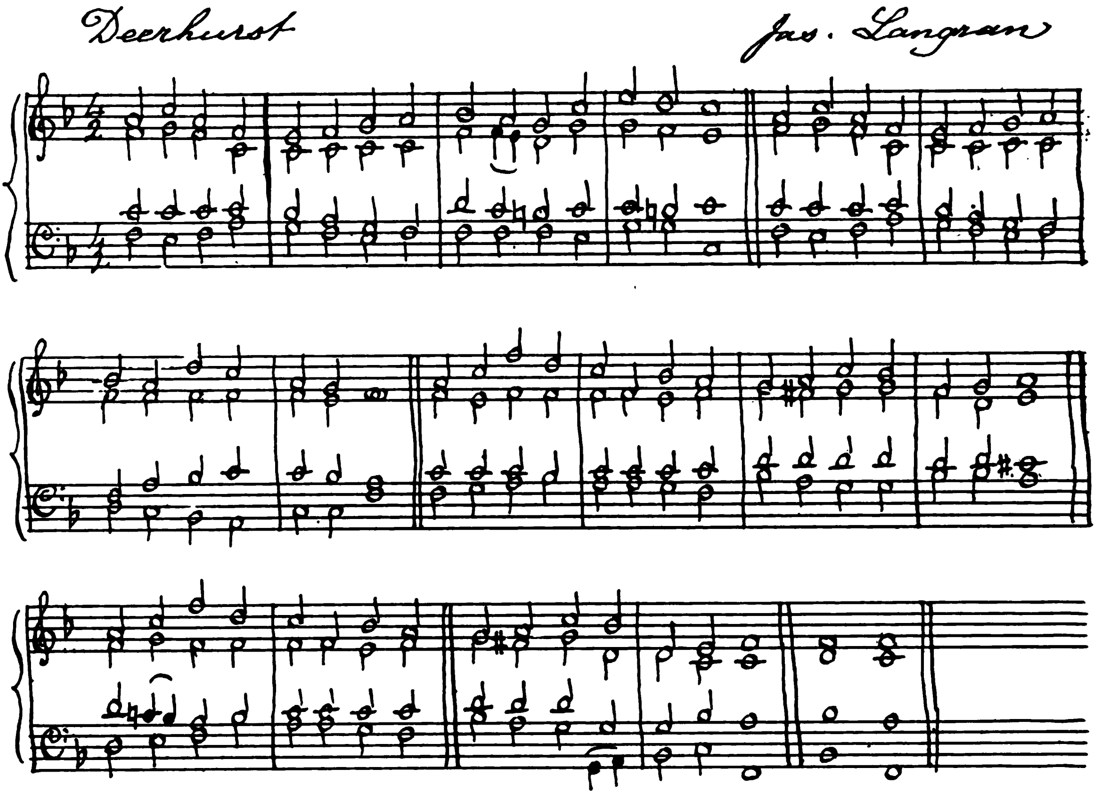
> Langran, James.—Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing. Dismissal Hymn. For 4 voices, with an Accompaniment for the Organ. 8vo. 3d.

This is the first publication of the tune now known as 'Deerhurst,' but not exactly in its present form. Bars 9 and 10, 13 and 14 were originally written as follows:



and in one or two other places the harmonies were a little different from those now printed. The Amen stood thus:





FACSIMILE OF THE HYMN-TUNE 'DEERHURST' IN THE HANDWRITING OF THE COMPOSER.

At that time Mr. Langran was organist of Holy Trinity Church, Tottenham. In 1861 a new vicar was appointed—the Rev. William John Hall, now rector and lecturer of St. Clement, Eastcheap, and St. Martin-Orgar, also a minor canon of St. Paul's. Mr. Hall's father—also the Rev. William John Hall and a minor canon of St. Paul's—had brought out in 1836 a collection of psalms and hymns. In 1863, after the death of his father, Mr. Hall issued a new music edition of the book entitled :

> Psalms and Hymns | adapted to | the services | of | the Church of England ; | with | accompanying tunes, | selected and revised | by | John Foster, | Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, | vicar choral of Westminster Abbey, | and formerly organist of St. Andrew's, Wells Street. | Sing ye praises with understanding. | Ps. xlvii. 7. |
> London : | Rivington's, Waterloo Place. | MDCCCLXIII.

In this collection—known as the 'Mitre Hymnal,' by reason of the mitre impressed on its cover—'Deerhurst,' thus named, makes its first appearance in a hymnal, and in the melodic form in which we now know it. Although it is a 'cut' book—the words being independent of fixed tunes—'Deerhurst' is suggested as being suitable to two hymns, 'Lord of heaven, and earth, and ocean,' and 'May the grace of Christ our Saviour.' The book contains six tunes composed by Mr. Langran, named 'Mount Olivet,' 'Miriam,' 'Deerhurst,' 'St. Francis,' 'Evensong' (now known as 'St. Agnes'), and 'Highnam.' As Highnam is the Gloucestershire seat of Sir Hubert Parry, we naturally ask Mr. Langran about the nomenclature of that particular tune and its five companions. 'They were named,' he says, 'by Mr. Hall, then my vicar and the proprietor of the book. He had been curate of Hasfield, Gloucestershire (from 1853 to 1860), and this accounts for Deerhurst and Highnam, while Miriam was named after one of his sisters.' Deerhurst, by-the-way, is near Tewkesbury, and its Priory Church is one of the oldest ecclesiastical buildings of any importance that yet remain in use in England.

The tune 'Deerhurst' appears to have first been associated with Bishop Wordsworth's hymn, 'Hark, the sound of holy voices,' at the annual festival of the Peterborough Choral Association, held in Peterborough Cathedral, June 15, 1865, on which occasion it was sung by the united choirs with magnificent effect. In the preface to the service-book—a copy of which is now before us—acknowledgment is made to Mr. Langran for the use of the words of the hymn, but a printed slip pasted into the book reads :

> Owing to a delay for which the Editors were not responsible the prescribed acknowledgment of this tune could not be inserted at the time of printing. The Editors beg now to renew their thanks to Mr. Langran, and to say that the tune is 'taken by permission from Foster's tunes for the Rev. W. J. Hall's Psalms and Hymns.'

This note, by the way, is a very ambiguous guide to the original source of the tune. This happy mating of words and music was followed in 'Church Hymns' (1874), in which 'Deerhurst' is renamed 'Holy Voices,' the only instance, so far as the present writer knows, of the re-christening of the tune. Its insertion in the revised edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1875) helped to make 'Deerhurst' more widely known, and, as we said at the beginning, it has found its way into almost every modern hymnal irrespective of denomination, and rightly so by reason of its melodic and harmonic excellence, no less than for the ease and fervour with which it is sung by congregations of worshippers.

Reference must be made to another tune by the same composer, that named 'St. Agnes' (formerly 'Evensong'), which is also to be found in most modern hymnals. Like 'Deerhurst,' 'St. Agnes' appeared in the 'Mitre' book of 1863, but not for the first time. It was composed for 'Abide with me,' and issued as a separate publication by Messrs. Novello in October, 1861. This devotional strain—which seems to have been first named 'St. Agnes' in the original edition of 'Church Hymns' (1874)—is now associated with various hymns, one of its happiest matings being with Horatio Bonar's sacramental hymn, 'Here, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face.'

Mr. James Langran, the composer of the tunes 'Deerhurst' and 'St. Agnes,' was born in the parish of St. Pancras, London, November 10, 1835. When he was three years old his parents removed to Tottenham, where ever since he has resided. His first important organ appointment was to St. Michael's Church, Wood Green, in June, 1856. The tests at the competition consisted of two voluntaries selected by the candidates, and two or three hymn-tunes, together with Benjamin Jacob's organ arrangement of 'The heavens are telling.' The last-named proved somewhat difficult to render satisfactorily, as the organ, a beautiful little instrument by Bishop, had only one manual. Although the salary was but £20 per annum, there were fifty-three applicants for the post. The choir consisted of half-a-dozen school children and a few elderly ladies from the Printers' Almshouses close by, who, however, regularly attended the choir practices. Such was the state of church music in a northern suburb of London half-a-century ago.

It was not until Mr. Langran was appointed organist of Holy Trinity Church, Tottenham, in 1859, that he was fortunate enough to find an organ with a CC swell and, more important still, a CCC pedal-board, both of these improvements having then been recently added by Father Willis. At Holy Trinity Church eight schoolgirls,—their garments of praise being green frocks, caps, and tippets—together with a few ladies and gentlemen, all seated round the organ in the west gallery, formed the choir. However, through the kindness of a benevolent gentleman residing in the neighbourhood, the young organist had the good fortune to secure the aid, at the evening service, of two or three chorister boys from St. Paul's Cathedral. At that time there was no cathedral choir school, nor any evening service at St. Paul's, so the boys were at liberty to go anywhere as soon as the afternoon service was over. It requires a wide stretch of fancy to imagine two or three St. Paul's choristers of to-day trudging off to Tottenham, or elsewhere, in order to assist at a parochial evening service!

About the year 1857 the subject of this sketch became a pianoforte pupil of the late John Baptiste Calkin, of whose conscientious and painstaking teaching methods, and artistic interpretations of classical music, Mr. Langran speaks in the highest possible terms. After having held the organistship of Holy Trinity Church, Mr. Langran was appointed to a similar post at the Parish Church (All Hallows), Tottenham, in 1870. Here he found a mixed choir, but the advent of a new vicar caused a surpliced choir to be formed. A full choral service, with a choral communion, is now sung every Sunday and an anthem at Evensong. Thus for thirty-seven years the composer of 'Deerhurst' has faithfully discharged the duties of organist and choirmaster of this church, to the complete satisfaction of the two vicars he has served under and the congregations he has ministered unto in the service of praise. During the whole of his fifty years' experience as an organist he has never missed a single service through illness; but now, with the advance of years, he has frequently at the evening service a valuable and efficient deputy in his old pupil and friend, Mr. Harry F. Wilkinson.

From its foundation, nearly thirty years ago, Mr. Langran has been the musical instructor at the Training College for Schoolmistresses, Tottenham, of which the Rev. Prebendary Hobson is the Principal. Connected with his work there he has many pleasant memories of Dr. John Hullah, Sir John Stainer, Dr. W. A. Barrett, Dr. W. G. McNaught, and Dr. Arthur Somervell, all of whom have expressed their approval of the work he has accomplished at that educational centre. For the College hymn, written by the late Rev. S. J. Stone, he has composed the tune 'St. Katherine,' after whom the College is named. In 1884 he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at the University of Oxford.

As a composer Mr. Langran is best known by his hymn-tunes. He has composed about fifty, and thirty of these are included in 'The New Mitre Hymnal' (1875), of which he was the musical editor; one of the tunes in that collection, a setting of the Rev. Baring Gould's 'Forward, said the prophet,' has a fine pedal part (in crotchets) to the unison vocal refrain. There can also be placed to his credit a Te Deum and Benedictus (an easy setting in chant form); a simple setting, for parish choirs, of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (in E flat); and, of special merit, a short Communion Service, also in E flat, for parochial and general use. Of a quiet and modest disposition, Mr. Langran is a genial companion, one who can enjoy a hearty laugh and tell a good story. He bears his seventy-one years well, and it is to be hoped that the eventide of his useful life may be environed with that serenity which has characterized his church music and his artistic career.

ALL HALLOWS' PARISH CHURCH, TOTTENHAM.
(Photograph by Messrs. H. Benjafield & Son, Park Lane, Tottenham.)

In regard to the organ in the church, it was built by Thomas Elliott in 1817, and still contains some of the pipes of that master craftsman. It originally stood in the west gallery, and was subsequently placed at the extreme west end of the north aisle, the choir sitting near the instrument. It now occupies a position at the east end of the church, as shown in the photograph. From time to time the organ has been enlarged by Father Willis, Mr. Hedgeland, and Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons. The specification is as follows:

GREAT ORGAN (7 stops).

	Feet.		Feet.
Open diapason	8	Fifteenth	2
Horn diapason	8	Twelfth	2⅔
Stopped diapason	8	Mixture (3 ranks)	—

The Parish Church of All Hallows, Tottenham, of which Mr. Langran has so long been organist, is an ancient edifice which was much enlarged and restored by Mr. Butterfield in 1876. It contains a few old brasses, one of which bears the date 1499, and another 1512. One of the existing monuments in the church is that of the wife of Sir Robert Barkham, of the county of Lincoln: she died, aged thirty-six, in 1644. This monument is ornamented with a bust of the deceased lady and her husband. Beneath are the effigies of their twelve children, a quartet of sons and a double quartet of daughters: those in a recumbent position died in infancy, while a boy, who pre-deceased his parents, is holding a skull! A former rector, the Rev. William Bedwell (died 1632) earned the distinction of being called 'the father of Arabic studies in England,' and in 1604 he was chosen to be one of the Westminster company of translators of the Bible.

During Mr. Langran's long tenure of office at All Hallows, he has been associated with two vicars only—from 1870 to 1898 the Rev. Prebendary Wilson, and the present vicar, the Rev. Denton Jones, M.A., both of whom have taken a keen interest in the work of the choir. Mr. Wilson was for many years secretary of the National Society, and it was owing to his liberality and that of a few of his friends that the church was so munificently restored.

In Memoriam.

At the special service held at the Royal Mausoleum, Frogmore, on January 22, the anniversary of the death of Queen Victoria, the following music was sung: Hymn, by Dr. Watts, 'Hear what the voice from heaven proclaims,' and the anthems 'Will my tiny spark' (words by Tennyson, music by Sir Charles V. Stanford), 'It is an old belief' (words by Lockhart, music by Sir Hubert Parry), and 'How blest are they whom Thou hast chosen' (music by Tchaikovsky). The choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt, sustained the musical part of the service.

LADY ORGANISTS OF CATHEDRALS.

No fewer than ten cathedrals and pro-cathedrals in Ireland have lady organists. They are:

Achonry - -	Miss J. Heather.
Clogher - - -	Miss Haire Forster.
Clonfert - - -	Miss Kenny.
Dromore - -	Miss Alice Hamilton.
Elphin - - -	Miss Irwin.
Kildare - - -	Miss A. Magahy.
Killaloe - - -	Miss A. E. Kidd.
Leighlin - -	Mrs. Brandon.
Raphoe - - -	Miss Sheldon.
Tuam - - -	Miss Annie E. Tomb.

The above information is derived from this year's 'Roll of the Graduates in Music,' which also states that the choir of St. Anne's Cathedral, Belfast includes eighteen 'lady auxiliaries.'

A STAINER MEMORIAL AT TENBURY.

A Memorial Brass to Sir John Stainer has recently been placed in the choir of St. Michael's Church, Tenbury, by his eldest son, Mr. J. F. R. Stainer. The beautiful lines on the brass, as shown in the accompanying facsimile, are from George Herbert's poem 'Employment' ('The Temple'). They were a favourite prayer of Sir John Stainer's, and he would have liked them inscribed on his tombstone, but there were difficulties in the way. Nothing could be more appropriate than their selection for a memorial in the sacred fane where Stainer, as a youth, held his first organistship.

WAKEFIELD AND DISTRICT ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATION.

The annual dinner of this flourishing organization was held at Wakefield on January 10, the president, Mr. J. Fox, in the chair. The guest of the evening was Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, and among the members present were Dr. Bairstow, organist of Leeds Parish Church, and the indefatigable hon. secretary of the Association, Mr. A. E. S. Sugden. Mr. Moody and Dr. Bairstow made some timely remarks on the importance of devotional organ accompaniments in Divine Service, Mr. Moody saying that 'what was desired was a good, refined and musicianly accompaniment to the service—especially to the Psalms,' while Dr. Bairstow remarked that 'the organist must accompany, and not drag or force the choir, and the choir must be so trained that it could go through the service with or without an organ.' It is interesting to learn that the Association, started in 1890, has now nearly 100 members. May increasing success attend this excellent brotherhood of organists!

Dr. Varley Roberts, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, has presented an organ, costing about £500, to the parish church of his native village, Stanningley, near Leeds. The instrument has been built by Mr. J. J. Binns, of Leeds, to the following specification:

Great Organ (7 stops).

	Feet.		Feet.
Bourdon	16	Octave diapason	4
Open diapason	8	Harmonic flute	4
Dulciana	8	Doublette	2
Hohl flute	8

Swell Organ (8 stops).

Open diapason	8	Flute	4
Gamba	8	Mixture (2 ranks).
Vox Angelica	8	Cornopean	8
Celestes	8	Tremulant	—
Gedact	8

Pedal Organ (3 stops).

Open diapason	16	Bass flute	8
Sub-bass	16

Couplers.

Swell to great.
Swell to pedal.
Great to pedal.
Swell octave.
Swell to great octave.

Accessories.

Three combination pedals to great organ.
Three combination pedals to swell organ.
Balanced crescendo pedal.

The organ was opened by Dr. Varley Roberts on December 27, and on the evening of the same day the parishioners presented the donor of the new and effective instrument with a silver salver, upon which is inscribed:

> Given to Dr. J. Varley Roberts, F.R.C.O., by the congregation of St. Thomas's, Stanningley, as a memento, December 27, 1906.

In acknowledging the gift, Dr. Roberts said that he had two reasons for giving the organ—'the first being to the glory of God, and the second in memory of his relations, who were laid to rest in the churchyard.' The late Dr. John Naylor, formerly organist of York Minster, was also a native of Stanningley.

At St. Cuthbert's Church, Newport, Middlesbrough, on Sunday afternoon, December 23, a special musical service, with orchestral accompaniment, was held, at which Sir Frederick Bridge's 'The cradle of Christ' (Stabat Mater Speciosa) was sung, in addition to Dr. W. Prendergast's Magnificat in C and Mr. C. Lee Williams's devotional hymn 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.' The orchestra of twenty-five performers played Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Benedictus and Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' March at the beginning and ending respectively of the service. Mr. A. Gordon Hood, organist of the church, conducted.

A successful rendering of the sacred cantata 'The story of Bethlehem,' composed by Mr. John E. West, was performed at Holy Trinity Parish Church, Windsor, by the church choir and the Philharmonic Society, on Sunday evening, December 30, accompanied on the organ by Mr. H. R. Couldrey.

Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio (Parts 1, 2 and 3) was performed at St. George's Church, Perry Hill, Catford, on December 18, under the direction of Mr. B. Vine Westbrook, organist and choirmaster, who, in the absence of an orchestra, played the accompaniments on the organ.

The following test-pieces have been selected for the Fellowship Examination of the Royal College of Organists to be held in July next:

Sonata No. 6, in G—last movement only - J. S. Bach.
Concertsatz in E flat minor (Op. 141) - - - Merkel.
Sonata No. 6, in B minor (Op. 86)—Fugue only and Adagio - - - - - - - - - - - Guilmant.

MODERN MUSIC.

A remarkable article entitled 'Some tendencies in modern music,' which appeared in the autumn number of The Edinburgh Review, has deservedly excited considerable attention in critical circles. It has been positively stated that the author is Mr. W. H. Hadow, Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford, and we are not aware that he has denied the soft impeachment. All musical students familiar with those deeply interesting and ably written volumes, 'Studies in Modern Music,' which are avowedly written by Mr. Hadow, will find it easy to believe that the Edinburgh essay must have come from his fertile brain.

To survey and estimate judicially the forces that have hitherto governed the stream of tendency in musical art, to focus and relate in due perspective the work of this or that important composer, and to venture boldly to formulate some definite critical standard by which in the present time of bewilderment and embarrassment we may hope to steady our judgment, are tasks demanding exceptional gifts and breadth of view and unique opportunities for studying and brooding over data. But, in view even of these demands, it is not too much to say that in the article under notice these formidable tasks have to a considerable extent been accomplished with brilliant success.

The following extracts will give some idea of the scope and literary style of the article :

> If it be true, as Freeman said, that modern history begins at the call of Abraham, we can scarcely hope to find a more recent date for the beginning of modern music. As we trace back we find ourselves following the course of a continuous and unbroken record where every age takes its point of departure from something in preceding circumstances or conditions ; where schools overlap, and methods interchange, and traditions alternate and weaken and revive ; where even the most dynamic changes but liberate forces which were already operative. . . . There is no starting point, there is no finality ; and the only apparent gaps are due to our imperfect research. And all the while, to remind us of the continuity, comes criticism lagging contentedly in the rear, applying to each generation maxims derived from the practice of its predecessors, directing the advance by mapping out the ground already traversed, and issuing its marching orders at the moment when they are being superseded.

After ruling that 'music can no longer be appraised by the text-book and judged from the professor's chair,' the writer goes on to say :

> We have come to see, in short, that the true critic is simply the most enlightened listener ; not standing aloof with a manual of arrogant imperatives, but taking his place among us to stimulate our attention where it falters, and to supplement our knowledge where it is deficient. His position is not to command but to interpret, and we accept his judgment, as we would that of any other expert, as soon as we are convinced that it illuminates the point at issue.

Some keen and apt remarks are made in contrasting genius and charlatanism :

> Genius does not so transform a man as to put him out of all touch with ourselves : it is the acuter vision of that which we dimly see, the more eloquent utterance of that which we stammeringly confess, the revelation, by divine gift, of truths which we imperfectly recognize. Such sympathy no doubt implies that the artist on his side is unconscious of our presence. It is the charlatan who is constantly endeavouring to attract our attention by tricks and posture and laboured epigrams ; the true genius has his whole mind centred on his ideal, and if he gives us a thought when the work is over it is only to feel, like Beethoven, that his new quartet 'will please some day.'

Then the cult of form without regard to content is thus characterized :

> Roughly speaking, the typical aim of the eighteenth century was proportion ; the clear phrase, the symmetrical > design, the style that is lucid, polished, and transparent. In the hands of genius this attained to the highest achievements of pure beauty; in the hands of mediocrity it degenerated into a formalism which mistook craftsmanship for inspiration. And because a certain degree of craftsmanship can be reached by anyone who has skill and industry, the world soon became flooded with compositions which had all the qualities of academic art, and were accepted by an unthinking criticism which took no trouble to penetrate below the surface.

> Beethoven held expression and design in perfect balance: he was at once the greatest poet and the greatest craftsman of his age. Men like Hummel and Czerny copied the design, but left the poetry out: Berlioz—to take him as typical—followed the poetry without ever comprehending the musicianship. He honestly believed that the structure of the 'Symphonie Fantastique' was formally perfect, and that the 'Amen' fugue was written 'selon les règles les plus sévères du contrepoint'; he was so thoroughly pre-occupied with his ideal of poetic expression that he had no time to repair, or even to recognize, the deficiencies of his artistic training. And here in one word is the strength and weakness of the school which he represented. It was full of ideas, it was vivid, picturesque, impressive; it had an extraordinary power of arousing emotion, of stimulating the senses, of suggesting action or scenery; but it never learned to make full use of its tools. Schumann, who was by far the best musician of the group, is always more interesting for what he says than for the manner in which he says it; we have but to place one of his quartets beside Beethoven, or one of his fugues beside Bach, and we see the inspired amateur in contrast with the unerring skill of the perfect master.

As to the influence of Wagner, it is said that 'he was a supreme artist in his own craft,' but he 'has been a dangerous model in all forms other than dramatic':

> The great man shows that certain conventions can be traversed; a host of little men believe that by traversing them they will share his secret. He follows at all hazards the higher issue; they take the hazard where there is no such issue to justify it. Again, the very imperfections of the 'Ring'—its repetitions, its forced polyphony, its insistence on certain points of colour—while they pass almost unnoticed in the glow and splendour of its genius, have been doomed to reappear in a hundred tedious compositions which 'resemble Wagner' in their blaze of orchestration and their sedulous employment of the diminished seventh.

With this pronouncement on Wagner and his works is contrasted the following fine estimate of Brahms:

> The descendant of Bach and Beethoven, he was no less the inheritor and disciple of Schumann, and it was his work to show how full a measure of the new poetry could be poured into the moulds of an exact and perfect musical design. The character of his music, grave, dignified, noble, made it specially amenable to intellectual control; at its most impassioned moment it never loses grasp, at the flood-tide of eloquence it never forgets restraint; it is wholly incapable of extravagance or sensationalism, of cheap effect or facile appeal. It is not a music with which all hearers can be in sympathy; it covers a comparatively narrow range of emotion; it has little gaiety, little humour; its colouring is often sombre, its texture sometimes heavy and opaque. But for richness of idea, for sheer beauty of melodic outline, and above all for supreme and unerring mastery of structure, it stands, among the compositions of our time, pre-eminent. There has been no musician since Beethoven to whose pages we can so often recur with the certainty of finding fresh cause for love and admiration.

Grieg, Dvorák, Cornelius, Hugo Wolf, Bizet and others are glanced at, and then some of the latest moderns are more fully dealt with. M. Claude Debussy is thus spoken of:

> It may well be that we have here but another instance of that keen individual vitality which can transmute as well as absorb the ideas of its generation. In any case he is a true artist, a master of half-lights and delicate shadows, of colours that shift and intertwine and baffle our gaze, of a kind of beauty that is as inexplicable as it is literally beyond question. We may take it or leave it, but we cannot analyse or discuss. . . . In the Introduction to 'Pelléas et Mélisande' the most familiar passage is one of consecutive fifths balanced by one of consecutive sevenths; the rest is a tangle of semitones falling together in shapes and patterns that own allegiance to no recognized harmonic system. It never modulates, for it is without tonality; it never rests on a cadence, for it is without punctuation; its key-signature is a mere concession to the printer, and in its phraseology the laws of syntax are ignored. Yet the effect of it, as of the whole opera, is indescribably charming. Soft in tone, subtle in workmanship, exquisitely scored, it has all the delicate loveliness of Maeterlinck's play: the silent shadowy lake, the transparent nightfall, the dim castle with its tiny beacon-fire, the gentle hesitating figures that speak in the voices of dreamland.

Max Reger's much debated Violin sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 84) is severely condemned, and of Strauss it is said that 'his symphonic poems are as ostentatious as Trimalchio's banquet':

> The board groans under a weight of incongruous dainties, luxury follows luxury and surprise surprise, every corner of the empire is ransacked for a new wine or a new flavour; we are sated before the feast is half over, and think ourselves fortunate if we escape with our digestions unimpaired. There can be no doubt about the wealth; it cries out to us from every corner, it dazzles us from every piece of plate, it overwhelms us with a hundred marks of lavishness and profusion.

The Russian school is examined at some length, and finally living English composers are estimated. Of Parry it is observed that:

> Toward this ideal he has been gradually making his way, accepting first the conventional forms of the oratorio, which not even his genius could revive, and then replacing them by the freer method of ode and cantata which he has chosen for his medium in recent years. And throughout his work he employs an idiom of pure English as distinctly national as that of Purcell himself. He is the spokesman of all that is best in our age and country, its dignity, its manhood, its reverence; in his music the spirit of Milton and Wordsworth may find its counterpart.

And of Stanford it is said that he is

> A master of technique; he makes his effects with unerring certainty; his orchestra is a delight to the ear, his songs are vocal, expressive, and often fascinating. But he does not penetrate to the centre, he does not drive to the roots: he stirs us to the emotion of an April day with its counterchange of sun and shower, all charming, all exquisite, and all transitory.

Then Elgar is dealt with:

> Self-taught, self-centred, self-determined, Elgar may claim, more than any other English composer, that he has been 'his own ancestor.' His position is in some ways comparable with that of Berlioz at the beginning of the last century; there is something of the same audacity, of the same wayward brilliance, of the same desire to push musical expression across the verge of articulate speech. Indeed it is no paradox to say that 'Gerontius' offers many points of comparison with 'Faust'; the demons are different in language but not different in conception; the song of 'Praise to the Holiest' is better written than the 'Easter Hymn,' but it is almost as undevotional; the extraordinary skill of orchestration covers in the one case, as in the other, an occasional weakness of idea.
> He is much more successful in his purely orchestral writings. Here his work is more genial, more evenly rounded, more melodious; he gives a greater impression of ease, he employs to fuller effect his extraordinary power of technical detail. But, if we may hazard a conjecture, we believe that despite his decade of reputation he has not yet found himself.

Lastly, as to the danger of our English school becoming merely imitative of foreign schools, it is well stated that:

> We have our own language to speak, we have our own message to deliver, we have our own ideals to maintain; our leaders have arisen to point the road, and it is to them that the younger men will most profitably look for direction and guidance. Every great musician has learnt something from foreign schools; not one has ever been absorbed by them.

CARL PHILIPP EMANUEL BACH.

At the meeting of the Musical Association, held on January 15, Miss Emily Daymond, Mus.D. Oxon., read an interesting paper on 'The life and works of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach,' of which the following digest has kindly been furnished by the lecturer.

The hereditary musical gifts of the Bach family are too well known to need more than a brief mention; they culminated in the person of John Sebastian Bach, and curiously enough ceased very soon after his death, though most of his sons were musical. Carl Philipp Emanuel, the third son, was born in 1714. Originally intended for the law, he only threw in his lot with music in 1738, when he went to Berlin and entered the service of Frederick Prince of Prussia, afterwards Frederick the Great. Not finding matters entirely congenial, he accepted, in 1767, the post of music-director at Hamburg, in succession to Telemann, and lived there till his death in 1788. An entertaining and instructive account of his mode of life in Hamburg is given by Dr. Burney, who visited him in 1772. The historian describes his modesty and simplicity and his genial manners and grows eloquent over his clavier-playing and his compositions. That he was an extraordinarily fine clavier-player we learn also from Spitta, and it is evident that he possessed the skill and knowledge necessary to make a fine player, a fact abundantly shown by his book 'Versuch über die wahre Art das Clavier zu spielen,' published first in 1753 and, eventually, complete, in 1797. In this book, he treats of fingering, 'manieren,' 'rubato,' 'bebung,' and all the points a knowledge of which is necessary to a finished performance. His method of fingering is based on that of his father, and departs but little from it.

The majority of C. P. E. Bach's works are for clavier alone, of which the largest number are sonatas, the rest rondos, fantasias, fugues and 'Ton-stücke.' In his sonatas he devotes his energies to making clear the form which he bequeathed to Haydn and Mozart and, through them, to Beethoven. For he looks both ways, and hence arises his unique importance; looking back, he sees that his father has reached the climax in his own branch of art, and that if music is to make further advance it must be through the language of harmonic form. It is time for instruments to make their voices heard; the age of massive choral works is gone for the present. In pursuance of this idea, he insists on the balance of keys, and writes the first movements of most of his clavier sonatas in more or less definite binary form—the form developed and perfected by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. Except in the slow movements, the subject-themes are seldom of very great importance; the last movements are slight in texture, and of less interest than the other movements. For his rondos he adopts and enlarges Couperin's plan, bringing in his opening section with endless variety of key and of treatment, and introducing great diversity into his episodes. In some cases his themes are wonderfully modern, and prophetic of Beethoven or Schubert. His fantasias are mainly of two types—one recalling the semi-improvisations of his father and eldest brother in their toccatas, the other presenting us with a style peculiarly his own. In these we have themes which for sheer gaiety and light-heartedness rival those of Haydn, and he uses them in many different ways. In a Fantasia in C major the rhythmic theme which opens the first part is transformed into a charming larghetto, and again is heard as a bustling fugato, reminding one of the last movement of Beethoven's F major Sonata, Op. 10, No. 2. A beautiful rhapsodical section at the end breaks in upon the eager music with a wonderful effect. One very interesting feature of his music is his original employment of modulation between the sections, which appears also in the symphonies. It is frequently naïve, and sometimes rather self-assertive, but the idea is there, and is original.

Besides his works for clavier alone, C. P. E. Bach wrote many for clavier with other instruments, both sonatas and concertos. His choral work—though not considered by Burney to be on a level with his instrumental work—comprises some fine compositions; notably an oratorio 'The Israelites in the desert.' Written in 1775, it expresses the thoughts and conceptions of the mature musician. In outward aspect it is leagues away from his father's style; but in inward spirit parts of it exhibit a wonderful likeness to the mystical and devotional part of Sebastian Bach's work, and an extraordinarily modern feeling for the effective use of chromatic chords and progressions. The oratorio contains some fine character-drawing, in the recitatives and solos assigned to Moses, and has many points of similarity, in its scheme of composition, to 'Elijah,' though on a very different scale. For pathos and beauty its opening chorus, and the first chorus of a 'Resurrection and Ascension' written in 1787, can hardly be surpassed by any music ancient or modern.

The last branch of Bach's art to be mentioned is that of Symphony. In this he is the direct precursor of Haydn, and was the first to attempt to infuse any individuality into the passages he writes for his instruments. The movements are written with great understanding of the effect of balance of tone-colour, and the scheme of key-distribution is clear and definite. The curious device of modulating between the movements is carried out to a greater extent than in the clavier works, and with more effect. There is no doubt that in Emanuel Bach we have a personality very little known, very little appreciated, but of a very real importance to the history of the art, and of a musical interest quite apart from his historical worth.

The following illustrations were performed:

Group of works for clavier, played by Mr. James Friskin.
  First movement from sonata in F minor.
  Slow movement from the sonata in F.
  Rondo in D minor.
  Fantasia in C major.
Selection from the oratorio, 'The Israelites in the desert.
  Opening chorus (Israelites).
    'Our tongues cleave to our parchèd mouths.'
  Second chorus (Israelites to Moses).
    'Thou art the source of all our woe.'
  Bass recitative and solo (Moses).
    'Ungrateful folk!'
    'Lord, see Thy people in deep abasement.'
  Soprano solo (Israelitish woman).
    'In the glowing rays of mid-day.'
Opening chorus from 'Resurrection and Ascension.'
    'Lord, Thou wilt not leave His soul in hell.'

SHORT ANTHEMS FOR MEN'S VOICES.

Behold, how good and joyful. Composed by George C. Martin.

O come, ye servants of the Lord. By R. F. Martin Akerman.

Who is like unto Thee, O Lord? By John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Sir George Martin's anthem was composed for the consecration of the Cathedral Masonic Lodge, No. 2741, and has for its text the third and fourth verses of Psalm 132. The subject dictates that the music should be diatonic and direct in expression, and this the experienced church musician has realized, at the same time recognizing the necessity for contrasts.

Mr. Akerman has adopted a contrapuntal style that imparts special artistic interest to his anthem. Intended to be sung unaccompanied, it requires prompt attack and a choir of sufficient strength to divide into six parts with due balance of tone. The opening phrase, given out by the basses in unison, has a significance that imparts considerable strength to the composition, and the close, rallentando and diminuendo down to pianissimo, is impressive.

'Who is like unto Thee, O Lord?' written for two alto and two bass voices, is more extended in design than the preceding anthem. Mr. West's harmonic scheme is essentially modern, and the organ part possesses considerable and, it may be added, effective independence. The voice parts will be found easy to sing and interesting to the singers, who in sundry short passages are unaccompanied, whereby effective contrast is provided. The work is written throughout for four vocal parts, but they are so well disposed that no sense of monotony is engendered.

PART-SONGS.

Ballade of Spring. Ballade of midsummer days and nights. Words by W. E. Henley. Music by Theo. Wendt.

The Primrose. Words by Thomas Carew. Amaryllis I did woo. Words by George Wither. Music by John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

At a time when one lives in expectancy of snow it is pleasant to think that the spring is near, and the titles of Mr. Theo. Wendt's part-songs are decidedly attractive. Moreover the text is by an estimable poet. One spring is very like another, yet it seldom fails to inspire writers to give us of their best, for the season is the emblem of renewal of life. 'The ballade of spring' and the 'Ballade of midsummer days and nights' are joyous ditties well calculated to stir the pulse of an audience. The former contains passages for bouche fermée against some effective contrapuntal writing for the tenors and basses, while towards the close the voices are divided into six parts. 'The ballade of midsummer' is shorter than its companion, but it is no less bright and interesting. The majority of choral conductors will find that the part-writing will require more practice, particularly the last page, but any extra labour involved in realizing the composer's intentions will be well repaid by results.

'The primrose' and 'Amaryllis I did woo,' composed by Mr. John E. West, and forming numbers 4 and 5 of 'Cavalier lyrics,' are lighthearted remembrances of the spring. In the former lines Carew poetically compares the doubts and fears of a lover's feelings with the swiftly following clouds and sunshine common to the season, and the old poet's delicate sentiment has been happily caught by the composer. The subject of 'Amaryllis' is the disadvantage accruing from being in love with four ladies at the same time—a terrible example of want of concentration. The music deftly expresses the situation, and, while doing impartial justice to Amaryllis, Phyllis, Daphne and Chloris, suggests the difficulty of the hero who finds his ideal woman so divided.

The Romantic composers. By Daniel Gregory Mason.

[Macmillan & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Mason, like Mr. Gilman, is an American writer of repute on music. The present volume completes the trilogy of studies of composers and their music, the former instalments being entitled 'From Grieg to Brahms,' and 'Beethoven and his forerunners.' Following an introduction on 'Romanticism in music,' the remaining chapters are devoted to Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Berlioz and Liszt. Partly biographical and partly critical, these 'studies are,' Mr. Mason says, 'intended simply as guides to the music they discuss. If they lead the reader to the concert-hall, to the piano, to the library of scores . . . if they incite him to repeat and analyze his musical experiences, to listen with his mind as well as his ears, to study a symphony as alertly as he would study a painting or an essay—then only will they have justified their existence.' With all due deference to the modesty of the author, we venture to think that his essays justify their existence by reason of the truth that is in them and the way it is expressed. Mr. Mason is in error in giving Devrient as the brother-in-law of Mendelssohn (pp. 170 and 172); it should be Dirichlet, the painter—he, not Devrient, married Rebecca Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

Mozart. Beethoven. Compiled and annotated by Friedrich Kerst; translated into English, and edited, with additional notes, by Henry Edward Krehbiel.

[Gay & Bird.]

So much has been written upon the master-musicians Mozart and Beethoven that it would seem as if there remained nothing more to be said, even upon such absorbing themes. Herr Kerst has, however, hit upon the happy idea of compiling a selection of the sayings of Mozart and Beethoven and setting them forth in the two attractive volumes—one assigned to each composer—bearing the subtitle 'The man and the artist, as revealed in his own words.' On this ground alone the autobiographical extracts—Mozart numbering 255; Beethoven, 323—furnish much interesting matter in a concise and paragraphic form. Mr. Krehbiel is thoroughly au fait with the subjects upon which he has bestowed his translating skill, and his notes add to the value of these readable little volumes.

The music of to-morrow, and other studies. By Lawrence Gilman.

[John Lane.]

It is increasingly becoming the custom of American writers on music to publish their magazine and newspaper articles in a collective form. Mr. Gilman's book is one of the latest examples of a custom which has its advantages and disadvantages according to the value of the subject-matter. Here we have eight essays on modern music—for instance, Debussy, Vincent D'Indy, Strauss and 'Salome,' Modern music and the 'love interest,' and so on. Throughout the pages of this thoughtful volume the author, who is deeply in sympathy with the ultra-modern school of music, gives proof that he has thoroughly grasped the various subjects upon which he discourses, and his essays show that he has the pen of a cultured writer.

THE SACKBUT: ITS EVOLUTION AND HISTORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—It may be of interest to students of the history of musical instruments to offer some criticism on the paper read by the Rev. F. W. Galpin at the Musical Association, and reported in The Musical Times for December last; otherwise there might be a danger that all the statements made would be accepted as authoritative and final, if only because they appeared in print.

It was somewhat unfortunate that Mr. Galpin should have undertaken to trace the evolution as well as the philological history of the sackbut, particularly as it came out in conversation, at the close of the paper, that he did not know what the early forms of the sackbut and its sister instruments were like.

The word 'sackbut' only expresses that form of instrument making its way northwards from Spain to France and Great Britain, for it came under other distinct names into other countries, as far eastward as Constantinople.

Also, it is not correct to assert that the Latin term to express the sackbut, in the Middle-Ages, namely, 'sambuca,' was a case of 'mistaken identity.' Latin being the universal church language, it became necessary to find names in that language for all the church instruments, and the word sambuca was used, not to suggest that 'sackbut,' as a word, was derived from it, but merely to indicate the shape of the sackbut.

In the Middle-Ages names without meaning were not bestowed on the instruments, and were given for the best of reasons.

Also it is incorrect to say that the use of the sackbut, or trombone, declined very considerably during the 18th century. This statement rests no doubt on an article in the Encyclopædia Britannica by M. V. Mahillon, who had the misfortune to quote from a writer giving second-hand information as to the trombone-playing of that period.

But the instrument had received a serious set-back in England in the 17th century, owing to the Civil War. The original trombone parts to three of Handel's oratorios in his own handwriting, still existing in the Royal Library at Buckingham Palace, go a long way to disprove any decline in the use of the instrument, and it is probable that all his oratorios had similar parts, which were played by the King's Sackbuts, as they were still called, although the sackbut form of the instrument had given place to the perfected trombone in Tudor times.

I am afraid that nowadays there is no chance of a return to what Mr. Galpin supposes was the tone of the sackbut in the 16th century, as, in the last hundred years, although the orchestras have doubled, the number of trombones remaining the same, the players are expected to blow loud enough to dominate the whole orchestra.

I wish to point out that nothing is more unfair, or betrays ignorance of the facts in a greater degree, than the custom that obtains in this country of blaming the trombone-players, when the real offenders are to be found among the conductors or composers.

There only remains to be added that not one of the instruments shown by Mr. Galpin could be described as sackbuts, as he seemed to think—they were trombones, pure and simple.

George Case,
Professor of the Trombone at the Royal College of Music.

[By the courtesy of the Editor, I venture to make a short reply to Professor Case's criticisms on my recent paper. Let me first of all assure him that I am far too conscious of the vast extent of unexplored material still before us to claim any of my statements as 'authoritative and final.' I am sure that in any research work a great deal of mischief is done by those enthusiasts who are so certain that they are right to the exclusion of all others, past, present, and future; and I hoped that I had guarded against such a calamity by emphasizing the fact that my paper was based solely on those private conclusions to which my own individual inquiry, so far as it had gone, had led me.

As regards our conversation after the reading of my paper, it was necessarily curtailed, for I may remind the Professor that an excellent dinner was awaiting both of us, and I fear my unwillingness to be drawn into further discussion at such a time laid me open to the charge of ignorance. But, as those who were present know, I had already carefully explained and illustrated the origin and primitive shape of the sackbut (of which Mr. Case speaks), and had on view a photograph of a 15th century representation of this earlier form, whilst I also had stated that a 14th century representation of the instrument was known to me: so that, much as I enjoyed and appreciated our after conversation, I was much more pleased to find my details and statements confirmed by Mr. Case. Perhaps I ought to have said so.

It seems to me that the reason of his protest is his objection to the instrument I exhibited, which he says is not a sackbut because it is not a 14th century sackbut. You might as well say that a motor-car of to-day is not a motor-car because it is not the first motor-car. The instrument shown at the lecture was made in the 16th century by the man who made these instruments for King Henry VIII. of England, and the instruments he made were known in this country at that time by one name only—Sagbut or Sackbut. So I consider that the name I gave it is legitimate and correct. With reference to the sambuca, my point is gained when Professor Case admits that the sambuca was not the sackbut. As regards the 18th century, it must be evident to any student of the orchestral works and treatises of that period, that sackbut playing in this country was in a very bad way, in fact, almost forgotten, except by the musicians of the King's Band, who were importations from the continent; for in Germany the posaune was still flourishing. I think Mr. Mahillon, in the well-known article of the Encyclopædia Britannica, is alluding rather to the faulty method of its study than to any decline in its use in that country.

I am sure that my critic will agree with me that the use of the trombone in military bands has not tended to the cultivation of a smoother tone, and those who heard my paper will remember that I did not lay all the blame on my brother players. I am only sorry that owing to press of time the many notes appended to my paper were omitted at the reading; they will, however, appear in the printed Proceedings of the Musical Association with, I hope, such illustrations as may satisfy those interested in the subject.

I sincerely trust that my erroneous statements—from my critic's point of view—may be the means of inducing him to publish his monograph on the trombone upon which he has been engaged for many years, and which, had it been already in our hands, would have rendered my little contribution unnecessary and presumptuous.—F. W. Galpin.]

NAMES OF INSTRUMENTALISTS PRINTED IN CONCERT PROGRAMMES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—I venture to suggest that the practice of printing the names of the members of the orchestra in the programmes of musical festivals was not originated by Sir Michael Costa, as stated on p. 744 of your November issue. Copies of the programmes of the Birmingham Musical Festivals, held in 1820, 1823, 1829, 1834, &c., are preserved in the Free Library of that city, and the names of the instrumental performers are given in each instance. A complete list of the band and chorus who took part in the Festival of 1834, appears at p. 88. of the 'Musical Library Supplement' for that year, and at p. 53 of the same publication the editor reproduces from the official programme a list of the instrumental and vocal performers who assisted at a Handel Festival at Westminster Abbey in June of that year. These lists are very interesting.

R. B. P.

[This is perfectly true; but we qualified the statement with the word 'generally.' It was not until 1846, when Costa assumed the conductorship, that the Philharmonic Society printed the names of the orchestra for public information.—Ed. M.T.]

THE PIRATES—AND AFTER!

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—We have had several inquiries from the musical profession and the music trade as to the actual costs incurred by us in our successful prosecution of Mr. Willetts for criminal conspiracy in connection with music piracies, also our costs in connection with the promoting and securing the passing of the recent Musical Copyright Act by Parliament.

The cost of the Willetts prosecution amounted to	3,000 guineas.
The cost of the Leeds prosecution amounted to	1,000 guineas.
Parliamentary expenses beyond this amounted to	£2,500
A total of...	£6,700

These figures do not include various other large sums of money expended by us last year in connection with music piracies, and amounting to considerably over £2,000.

Towards the expenses of the two criminal conspiracy prosecutions and the Parliamentary costs of our Bill we have up to the present received the following subscriptions:—

From the whole of the music publishing and retail trade	£1,363
From composers publishing exclusively with us	£537
And from composers publishing with other houses in the trade	£185

Yours faithfully,
CHAPPELL & CO., LTD.

50, New Bond Street, W.
January 14, 1907.

[The above total amount, large as it is, does not include the entire sum that has been spent by individual music publishers in fighting the nefarious trade of the pirate. —ED. M.T.]

Obituary.

The death is announced of CYRIL KISTLER, aged nearly fifty-nine, a musician of repute in Germany. Born near Augsburg on March 12, 1848, he became a student of the Munich Conservatorium, and subsequently taught music at the Conservatoire of Sondershausen, and in 1885 was principal of a music school at Kissingen. His compositions included the following operas: 'Kunihild' (Sondershausen, 1884), 'Eulenspiegel,' a comic opera (Wurzburg, 1889), 'Arm Elslein' (Schwerin, 1902), and 'Röslein im Hag' (Elberfeld, 1903). He published in 1879 a treatise on harmony and gave further proof of his industry by contributions to musical literature. At one time Kistler was regarded as a light that was to shine brightly as a creative genius, but 'he came not.'

A former well-known conductor of the Carl Rosa Company—EUGENE GOOSSENS—died at Liverpool on December 31 last, aged 61. A native of Belgium, he studied at Bruges and afterwards became a prize-winner at the Brussels Conservatoire. After the death of Carl Rosa he settled at Liverpool as a professor of music, where he conducted a male-voice choir; at the time of his death he was choirmaster of St. Anne's Church, Edgehill, Liverpool.

The 'Roll of the Union of Graduates in music and kalendar' for 1907 is welcome, as it always is, by reason of its usefulness as a book of reference. In addition to the list of members of the Union the book contains much general information on matters musical.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The twenty-second Annual Conference was held at Buxton from December 31 to January 4, when a large number of members foregathered in order to participate in the intellectual and social advantages resulting from pleasant intercourse.

By far and away the outstanding feature of the proceedings was the paper read on New Year's Day by Prof. Prout on 'Bach's Church Cantatas.' This is a subject upon which the veteran musician is fully competent to discourse, for has he not read through the whole of the 190 full scores that have been published of these works? With all the enthusiasm of a Samuel Wesley, the Professor said that 'Bach is the young musician's admiration and the old musician's adoration. It is only gradually that his greatness dawns upon one. Bach speaks a language of his own, quite different from that of other composers. Until one becomes by long acquaintance perfectly familiar with his idiom one fails to grasp his meaning, or to feel the deep emotional, as distinguished from the technical beauty of his music.' In regard to the Church cantatas he said: 'They occupied a position in the service analogous to that of the anthem in our English churches. The nearest analogy in our church music might be found in Handel's Chandos anthems, or the anthems occasionally written with orchestral accompaniment for special festival performances.' He added—and how true it is—that 'Bach's genius ranged through the whole gamut of emotion. Unsurpassable in his mastery of the technique of his art, at the same time all his mastery is subordinated to the deeply religious sentiment that is so prominent a feature in all the composer's sacred music.' The lecturer illustrated his interesting and illuminating paper with extracts from the Church cantatas played by himself on the pianoforte, while vocal examples from these masterpieces of sacred music were excellently sung by Mr. Francis Harford.

In the evening of New Year's Day, Dr. Markham Lee discoursed upon 'English vocal music of the 16th and 17th centuries.' Madrigal and dramatic music formed the basis of the lecture-recital, as it was called, not the least interesting feature being the various vocal solos and concerted pieces that charmed the listeners.

No one is more fitted to speak on the subject of vocal culture than Dr. W. H. Cummings, by reason of his having held a high position as a tenor vocalist no less than by his long experience and wide reading as a musician. In reminiscent mood the Principal of the Guildhall School of Music began the reading of his paper. He said—referring to a remark of the chairman (Mr. Charles Hancock), who paid a high tribute to the lecturer's rendering of the recitatives at a performance of Bach's 'Passion' in Westminster Abbey:

> The manner in which he came to sing the recitative work at the performance Mr. Hancock had mentioned was rather curious. Sims Reeves refused to do it, and said no one would undertake it but Cummings, 'and he was such a donkey he would undertake anything.' He paid £2 for the full score, and with that and the Gospels before him he tried to imbue himself with the subject.

From genial reminiscence Dr. Cummings embarked on a little autobiography quite as interesting in its way:

> He commenced his singing career as a chorister in St. Paul's Cathedral sixty-eight years ago, before he was seven years of age. During the few years he remained in St. Paul's choir he was taught the music used in the Cathedral service, but his voice was left to grow, no special instructions being given as to its use or abuse. Mistakes in the rendering of the service music were genially corrected by the master, William Hawes, aided by a charming little riding-whip, which he applied to their backs with benevolent impartiality, and which they found a very stimulating tonic.

In the course of his remarks on the main theme of his discourse, Dr. Cummings said :

> In all matters of vocalism the ear was the ultimate judge. The quality and colour of the voice should be brought out by singing the vowel sounds. Certain vowels were more favourable to resonance than others; but as we had to use every vowel in singing we should study them all systematically in preliminary exercises. Afterwards the vowels should be sung in rotation with the various consonants prefixed. English singers too frequently presented a stolid countenance, quite regardless of the sentiment of the words they were singing. Facial expression included the use of the eyes, the cheeks, the mouth, and certainly the lower jaw; if the lower jaw were fixed there could be no perfect expression. It was important that the voice should be permitted to grow in a natural manner, and on no account be forced or strained.

No less valuable were these words of wisdom: 'That no singer should give less than three years in acquiring the technique of his art; that there was no universal method of teaching singing; that the clear pronunciation of the words in singing was most important; that if the words were not heard, as was often the case in the present day, the distinction between the voice and an instrument was lost.' It is no wonder that Prof. Prout said that Dr. Cummings's paper was 'as full of common-sense as an egg full of meat.'

'The tendency of modern music' was the subject selected by Mr. J. Carlowitz Ames for the lecture and recital in the evening. Mr. Ames said :

> The first thing that struck one in connection with the tendencies of modern music was that the ultra-moderns were apparently wallowing in a sea of cacophony. Altogether, they might say of the French school that it was impressionistic, and of the German that it was realistic, in tendency. It was hard to guess at the outcome of the present curious experimental stage of music. That they would return to a greater simplicity he did not believe, or if they did it would be simplicity of a totally different nature from what now to their minds represented simplicity. It would probably take the form of vagueness. That a new system, or rather a new aspect, of harmony would come he felt very sure, as he was also sure that the use of other modes besides the ordinary major and minor would become general. Where, however, he believed a great development would take place was in rhythm. Already all sorts of experiments in strange and novel times were being made, and he believed that just as they had a melodic age which culminated in the monumental contrapuntal works of Bach, a harmonic age which now, according to their old system at least, seemed to have reached its limits, so they might in the future have a rhythmic age, where the chief stress would be laid on the rhythm.

The instrumental selections illustrating Mr. Ames's lecture included the Allegretto movement from Max Reger's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in F sharp minor (Op. 84), and the third movement from a String quartet by Debussy, as representing foreign modern composers; also excerpts from three manuscript string quartets composed by Mr. Algernon Ashton, Mr. J. B. McEwen and Mr. R. H. Walthew, as illustrative of the young British school of composers. The performers were the Hunt Quartet — Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello).

The 'fun of the fair' took place on January 3, when Dr. C. W. Pearce read a paper entitled 'A parting of the ways.' In the course of his discourse the lecturer considered that the theory of Dr. Day had had its day, though he did not suggest the adoption of any system evolved by a knight. The subject is too technical even to be summarized in a brief report, and to attempt a resumé would not do justice to Dr. Pearce's thoughtful and clearly-stated views on the subject. The full text of the paper—and, indeed, of all the other papers read and the discussions consequent upon them—will be found in the special Conference number of the Society's Journal. Suffice it to say that, as of old and like theology, the subject of harmony proves to be one round which the storms of controversy rage with tremendous force, and that it finds endless opportunities for differences of opinion on the part of the theorists who take these matters so seriously.

A concert given on the evening of January 3 was remarkable for the absence from the programme of any instrumental work by a British musician, Arensky, Brahms, Godard and Mendelssohn being the composers drawn upon. The usual dinner brought the proceedings to a festive conclusion, and thus ended a successful meeting. The Conference of 1908 is to be held at Harrogate.

GERMAN OPERA.

An interesting season of German Opera was commenced at Covent Garden on January 14 by a syndicate with Mr. Ernest Van Dyck as general manager, in association with Mr. Frank Rendle who, as sub-lessee of the house, provided the scenery and the costumes. A special feature of the enterprise was the engagement of the London Symphony Orchestra and Messrs. Arthur Nikisch, Franz Schalk, Ysaye, and Leopold Reichwein as conductors, the last-named having won much repute as assistant-conductor at Bayreuth. The importance of the orchestra in German music-drama need not be dwelt upon, and the English band, under the direction of Mr. Nikisch, gave interpretations of the instrumental part of 'Tristan and Isolde' on January 15 and 19, that will long be remembered by reason of the superb volume and balance of tone combined with fascinating delicacy and subtlety of phrasing and accentuation. Mr. Nikisch also conducted during the first week 'Der fliegende Holländer,' and on January 16 a revival of Weber's 'Der Freischütz,' which had not been heard in London since it was performed in 1895 by the Saxe-Coburg and Gotha Company at Drury Lane under the management of the late Sir Augustus Harris. This revival was specially interesting because, coming in the midst of Wagner's dramatic works, it was easy to trace how much the Bayreuth master was indebted for his reforms to the ideas of Weber, particularly with regard to the definite significance attached to orchestral writing. The principal characters were embodied by the following artists: Agathe, Miss Marcella Craft, Aennchen, Madame Bosetti; and Ottokar, Cuno, Caspar, Max, and Kilian, respectively by Messrs. Hans Bussard, Albert Leonhardt, Allen C. Hinckley, Ernst Kraus, and Willy Birkenfeld.

The season was opened by an excellent performance of 'Die Meistersinger,' conducted by Mr. Reichwein, and the other operas given have been 'Lohengrin' and 'Die Walküre.' A considerable number of new artists have appeared, the most important being the Finnish prima donna Madame Aïno Ackté, who made her début as Elsa in 'Lohengrin' at an afternoon performance on January 16, and by the charm of her personality, musical quality of her voice and finished singing, created a most favourable impression. The chief characters in 'Tristan' were sustained by Mr. Van Dyck, Madame Felia Litvinne, Madame Marie Brema, and Dr. Felix von Krauss, the last-named appearing as the King, and at once establishing himself as an artist of the first rank. Favourable impressions in 'Die Meistersinger' were made by Mr. Hans Bussard as David, Mr. Fritz Feinhals as Hans Sachs, and Mr. Franz Adam as Beckmesser. In 'Der fliegende Holländer' there appeared Madame von Westhoven as Senta, Mr. Theodor Bertram as the storm-driven mariner, and Mr. Franz Naval as the jilted lover.

Smetana's 'Die Verkaufte Braut' ('The bartered bride') was revived, after twelve years, on January 24, with Madame Bosetti as Marie, Herr Naval as Hans, Herr Bussard as Wenzel, and Herr Karl Marx as Kezal. The vivacious music, directed by Herr Schalk, met with a favourable reception.

The chorus, selected from leading German opera houses, augmented in certain works by thirty members of the London Liederkreitz, have sung with verve and precision, and the stage management has been noteworthy for attention to detail.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Sir Hubert Parry's vivacious setting of 'The Pied piper of Hamelin' received its first performance by this Society at the concert of January 24, and there can be little doubt that the highly agreeable impression it created will induce the directorate of the Society to place the cantata permanently in its répertoire. The large choir sang the work con amore, a notable feature being their excellent enunciation. The feeling of the conductor was evidently in touch with the humour of the poem and music, and Sir Frederick Bridge deserves hearty congratulations on the success of the performance. Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Dan Price were, needless to say, admirable exponents of the Piper and the Mayor. The novelty found an admirable contrast in Handel's 'Alexander's Feast,' which preceded Sir Hubert Parry's cantata and received an excellent interpretation by the choir, orchestra and solo vocalists, Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Harry Dearth.

The customary New Year's Day performance of the 'Messiah' attracted a large and appreciative audience. The choruses were sung with precision and good tone, while the solo music was in the hands of such capable artists as Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Watkin Mills. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted, and Mr. H. L. Balfour occupied his accustomed place at the organ.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The birth of the New Year was celebrated at Queen's Hall with musical honours of auspicious character. It surely was a good augury that a programme made up of 'The magic flute,' 'Coriolan,' '1812' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, and Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 3, in G minor, for strings, should attract a large and enthusiastic audience, and the interpretation of these works by the orchestra promised many pleasures to come. This may also be said of the fine singing by Miss Maria Philippi.

A particularly interesting programme was presented at the concert of January 19. It opened with Mozart's three famous overtures, 'Don Giovanni,' 'Le Nozze di Figaro,' and 'Die Zauberflöte,' which were followed by the master's 'Jupiter' (so-called) symphony. This was in itself a feast of good things, particularly as the interpretations were distinguished by crispness, verve, and captivating finish. The second part presented a striking contrast. In this, Sibelius's exhilarating symphonic poem 'Finlandia' (Op. 27) led the van, and was succeeded by Debussy's vague prelude 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' and the impressive closing scene from 'Götterdämmerung,' with Madame Agnes Nicholls personating Brünnhilde. Such a selection afforded an instructive example of the progress of musical expression, and it was followed with the keenest attention and fully enjoyed by a large audience. Both concerts were ably conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The fifth concert of the season was given at the Queen's Hall on January 21. Owing to the engagement of the orchestra to play at the German opera season now in progress some changes had to be made, but happily there was no cause for dissatisfaction at the standard of the performance. The programme included Dvorák's 'From the new world' symphony, the Largo movement in which was beautifully played. But nothing else in the programme seemed to give the audience so much pleasure as Bach's Overture in B minor for flute and strings. The solo flute part was played with rare charm by Mr. D. S. Wood. 'In the South' (Elgar) was another item very impressively interpreted. Mr. John Coates sang the difficult bravura aria 'From boyhood trained' from Weber's 'Oberon,' and gave a very effective performance of Dr. Brewer's 'Three Elizabethan Pastorals'—compositions which display the composer at his best. Dr. Richter conducted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Concert Society recently gave an admirable Schumann festival, while at a chamber music concert Fräulein Klara Roche and Herr Ludwig Hess, from Munich, sang some of Schumann's finest Lieder, among them various seldom heard numbers. Ferdinand Löwe played the great Fantasia in C, Op. 17, and on the following day he conducted with marked energy the symphonies in C major and D minor. The programme included the Pianoforte concerto, of which Raoul Pugno gave a masterly rendering. In addition there was a two days' festival at the Conservatorium under the direction of Richard von Perger: a chamber concert the programme of which included the Pianoforte quintet, and one with orchestra at which the B flat Symphony and the 'Manfred' music were well performed by the pupils.

A Brahms festival, under the direction of Franz Schalk, given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, was worthy of the master. The programme included the 'Song of destiny,' 'Nänie,' and four of the finest choruses for mixed voices, also the Pianoforte concerto in B flat with the gifted pianist and musician, Ernst von Dohnányi, as soloist. As Brahms about thirty years ago was himself conductor of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, and as chief member of the executive committee exerted influence over the Gesellschaft concerts and over the Conservatorium, this festival held in his memory, in addition to its artistic importance, had also a strongly personal character. The majority of the performers, and indeed of the audience, had known him, and had often seen him conduct in the very same hall.

Mention may be made of an impressive performance at another Gesellschaft concert of Beethoven's 'Missa solennis,' likewise under Schalk's direction.

Michael Haydn, the younger brother of Joseph Haydn, whose songs for male chorus and solemn sacred music were highly appreciated in his day, is almost forgotten by musicians, but not so in the Catholic churches of Austria, where his works are still performed and keenly appreciated. A symphony of his was given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, under the direction of Karl Luze.

Richard Strauss has appeared as conductor at the Philharmonic concerts. His programme included Weber's 'Euryanthe' overture, Mozart's G minor, and Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphonies. The audience was interested to see the composer, but his peculiar rendering of these well-known classical works was not to their liking; it was artificial and lacking in temperament. At these concerts Felix Mottl was more successful. He created a marked impression in Schubert's early Symphony in C (No. 6), also in Goetz's Symphony in F, and Goldmark's Scherzo in A. In another concert under his direction was given Max Reger's new and highly attractive Serenade in G. In this work the composer makes sparing use of wind instruments, but by dividing his orchestra into two parts, one of which plays throughout with muted strings, he obtains some delicate effects.

The anniversary of Beethoven's birthday on December 16 was celebrated by the 'Volksbildung' Society. This event fell on a Sunday, and in the remote and poorer districts of the city where concerts are rare, excellent performances of Beethoven's works were arranged, of which brief explanations were given by word of mouth; the charge, too, for admission was exceedingly moderate. In this way honour was paid to the memory of the mighty master who a hundred years ago could be seen walking in our streets.

At the Hofoper Mahler has revived, and with decided success, two neglected operas, Goetz's 'Taming of the Shrew' and Rossini's 'Il Barbiére.' He has also won success as a composer by a performance of his own sixth Symphony. This work lasts one hour and a half, and therefore is almost sufficient of itself to fill a concert programme. The composer was heartily applauded by the public, but that a novelty also provokes opposition need not cause astonishment.

Mandyczewski.

Mr. Robert Turnbull, the musical critic of the Glasgow Herald, will shortly publish, through Mr. S. Wellwood, a volume entitled 'Musical genius and religion.'

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Queen's College Musical Society gave a vocal and pianoforte recital in the College examination hall on January 17. Dr. L. Walker, the pianist, played with his usual musicianly skill and charm the following selection: Schubert's Sonata in B flat, Schumann's 'Carneval' (Op. 9), Chopin's Prelude (Op. 28) and Berceuse (Op. 57), and Liszt's 'Rhapsodie Hongroise.' Madame Gertrude Drinkwater sang 'Rêverie' ('Sognai,' F. Schira), 'Canzonetta' (Fesch), 'Romanza' (Lotti), aria 'Roberto, tu che adoro' (Meyerbeer), also two songs each by Purcell and Schubert, and 'Mein Herz ist kalt' by R. Strauss——altogether a most admirable programme.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An event of considerable interest was the first concert given by the newly-formed West Bromwich Choral Society in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, which took place in the lecture hall of that institution at West Bromwich on January 9, under Mr. Arthur Cooke's conductorship. The principal work performed was Mr. Joseph H. Adams's choral ballad 'King Conor,' preceded by a graphic recitation of the poem by Mr. Maurice Graham. The honours fell to the choir, especially to the sopranos and contraltos, whose voices are of a ringing quality. The orchestra, entirely consisting of amateurs, needs, however, considerably strengthening in the strings before it can cope with any elaborate orchestral accompaniments.

Among the local amateur choral organizations the Birmingham Temperance Philharmonic Choral Society is steadily advancing in the art of unaccompanied and accompanied part-singing under the conductorship of Mr. W. G. Proverbs, as was fully demonstrated at its thirty-first concert given in the Town Hall on January 7. An extraordinary success was achieved by the Spanish violinist Señor José Solér Gomez, an artist of temperament and great executive ability. Songs were ably given by Mlle. Ghita Corri, Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Tom Child and Mr. Sidney Stoddard.

The Birmingham Amateur Opera Society was once more associated with the annual conversazione of the Midland Institute, and gave in the large lecture theatre of that institution, on January 15, 16, 17 and 18, a really excellent all-round performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Pirates of Penzance.' Noteworthy was the finished playing of the professional orchestra; another feature of merit being the fine singing of the chorus. The cast of principals included Miss Edith Ryland, Mr. Frank Titterton, Miss Clara Walker, &c. Mr. E. W. Priestley ably conducted.

Only passing reference can be made to Mr. Willy Lehmann's second chamber concert, held at the Masonic Hall, January 17, and Miss Elma Baker's concert, given at the Masonic Hall on the following evening, for which admirable programmes of music were provided, executed in a highly artistic manner.

Mr. J. W. Turner successfully inaugurated a three weeks' operatic season at his own locale, the Grand Theatre, on January 14, with a brilliant performance of 'Satanella,' which he revived in 1900. The present visit is in the nature of a 'Farewell,' as the theatre will change proprietorship on March 1.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Ladies' night of the Bristol Madrigal Society on January 10 was as attractive as any of its predecessors, and the Victoria Rooms were crowded by an audience who appeared highly gratified with the interpretation of compositions ancient and modern. Mr. D. W. Rootham—who succeeded the late Mr. J. D. Corfe as conductor of the Society in 1865—ably conducted the performance. Wilbye's 'Down in a valley' and Bateson's 'Sister, awake' were new to local hearers, and 'O, that the learned poets' by Orlando Gibbons, had not been in the Society's programme since 1847. As usual Pearsall found a place in the scheme, and though neither 'Sir Patrick Spens' nor 'In dulci jubilo,' which for several years were sung alternately, was now selected, there were 'Great God of Love' and 'Lay a garland'—fine compositions worthy a place in any programme. Among the audience were Mr. E. E. Cooper and Mr. Charles Crews, librarian and treasurer respectively of the Madrigal Society (London).

The Shirehampton and Avonmouth Society had a specially interesting concert on January 16 in the Parish Hall. Under the direction of Mr. P. Napier Miles, the choir rendered the 'Marienlieder' of Brahms, Miss B. de Hochepied and the Rev. E. H. Fellowes played Bach's Concerto for two violins, and the last named, with Mr. Miles, Beethoven's Sonata in G for pianoforte and violin (Op. 96). Mr. W. H. Hadow delivered a lecture upon the compositions of Bach and Beethoven.

On January 16 the twenty-sixth annual concert of the Bristol Temperance Choral Society was given in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, the conductor being Mr. F. Stone. In addition to pieces for the choir there were songs nicely rendered by Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Maude England and Mr. Alfred Manby. Mr. Sidney Jones played some piccolo solos, and Mr. C. A. Inman accompanied.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth orchestral concert, on December, 18 introduced a conductor new to Edinburgh in the person of Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the able leader of the Scottish Orchestra. Naturally much interest centred in Mr. Verbrugghen's first appearance, and the verdict of a very large audience was entirely favourable. The one novelty in the programme was the highly-coloured 'Epithalamium' by Mr. J. H. Foulds. Miss Lillie Wormald sang very beautifully. The fifth concert, on December 24, and the extra concert, on December 31, were both conducted by Dr. Cowen. At the former the outstanding features were the 'New World' symphony of Dvorák's and Dr. Cowen's own 'Phantasy of life and love,' in which the orchestra found some distinctly happy moments. Miss Ada Crossley was the vocalist. For the extra concert Wagner and Tchaikovsky alone were laid under contribution, the most important feature of the programme being the last-named composer's '1812' overture. Mr. John Coates sang the 'Preislied' from 'Die Meistersinger' very effectively. That Herr Peter Raabe, who conducted the sixth concert on January 7, is a virtuoso of the first order is unquestionable. He roused a generally apathetic audience to a pitch of enthusiasm, and established himself as a prime favourite. The best performed of all the pieces were perhaps Smetana's fine symphonic poem 'Vltava,' and the 'Invitation to the waltz' (Weber-Weingartner). At the seventh concert, on January 14, Mozart's overture to 'Titus' stood out in vivid contrast to such works as the E minor Symphony of Sibelius, and the 'Don Juan' symphonic poem of Richard Strauss. M. Raoul Pugno played exquisitely in the 'Variations symphoniques' of César Franck and the 'Africa' fantasia of Saint-Saëns. To both these works Dr. Cowen secured accompaniments of great charm.

Large audiences are supporting the Gade Sunday concerts. The orchestral performances are good, and the singers are all artists of distinction, as is shown by the list of names: Madame Ella Russell, Madame Sobrino, Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. John Harrison.

The Edinburgh Gaelic Choir held its annual concert on December 20, and presented a pleasant and interesting programme of Highland music, vocal and instrumental. Another praiseworthy annual concert was that of the St. Cecilia Orchestral Society on December 22. Mr. Crawford, the conductor, is very enthusiastic, and presents only good music to his patrons. The Edinburgh String Quartet showed a steady advance in their art at their second concert on January 15. Three quartets, by Mozart, Schubert and Brahms, were ably performed. Recitals have been given by two rising local violinists, Mr. Lisbourne Deas (December 19) and Mr. R. A. Buchan (January 17), who were largely supported by their friends. The subject of Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's second lecture-recital (January 12) was 'Parsifal.' Lecture and illustrations were alike admirable.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, under Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave a very successful concert on December 27 last. The programme comprised Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, Beethoven's Violin concerto (the solo part finely played by Miss Margaret Horne), the overtures to 'A midsummer night's dream' and 'Leonora' (No. 1), and Weingartner's arrangement of the overture from Bach's Suite (No. 1) for two oboes, bassoon, and string orchestra. Mr. William MacRobert made an excellent appearance as solo vocalist.

The ninth classical concert, on January 2, presented no outstanding features, but the tenth was notable by reason of Herr Peter Raabe's appearance as conductor. The programme, doubtless selected by the conductor, included the overture to 'Rienzi,' Smetana's symphonic poem 'Vltava,' and Berlioz's 'An episode in the life of an artist,' and under Herr Raabe's inspiring beat the playing of the Scottish Orchestra reached the highest level. Of novelties—of which there has been no lack this season—the eleventh concert, on January 15, provided three, viz., the overture to Mozart's 'Clemenza di Tito,' Sibelius's symphony in E minor and César Franck's symphonic variations for pianoforte and orchestra. The last-named was received with much enthusiasm, doubtless owing to M. Raoul Pugno's magnificent playing of the pianoforte part, but the symphony made only a moderate impression. In Saint-Saëns's fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra, 'Africa,' M. Pugno again achieved a triumph and had to concede two encore pieces. The remaining item on the programme was Strauss's tone-poem 'Don Juan.'

Performances of the 'Messiah' have been given by the Young Men's Christian Association Choir (conductor Mr. R. L. Reid) and The Choral Union, under Mr. Joseph Bradley's direction.

At the twelfth classical concert, on January 22, Herr Siegmund von Hausegger was the visiting conductor and, as usual under these conditions, the band rose to the occasion. The programme, cast on more or less familiar lines, included Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, the Entr'acte in B flat from Schubert's 'Rosamunde,' Liszt's symphonic poem 'Les préludes,' and Beethoven's C minor symphony. It is gratifying to record crowded attendances at the Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts during the present season. Almost invariably St. Andrew's Hall has been filled by a most attentive, appreciative and enthusiastic audience, and Dr. Cowen's programmes have been always interesting and attractive. Among the novelties performed have been Mozart's Symphony in G major (K. 318), Strauss's Horn concerto in E flat—the solo part capitally played by Mr. A. E. Brain—and the Andante and Variations from Schubert's second Symphony in B flat. Moreover, the organ has been utilised as a solo instrument—in Guilmant's first Organ concerto, Mr. Herbert Walton playing the solo part with distinction, also the pianoforte in Mozart's Concerto in E flat for two pianofortes and orchestra, with Mr. P. E. Halstead and Dr. Cowen as soloists.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most important musical event in Gloucester and district has been the ninth annual concert of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, held on January 1. The programme contained no less than five compositions written specially for and dedicated to the Society. They comprised a humorous treatment of Goldsmith's 'Elegy on the death of a mad dog,' by the president of the Society, Sir Hubert Parry; a harmonious setting of Burns's 'O my luve 's like a red, red rose,' and a humorous part-song, 'The marriage of the frog and the mouse,' by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, to whose direction the Society owes no small part of its success; a part-song, 'Let my voice ring out,' by Dr. C. Harford Lloyd; and a fine setting of Erskine's 'Ode to tobacco,' by Mr. C. Lee Williams. Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. Lee Williams and Dr. Brewer conducted their own works, which were well rendered and generally appreciated. To these novelties were added part-songs by Adams, Beale, Cooke, Goss, Horsley, Sullivan and Pinsuti, and, by way of variety, there were songs by Miss Esmé Atherden, and violin solos by Miss Kitty Woolley.

Newent Choral Society held its first concert of the season on January 17, when Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was performed under the conductorship of Mr. George Wargent. The second part of the programme consisted of part-songs and glees by the Society, solos by Miss Violet Perry and Mr. A. V. Cresser, and violin solos by Miss Mary Brandt.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A New Year's Day concert by the Symphony Orchestra was attended with complete success, the programme including Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 5, Rubinstein's 'Feramors' Suite, the march from Raff's 'Leonore' Symphony, and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture—an interesting and varied scheme. Mr. Webster Millar sang Lohengrin's 'Narration' excellently, and Mr. Charles Ross was an efficient accompanist.

Much interest was shown in Miss Gwendoline Trevitt's concert at the Balfour Institute on January 3. The concert-giver displayed a pleasing soprano voice, which in time to come should bring her genuine success in her career.

The second half of the Philharmonic Society's season commenced on January 8, at which were performed Sibelius's 'Pelleas and Melisande' Suite, Cowen's orchestral poem 'A phantasy of life and love,' and Saint-Saëns's ballet-music from 'Henry VIII.' Miss Evelyn Suart gave a brilliant rendering of the solo part in Rachmaninoff's Pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor.

The Schiever concerts are proving more successful than ever this year, and there was quite a large audience present at the Hardman Street Assembly Rooms on January 12, when Mozart's Quartet in C and Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in G were in the scheme. Here, again, Miss Suart, as the soloist, won particular favour.

Mr. Harry Evans, who so ably conducts the Welsh Choral Union, has expressed his astonishment at the fervour with which his chorus-singers are rehearsing Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. The brilliant choral-singing of this Society premises a very fine performance on March 16.

Miss Lucy Nuttall sang and Mr. York Bowen was the solo pianist at the Symphony Orchestra's concert on January 14—both artists winning much favour. Mr. Bowen's Pianoforte concerto was included in the programme, and Mr. Akeroyd conducted an admirable performance of Mozart's G minor symphony.

The Societa Armonica concert on January 16 was chiefly noteworthy for the first performance here of Mr. Granville Bantock's prelude to 'Sappho,' which was adequately given under the composer's direction. The work, though short, is extraordinarily kaleidoscopic, and reflects the composer's unconventional gifts in a marked degree. The able local artist, Mr. Stanley Prescott, was the solo pianist.

With a programme including Beethoven's C minor symphony, Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture and the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and Richard Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben,' the Orchestral Society concert on January 19 was not only one of the most largely attended, but one of the most successful in the Society's history. Mr. Granville Bantock, with a largely augmented orchestra, obtained markedly fine performances of all these works, and Mr. John Coates, the vocalist, has never been heard in Liverpool to so much advantage.

The Philharmonic programme of January 22 included Berlioz's overture 'Benvenuto Cellini,' and Brahms's C minor symphony, and Dr. Lierhammer sang the recitative and aria of the Prince from Tchaikovsky's opera 'Pique-Dame.'

The Folk-Song Quartet (Miss Beatrice Spencer, Miss Florence Christie, Mr. Louis Godfrey, and Mr. A. Foxton Ferguson) have gone on a short concert tour to Germany and Holland, including, among other places, Berlin.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hallé concerts were resumed on January 10. The programme commenced with a performance of Mozart's 'Maurerische Trauermusik,' in memory of the late Mr. James Forsyth, of the firm of the Messrs. Forsyth Brothers, who was one of the founders of these concerts, and a close friend of the late Sir Charles Hallé. Curiously enough, the firm and the concerts were established in the same year—1857. It was interesting, under the circumstances, that Lady Hallé should be present at the concert, making her customary annual visit to us. She played Mendelssohn's Concerto and Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso.' The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 4, while the other orchestral selections were the Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Cherubini's 'Les Abencerages' overture. At the concert on January 17, the Symphony was Mozart's 'Parisian,' in D. This, and the 'Manfred' and 'Coriolanus' overtures, Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings (Op. 48), and the 'Siegfried Idyll,' were marvellously well played. Mr. Charles W. Clark, the vocalist, sang with intelligent dramatic emphasis scenas from 'Euryanthe' and from Marschner's 'Hans Heiling.'

For the programme of the Gentlemen's concert of January 14, under Dr. Richter's direction, the directors had selected music of a light New Year's character. It contained the 'La Dame Blanche' overture, Bach's Suite for flute and strings, Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' suite, and a Mozart quartet for oboe (Mr. Reynolds), clarinet (Mr. Mills), horn (Mr. Paersch), and bassoon (Mr. Schieder). Heard here for the first time, it is simple in construction, and contains graceful work for the four wind instruments.

At the Brodsky Quartet concert of January 9, Mendelssohn's Octet was played by the Brodsky Quartet, reinforced by Miss Edith Robinson and Mr. Arthur Catterall (violins), Mrs. Rawdon Briggs (viola), and Miss Mary McCullagh (violoncello). The programme was completed with Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 76, No. 1) and Richard Strauss's Pianoforte quartet (Op. 13), with Mr. Edward Isaacs at the pianoforte in the last-named work. Mr. Isaacs appeared also at the Promenade concert of December 29, at which he played his own Pianoforte concerto in C minor, a work which constitutes our young pianist's most serious achievement in the realm of composition. In addition to brilliant work for the soloist, including a very original Cadenza, the three movements of the Concerto—Allegro deciso, Quasi Fantasia, and Allegro energico—are really well-knit pieces of workmanship, showing a considerable gift of instrumentation, and facility in treating thematic material. Sullivan's Overture 'Di Ballo,' selections from the 'Midsummer night's dream' music, the 'Sylvia' ballet suite, Robert Volkmann's Serenade No. 3, for solo violoncello and string accompaniment, and the 'William Tell' overture were also played. Mr. J. H. Foulds was the soloist in the performance of the Serenade, and Miss Grace Shorrocks, Miss Lucy Nuttall, and Mr. Albert Garcia were the vocalists. At the concert of January 12 Litolff's noisy 'Maximilien Robespierre' overture was resuscitated. Happily the audience preferred Dr. Cowen's 'Language of flowers' suite, and—extremely well played—Mozart's Symphony in E flat. Mr. Arthur Catterall, solo violinist, played the first movement of Joachim's 'Hungarian' concerto, Tchaikovsky's 'Sérénade Mélancolique,' and a 'Moto perpetuo' by Novacek. Miss Hilda Morris and Madame Marian McKenzie were the vocalists.

At Mr. Brand Lane's concert of January 19 his Philharmonic Choral Society gave an excellent account of itself in tone, attack and expression, in works so differing in style as Handel choruses, Bach's motet 'Be not afraid' (for double choir), Brahms's exquisite 'Dim-lit woods,' and the orchestrally-conceived and more than crucial 'O Death! thou art the tranquil night,' by Peter Cornelius, in addition to a large number of modern part-songs and choruses. Miss Evelyn Suart was the solo pianist, Miss Warwara Irmanoff the solo violoncellist, and Mr. Charles Tree the vocalist.

Mr. Pablo Casals once again, on January 19, at the Schiller-Anstalt, delighted a crowded audience with his magnificent violoncello playing. Mr. Isidor Cohn, at the pianoforte, joined him in the performance of the Brahms Sonata in F (Op. 99). Mr. Casals' best efforts were in the wonderful No. 5 Suite (unaccompanied) of Bach's, and in a sonata by Locatelli. Mr. Cohn played three Chopin solos, and Miss Bertha Guthrie was the vocalist.

The students of our Royal Manchester College of Music have in rehearsal 'Il Ballo in Maschera' for this year's public performance.——Mr. Yorke Sheffield, conductor at the Queen's Theatre, has again written incidental music for the annual Shakesperean revival—'Othello.' The orchestral music has representative themes of Othello and of Desdemona, and there is a graceful Saraband danced at the opening of the third Act, with a chorus sung off the stage.

Dr. Pyne's Saturday evening recitals on the fine Cavaillé-Col organ in the Town Hall continue their successful course, while Mr. Cross's popular concerts fully justify their title.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

This has been the season when pantomime has absorbed the attention of the public, though not so exclusively as usual—at least so far as concerns Leeds, where Mr. Benson has been pluckily running 'A Midsummer night's dream' by way of a counter-attraction. The accompaniment of Mendelssohn's music must be my excuse for mentioning the production here, but I am ashamed to say that, so far as my personal observation goes, only a minimum of attention was paid to it, or to Weber's 'Oberon' overture, which was also chosen as a not inappropriate interlude. Of a more strictly musical character are the numerous 'Messiah' performances, which, however, do not demand notice, though I may call attention to the concert of the Rotherham Society on Boxing Day, when an ample selection from the 'Messiah' was preceded by the first and second parts of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. Mr. Thomas Brameld, the conductor, is an amateur who overflows with enthusiasm, which finds vent in little commendatory speeches which he makes to the audience, whose co-operation, as well as sympathy, he invoked on this occasion, inviting them to join in the chorales, which were 'played over' for their benefit. It can hardly be said that the result was encouraging, or that a method appropriate to a religious service is necessarily fitted for the concert-room, but at any rate the intention of securing the interest of the hearers is commendable.

Two of the Leeds municipal concerts have been of considerable interest. That on December 22 presented an attractive novelty in Bach's 'Peasant' cantata, which proved quite as naïve and charming as its name would seem to suggest. The two soloists, Miss Mary Swailes and Mr. Harry Blackie, sang with capital spirit, but by a most unlucky blunder the orchestral parts did not arrive in time, and the Municipal Orchestra had to be supplanted by that invaluable maid-of-all-work, the pianoforte. At the Municipal concert on January 12 Mr. Fricker introduced two works by young native composers. One was an overture, 'Daphne and Peneus,' by Mr. T. Haigh, a young Wakefield musician who, after studying at the Royal College, has become organist of Ramsgate parish church. It is a well-written, effective piece, not displaying any very marked individuality, but showing good musicianship and based on attractive themes. The other novelty was a suite, entitled 'English,' by a young composer from the Midlands, Mr. Havergal Brian. The six brief movements are suggested by the different aspects of a country fair, and leave behind them this dominant impression, that the composer has ideas. Colour and atmosphere he can express, but in form he has hardly found his feet, and there is a certain patchiness of effect which, on a first hearing, seems to be the chief drawback to a composition which is highly interesting and full of promise. It should, in fairness, be added that the opportunity for rehearsal had been much too limited to secure such a degree of finish as would enable complete justice to be done in the performance, which occasionally lacked finish. The second part of this concert was given up to a concert performance of Mr. Edward German's bright and attractive 'Merrie England,' by the Leeds Amateur Operatic Company, which had already produced the work on the stage under their conductor, Mr. E. P. Stead. Mrs. H. P. Atkinson's singing of Queen Elizabeth's songs deserves a special note of praise, as does the playing of the Municipal Orchestra, which did justice to the beautifully finished score.

On January 16 the Leeds Bohemian Quartet gave one of its concerts, which are enjoyable not only because of the interest of the programmes, but by reason of the sympathetic attention of the most musical audience in Yorkshire. On this occasion Brahms's Quintet in F, Beethoven's Quintet in C and Hugo Wolf's 'Italian Serenade' for string quartet formed the programme, and were very artistically played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton, with Mr. Mathers as second viola. On January 10 yet another child violinist, Miss Haidée Voorzanger, gave a concert at Leeds, and played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto with a dexterity which, precocious as it was, only emphasized one's regret that a girl of such tender years should embark upon a public career. Dr. Bairstow, the Leeds Parish Church organist, assumed for once the conductorship of the Leeds Musical Union concert on January 21, Mr. Bell, the Society's conductor, being absent. Difficult and interesting part-songs for male voices by Hegar ('The phantom host') and P. Scharwenka (a setting of Hölderlin's 'Song of destiny') were introduced, as well as others not new to the Society, and were very ably sung. Miss Janey Fyans proved a vocalist of exceptional gifts of voice and brain, and Mr. Rasch contributed some admirable violin solos.

The Bradford subscription concert on January 18 was of orchestral music. Under Dr. Richter's direction a most interesting programme was given, including the 'Moorish Rhapsody,' two movements of which were written for a Leeds Festival of 1898 by Humperdinck, who has since completed it by adding a third, entitled 'Tetuan, a ride in the desert.' It is beautiful, well-wrought music, picturesque and suggestive, and was very finely played. Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and Bach's Suite in B minor, for strings and flute, were also heard, and Madame Ella Russell introduced a well-written scena, 'Adonaïs,' by Landon Ronald.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

During the past few weeks a number of English artists have appeared in Berlin with much success, viz., the pianists Mr. Herbert Fryer, Madame Gwendolyn Toms (Mrs. Arthur Williams), Mr. Donald Francis Tovey, and Miss Fanny Davies, and the tenor vocalist Mr. Gervase Elwes. Mr. Tovey appeared also as composer, his Trio in D minor (Op. 14) for pianoforte, violin and English horn, and the Trio in B minor for pianoforte, violin and violoncello (Op. 1) having been favourably received by the public and press alike.——The Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatoire celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation by giving two festival concerts.——A gigantic new concert hall was opened, on December 13, with a concert under the direction of Fritz Steinbach. It is situated in the Exhibition Palace of the Zoological Gardens, but unfortunately proved totally unfit for a concert-room, in consequence of its exceptionally bad acoustic properties. It is hoped that means will be found to improve this state of affairs when the hall is properly and finally furnished. At present it lacks almost everything in the way of carpets, draperies and other means of killing a most persistent and irritating echo, which reduces any quick movement to the merest chaos.

BRUSSELS.

Hector Berlioz's 'Les Troyens'—consisting of the two parts, 'La prise de Troie' and 'Les Troyens à Carthage'—was performed in its entirety for the first time in the French language at La Monnaie Theatre on December 26 and 27, and produced a powerful impression. The performances were excellent and the mounting superb. 'Les Troyens' was produced in German some years ago at Carlsruhe, under Felix Mottl.

BUCHAREST.

M. Alexis Catargi, who is said to be Secretary of the Roumanian Legation in London, has written an opera on the subject of Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden,' which was recently produced here with much success at the National Theatre.

BUDAPEST.

A new three-act symphonie dance-poem, entitled 'Psyche,' by the Russian composer Paul Juon, was produced at the Royal Opera with great success. The 'book,' or scenario, is by Hermann Regel, and deals, of course, with the mythological tale of Eros and Psyche.

COBLENZ.

A new Violin concerto, by Herr Willem Kes (formerly conductor at Amsterdam, Glasgow, &c.), was produced here at one of his Musikinstitut concerts. Prof. Michael Press played the solo part, and helped the work to an undisputed success.

COLOGNE.

'Gunlöd,' the opera which Peter Cornelius left unfinished, has been completed from the existing sketches and orchestrated by Herr Waldemar von Baussern. The work, in this form, was produced at the new Municipal theatre on December 15 with great artistic success. It will be remembered that another version, by E. Lassen, was produced some years ago and caused a great deal of angry discussion in the German press, because it was said to have done violence to the deceased composer's intentions.

DRESDEN.

At one of the concerts of the Royal orchestra, Prof. Schuch produced a novelty composed by Richard Strauss, a concert overture, a juvenile creation, which, unless we are much mistaken, is not mentioned in any of the master's biographies, nor in the published lists of his works.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

At one of the Museum Concerts, Prof. Philip Wolfrum, of Heidelberg, conducted an interesting revival, viz., an 'Orchestral trio' in B flat, by J. Stamitz, the chief of the Mannheim School which flourished before the days of Haydn and Mozart.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-ODER.

A new choral work, 'The wild huntsman,' based on Julius Wolf's poem 'Der wilde Jäger,' and composed by Herr B. E. Zingel, was successfully produced here under the direction of the composer.

GRATZ.

'Helmbrecht' is the title of a new opera in three acts, by a Viennese composer, Herr Josef Zayzek, which was recently produced at the local Stadttheater. The libretto is said to be founded by Gustav Reinhardt on the old village-story, Wernher the gardener, who lived in the 13th century in a Bavarian cloister.

HELSINGFORS.

A new work by Jean Sibelius was recently produced at the Swedish theatre here, viz., the music to a drama 'Belshazzar's feast' by Georg Procopé. The Finnish master's latest contribution to his country's art consists of a number of small movements, scored for small orchestra and full of exotic and fantastic charm.——Another Finnish composer, Erkki Melartin, achieved much success with the music to a fairy-drama 'Hiiden Miekka' (the Devil's sword), by the young Finnish poet Eino Leino. The music includes orchestral pieces, choruses and soli, and was produced at the local Finnish theatre.——At one of the Symphony Concerts conducted by Robert Kajanus, Elgar's fine overture 'In the South' was performed.

MILAN.

'The Poet,' a new lyric opera in one act by Signor Agostino Cantù, has been successfully produced at the local Teatro dal Verme. The whole love duet had to be repeated, an un-'dramatic' proceeding which in these days is perhaps only possible in Italy.

PALERMO.

A new opera 'Jery and Bätely,' founded on Goethe's play, was recently produced here with some success. The composer is Signor Enrico Romano.

PARIS.

Signor Puccini's beautiful lyric drama 'Madama Butterfly' was performed for the first time at the Opéra Comique on December 28. Madame Marguerite Carré, as the hapless heroine, was perfect, and the whole performance, conducted by M. Rühlmann, worthy of the great traditions of the famous theatre.——An exceptionally large and enthusiastic audience filled the Châtelet Theatre on December 30, when M. Colonne conducted the 150th performance of Berlioz's 'Faust.'——At the Conservatoire, on December 27, M. Florent Schmidt, the holder of the Prix de Rome, produced a number of compositions from his pen, which included a symphonic poem after Poe's 'The haunted palace,' four pieces for orchestra, 'Musique de plein air,' and a setting of Psalm xlvi. for solo, chorus and orchestra.

SONDERSHAUSEN.

The local Cæcilien-Verein celebrated the 50th anniversary of its foundation by the production of a new choral work, 'Benina,' by Heinrich Schöne. The composer was formerly a music critic at Leipzig, and died lately at Eisleben, where he had for some time been Director of Church music.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The Glinka Prize founded by the millionaire publisher, M. P. Belaïeff, with a view to encouraging Russian composers, has been awarded as follows: to Z. A. Cui, 500 roubles for his second orchestral suite; to S. W. Rachmaninoff, 500 roubles for his 'Spring Cantata'; to A. N. Scriabine, 1,000 roubles for his third symphony; to N. N. Sokoloff, 500 roubles for his third quartet, and to N. N. Tcherepnin, 500 roubles for his ballet suite 'The pavilion of Armida.'

TURIN.

Dr. Richard Strauss conducted the first performance in Italy of his opera 'Salome,' on December 22, and was greeted with great enthusiasm. Signora Gemma Bellincioni was the heroine, a part which suited her particular genius to perfection.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

Albury.—The Musical Society gave a successful concert in the Albury Parish Hall on January 16, when the principal feature was Cowen's choral ballad 'John Gilpin.' The programme included the solo and chorus 'The night is calm and cloudless,' 'O gladsome light' and the choral epilogue from the 'Golden Legend,' overture to 'Rosamunde' (Schubert), 'Salut d'Amour' (Elgar), and other pieces. Madame Lucy France and Mr. John Bardsley were the solo vocalists, and violoncello solos were contributed by Mr. F. Landsman. Mr. G. H. Coe conducted.

Barking.—The new Choral Society made its first appearance on January 17 at the Public Baths, when 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampherdown' constituted the principal features of the programme. The choir and orchestra consisted of 150 performers and acquitted themselves admirably, displaying the results of careful training by the conductor, Mr. Stanley C. Attwood. The solo vocalists were Madame Alice Motterway and Mr. John Harding.

Cardiff.—The Cardiff Blue-ribbon Choir gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' in Wood Street Chapel on December 26, under the direction of Mr. Jenkyn Morris. There was an efficient orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Madame Lewis, Miss Pyle and Mr. Carston.

Carlisle.—Mr. Bertram Lewis (a pupil of Dr. Brodsky at the Royal Manchester College of Music) has for the past two seasons given three chamber concerts, which the people of this city are beginning to appreciate. Quartets and quintets by Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and Dvorák have been included in these programmes, and the interpretation of their works has always been careful and artistic. Mr. Lewis has associated with him young musicians from Manchester, Messrs. Harold Jones, Holme and Warburton, and these promise to turn out a combination of real worth, if we may judge by the increasing excellence of their performances. Mr. Lewis at the last concert, on January 19, gave Ernst's Violin concerto in C sharp minor.

Chorley.—Mr. F. James's cantata 'The Saviour' was sung at the evening service on December 23 at Hollinshead Street Congregational Church. The soloists were Miss Lilian Cook and Miss Ethel Holland, Mr. Knowling and Mr. W. A. Margerison, and the choir gave an excellent rendering of the choral numbers under the direction of Mr. J. L. Milnes, who accompanied on the organ.

Crewe.—Mr. A. Hough, organist and choirmaster of Trinity Wesleyan Church, was presented on January 15 with a solid oak roll-top desk, subscribed for by the members of the choir, as a token of their esteem and in recognition of his attaining the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists.

Gosforth.—A violin recital was given in the Presbyterian Hall, Gosforth, on January 8, by Miss Maude Jacques, assisted by Miss Ella Jacques as pianist. The executive work of both ladies was admirable. The vocal part of the programme was entrusted to Miss Errington Mein and Mr. J. Rutherford.

Grahamstown.—A recital of vocal and pianoforte music was given by Mrs. W. Deane in the Town Hall on December 5, assisted by Mr. Albert Archdeacon. Mrs. Deane displayed her customary skill in Beethoven's 'Waldstein' sonata, Chopin's Ballade in A flat and three of Brahms's 'Hungarian Dances,' and Mr. Archdeacon gave excellent renderings of songs by Korbay, Battison Haynes, Edward German and others.

Invercargill (N.Z.)—The official opening of the New Town Hall (including municipal buildings, concert hall and theatre) by his Excellency the Governor of New Zealand, Lord Plunket, took place on November 14. The concert hall on the upper floor seats 400 persons; the inauguration ceremony was however held in the more spacious theatre, and the programme, provided by a choir of 150 voices and full orchestra, included the National Anthem, 'Hallelujah' Chorus ('Messiah'), March and Chorus ('Tannhäuser'), Mackenzie's 'The Empire Flag,' Eaton Faning's 'The Vagabonds,' and Elgar's 'Imperial' and 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches. Mr. Charles Gray conducted. The Premier, Sir G. J. Ward, in his address expressed the hope that an organ would soon be provided for the concert hall, and that the people would have frequent opportunities of hearing good music in the form of organ recitals.

Malta.—The Malta Musical Union gave a performance of the 'Messiah' (omitting the Passion music) in Lamplough Hall, Floriana, on January 3, under the direction of Mr. W. S. Robinson. At the final rehearsal on the previous evening the members of the Union presented their conductor with a handsome carved brass music stand.

Preston.—The Orchestral Society gave its annual concert in the Public Hall on January 1, under the direction of Mr. Peretz. The programme included Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, the overtures 'Oberon' and 'Ruy Blas,' Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor (solo, Mr. Arthur Catterall), and Elgar's 'Chanson de Matin' and 'Chanson de Nuit.' Miss Florence Berry was the vocalist.

Rhosllanerchrugog.—On the occasion of his taking the degree of Bachelor of Music (Oxon.), Mr. Caradog Roberts, organist of Bethlehem Congregational Church, was on January 9 presented by the members of the church with the robes of a Bachelor of Music, in addition to a beautiful illuminated address, a full-score of the 'Creation,' and a silver-mounted ebony baton, as a mark of their esteem and gratification of the honour obtained by their organist. In the course of the evening a selection of music was performed by the Bethlehem United Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Dan Roberts.

Sandbach.—The Philharmonic Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall on January 15, when the 'May Queen' was the principal work in the programme. The miscellaneous second part included the 'William Tell' overture and Edward German's 'Henry VIII.' dances. The work of the choir and orchestra was thoroughly satisfactory, and the solo vocalists were Madame Annie Walker, Miss Mary Newton, Mr. Cuthbert Allan and Mr. Webster Millar. Mr. Herbert J. Lea conducted.

Stirling.—The annual concert of the Choral Society took place in the Albert Hall on January 17, when a large selection from Gounod's 'Faust' and Parry's 'Pied piper of Hamelin' were performed. The choir sang with much spirit and received able support from the orchestra. The solo vocalists were Madame Clementine de Vere, Miss Nora Morton, Mr. Albert Garcia, Mr. Robert Burnett and Mr. Ben Davies. Dr. A. W. Marchant was as usual an excellent conductor.

Stourbridge.—The usual Christmas performance of the Concert Society took place on December 31, when the programme consisted of the 'Meistersinger' overture, Bach's cantata for contralto, 'Schlage doch,' Mr. George Halford's 'Symphonic Allegro' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' Notable features were the singing of the choir in 'O gladsome light,' 'O pure in heart,' and the choral epilogue. The solo vocalists were Madame Minadieu, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. George Halford conducted.

Sunderland.—The first concert of the newly-formed Orchestral Society was held in the Victoria Hall on January 16. Mr. W. Jackson made an excellent conductor, the light and shade displayed in some of the pieces being highly creditable. An overture, 'The destruction of Pompeii,' also exhibited Mr. Jackson's skill as a composer. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas,' the '1812' overture (Tchaikovsky), and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in D minor, the solo part excellently interpreted by Madame Lily Henkel. Mr. W. Hayle was the vocalist.

Treorchy.—The Noddfa Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'Light of Life' on the afternoon of December 26 last. The singing of the choir of 250 was admirable, the voices being fresh and well balanced, and their expression excellent. The orchestra was also fully efficient, and Mr. J. T. Jones conducted with care and discretion. A miscellaneous selection preceded the oratorio, another selection being given in the evening programme, the chief feature of which was Spohr's 'Last Judgment.' The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Miss May Peters, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Charles Knowles.

Uxbridge.—The Uxbridge and Hillingdon Choral and Orchestral Society gave its fourth concert on January 9 in the Town Hall, under the able direction of Dr. Louis A. Hamand, when Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' was the main feature of attraction. The choir, excellently balanced, sang with much spirit. The orchestra played the accompaniments to the cantata efficiently, and were no less successful in the 'Hebrides' overture, 'Peer Gynt' suite and Max Bruch's 'Canzona' for violoncello and orchestra (solo Mr. Herbert Kinze). At the final rehearsal on the previous Monday a presentation was made to Dr. Hamand by the members of the Society in token of their appreciation of his efforts in the cause of good music in the locality.

Ventnor.—The Musical Society gave its usual winter concert in the Town Hall on January 16, the programme consisting of Bennett's 'May Queen,' Handel's 'St. Cecilia's Day' and Mendelssohn's 'Loreley.' The choir deserved much credit for its spirited singing, and the small orchestra was satisfactory. The vocal solos were interpreted by Miss Patricia Plowman, Miss Maud Hess, Mr. Hubert Baker and Mr. Wallace Wheeler. Mr. Evan Jones conducted.

Wellington (N.Z.).—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was performed by the Musical Union on November 6. The band and choir numbered about 250, and the soloists were Mrs. Gower-Burns (of Christchurch), the Rev. S. J. Handover, and Mr. C. Clarkson, the whole being under the direction of Mr. Robert Parker. The performance of 'King Olaf'—the first in this city of any of the composer's larger works—may certainly be described as highly successful. The choir especially distinguished themselves, singing with intelligence and enthusiasm. The local orchestra—largely amateur—also did some admirable work. In the following week, on November 14, a varied and interesting programme was given, which included Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, Félicien David's 'The Desert,' Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor for pianoforte and orchestra, and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The pianoforte part in the concerto was finely played by Miss Janet Ross.

Mr. Walter Fitton and Mr. John E. West have been elected Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music:—The Potter Exhibition (pianoforte playing) to Christian Carpenter (London); The Hine Prize (composition) to Olive M. Turner (New Barnet); The Broughton Packer Scholarships (violin) to Evan Williams (Llanelly) and (violoncello) to Harry W. Lodge (Clapham); The George Mence Smith Scholarship (female vocalists) to Frances E. Yeardley (Leeds).——The Goring Thomas Scholarship, shortly to be competed for, will be awarded to that candidate who may be adjudged to show the greatest promise of ability as Composer of Operatic or Dramatic Works for the Stage. The competition is open to British-born subjects of either sex who shall be not less than eighteen years of age on the date of competition. Full particulars of the competition can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

The London Sunday School Choir's annual spring choral festival will take place at the Royal Albert Hall on February 16. There will be a band and chorus of 1,200, and the programme will include anthems, part-songs and choruses conducted by Mr. William Whiteman, and accompanied by the London Sunday School Orchestra, which will also play various pieces under the direction of Mr. Wesley Hammet. Further particulars regarding the festival may be obtained on application to Mr. J. Barnard, 340, Green Lanes, Finsbury Park, N.

The Metropolitan Academy of Music is the new title of the music schools founded by Mr. W. Harding Bonner at Forest Gate in 1885, with branches at Ilford, Leytonstone and Southend. In 1904 these schools were amalgamated with the London Academy of Music, but by mutual arrangement this connection has been terminated, and Mr. Bonner and his son, Mr. Frank Bonner, will confine their energies to The Metropolitan Academy of Music, which, under its old name of the Forest Gate School of Music, has been attended with so much success.

The Bach Choir (conductor Dr. Walford Davies) announces two concerts to be given at Queen's Hall. On February 8 the programme will include Sir Hubert Parry's Sinfonia Sacra 'The love that casteth out fear,' Bach's Sanctus in D, and the choral fantasia of Beethoven, in which the pianoforte part will be taken by Mr. Richard Buhlig; and at the second concert, on March 19, Bach's Mass in B minor will be sung, with Madame Albani, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Frederic Austin as soloists.

A musical competition was held at Warrington on New Year's Day. It was very successful in some respects, but bad weather affected the attendance. Stockton Heath Wesleyan Choir (Mr. F. E. Penketh, Co-operative Male-voice Choir (Mr. A. E. Trow), and the Warrington Male-Voice Choir (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) were first-prize winners. Dr. McNaught, Mr. Wilfrid Jones, and Mr. J. Partington were the adjudicators.

The syllabus of the South London Musical Festival (President, Sir Frederick Bridge) announces contests and examinations in every branch of music, to be held at Battersea Town Hall in March. A copy of this pamphlet can be had upon application to the Secretary, Mr. T. Lester Jones, Hampton House, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, E.

Answers to Correspondents.

L. M. D.—(1) Dr. E. J. Hopkins's 'Ellers' tune was originally written for unison singing, with a varied organ accompaniment to each verse, and it first appeared in 'The supplemental Hymn and Tune Book,' compiled by the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick, third edition, with new Appendix (1869). The composer harmonized the tune for four voices at the request of the editor, Mr. Samuel Smith, for the Appendix to the 'Bradford Tune-book' (1872). This, in the author's harmonized version, is in the 'English Hymnal' (No. 273), and in 'The Church Hymnary' (No. 617). A differently harmonized version, by Sir Arthur Sullivan, appeared in the first edition of 'Church Hymns' (1874), and this has been followed in 'The Westminster Abbey Hymn Book.' The tune is named 'Benediction' in some books and 'Ellers' in others; but as 'Benediction' is given in 'The Temple Choral Service Book,' that designation would seem to have the authority of the composer. (2) We are sorry you are puzzled about the notices of organ recitals which are given in this journal month by month. You ask (a) 'Are they past, present or future?' and (b) 'Why is the programme limited to one piece?' To these interrogations we reply (a) Past; and (b) that owing to the exigencies of space it is only possible to select one piece (sometimes two) from each programme, the selection being carefully made, and excluding solos by Bach and Mendelssohn (except rarely), as every recitalist includes these composers' works in his programmes.

J. J.—The piccolo has the double advantage of being small in size and piercing in tone. It is not exactly the kind of instrument for the parlour, but rather for the attic, as its notes are so high. A piccolo can be purchased from 30*s*. upwards, a good instrument costing 50*s*. Richard Carte's Tutor for the piccolo can be recommended; it is published at 2*s*. by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

W. J. B.—'Practical Organ-building,' by W. E. Dickson (Crosby Lockwood & Co.), and 'Organs and Tuning,' by Thomas Elliston (Weekes & Co.) may help you in the matter of amateur organ-building. You would probably find some difficulty in utilizing the keyboard and bellows of a harmonium in making a pipe-organ.

F. H. S.—We regret we cannot throw any light upon the strain of music on the old tombstone of 1802. The fact that 'the first four bars of the composition are covered up,' (doubtless like the composer), makes it rather difficult to trace the source of the music. It may have been composed by the John Pearse upon whose tombstone the notes are inscribed.

DIE GLOCKE.—A teacher who holds the foreign certificates you name should not have much difficulty in obtaining 'a violin mistress-ship' in a school, though an English diploma of repute would be an additional advantage. The salaries of such appointments naturally vary.

E. J. L.—In the Arietta movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in C minor (Op. 111), the time-signatures $\frac{6}{16}$ and $\frac{12}{32}$ are merely counting conveniences and do not affect the triple rhythm of the whole movement, which is shown throughout in the grouping of the notes.

DER FREISCHÜTZ.—Complete editions of Weber's pianoforte works, solo and duet, are published in the Peters edition. A pianoforte arrangement of the opera 'Sylvana' has been issued, but not of 'Peter Schmoll,' 'Turandot,' 'Ruler of the Spirits,' and 'Abu Hassan.'

STUDENT.—(1) Schubert composed about 630 songs, of which 610 have been published in ten volumes, price 7*s*. 6*d*. net each. (2) Two volumes of songs by Peter Cornelius, for a low voice, are obtainable at 3*s*. each volume.

GAMBA.—A short illustrated article on Winchester Cathedral appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November, 1901, but the subject-matter was not so developed as that of subsequent articles on cathedrals.

J. E. W.—Try 'Nursery Rhymes,' Sets 1, 2, and 3, by Collingwood Banks, 'A Musical Joke,' by C. E. Horsley (Novello); and 'Nursery Rhymes,' by John Farmer (J. Williams).

L. R. B.—Dr. E. J. Hopkins's hymn-tune 'Ellers' is published separately by Messrs. Novello; and Dr. Peace's 'Lux Beata' is No. 246 in 'The Scottish Hymnal' (T. Nelson & Sons).

W. P.—You might look at Somervell's ''Prentice Pillar' and Mendelssohn's 'Son and Stranger' as being suitable for performance by your little amateur operatic company.

ALPHA.—There is a choral celebration of the Holy Communion every Sunday at St. Paul's Cathedral. We will make inquiries as to other cathedrals.

G. J. G.—It is slovenly to pronounce the word 'evil' as 'e-vle,' even in the Lord's Prayer, that being specially instanced in your question.

BATON.—Messrs. Novello will send you, upon application, a list of baritone songs with accompaniment for pianoforte, harmonium and quartet of strings.

A CONSTANT READER.—You will solve the mysteries of the notations of transposing instruments if you consult Prof. Prout's Primer on instrumentation.

T. L. V.—We should advise you to get into communication with an English pupil of Prof. Leschetizky.

ZEPHYR.—Why not study the organ? By all means cultivate your voice, but beware of the blandishments of the voice strainer.

H. C. W.—Why not write to Dr. Torrington direct, and ask him for the information?

THREE ELIZABETHAN PASTORALS

1. AN IDYLL.
2. AMONGST THE WILLOWS.
3. THE MORRIS DANCE.

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, each, Two Shillings.
Full Score and Orchestral parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

Dr. Brewer was represented by "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," sung by Mr. John Coates with such admirable effect that the last had to be repeated. This, a description of a Morris dance, is an enchanting picture of a country merry-making, set to some excellent anonymous words, which are probably old. "An Idyll" and "Amongst the Willows" are also beautiful in a more romantic vein, and the three songs are as good in their way as anything the composer has done They are sure to become widely popular wherever bright songs with orchestral accompaniment are required.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In these little pieces, composed for tenor voice and orchestra, Dr. Brewer has opened up fresh ground, and shown a pretty talent for imitating the antique. The lyrics, by an old and anonymous author, are quaint and characteristic, while the music happily reflects their spirit and adapts itself to their form. All are charming, but the one most in favour this evening was "The Morris Dance," a very sprightly effusion which, encored at rehearsal, had to be repeated this evening.

MORNING POST.

Delicate and pleasing vocal pieces, which imparted a welcome lightness to the programme. They were sung by Mr. John Coates. The first, "An Idyll," proved the best in design, though the last won so much approval as to necessitate its repetition.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. John Coates sang three Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, composed for this Festival and conducted by the composer. Dr. Brewer has exactly hit off the sense of sixteenth-century music, and the Idyll which begins the series is exceedingly pretty, and was sung beautifully. Perhaps the best of the three was the "Morris Dance."

THE ATHENÆUM.

The first two of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," composed by Dr. Herbert Brewer, are dainty, but the third, "The Morris Dance, is specially characteristic, and the accompaniment has been cleverly scored.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Brewer contributed a set of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," entitled respectively "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance." The quaint words, culled from a collection of Elizabethan lyrics, have suggested music whose lightness and fancy happily reflect their character. All three have genuine charm, but the daintiness of the quaint "Morris Dance," if not matchless, could not easily be matched for its daintiness and quaint humour, which, admirably interpreted by Mr. John Coates, so exhilarated the audience that a repetition was inevitable.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, were sung by Mr. John Coates. They are also well-written pieces. The last of the three, a Morris Dance, is very effective. Mr. Brewer evidently knows how to write for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A trio of dainty Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Herbert Brewer is clever and charming. The first, entitled "An Idyll," has a quiet lyrical grace. The last, "The Morris Dance," is riotously spirited, and was encored.

HEREFORD TIMES.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," written for the Festival by Dr. Herbert Brewer, proved very attractive, and were much appreciated. They are light in character, but quite charming in their picturesque and dainty treatment. "The Morris Dance" is the most striking of the three, as there is real fibre and character in it, the quaint dance being charmingly treated both vocally and instrumentally.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

Mr. Brewer made a distinct hit with his three songs. They are bright, tuneful, and at the same time scholarly. . . . Of the three songs "The Morris Dance" aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience, though that might well have been because admiration had been pent up till the trio was completed.

THE TRIBUNE.

London Symphony Concert, Queen's Hall.—Mr. Coates, besides singing "From boyhood trained," from "Oberon," with fine vigour and much vocal skill, was wisely inspired to bring forward the "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," by Dr. A. H. Brewer, which were produced at the Hereford Festival last year. They are, indeed, little masterpieces of fresh melody.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE*

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

In this product Mr. Gaul has the advantage of an open field, till very recently closed almost entirely to the Anglican Church composer; so that at the outset his work claims the merit of distinctiveness. The text of Mr. Gaul's work, varied and elaborate in structure, is the compilation of the Rev. J. C. Blissard, author at the same time of the original lyrical portions of the work. The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes,' the literary construction of these being similar in plan throughout, but each preserving its own separate unity and point of narrative or dramatic interest. The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: "The Traitor at the Table," "The Denial," "The Condemnation before Pilate," "The Mockery on Calvary," "The Shadow of Death," and "The Holy Sepulchre." Each comprises a prophetic portion (the words selected from those passages of Holy Writ "foreshadowing" the event), and preceded by a short choral, which is retained unaltered throughout the work; a narrative portion dealing with the especial event, and what may be termed the lyrical epode, a hymn embodying the subjective reflection on the preceding passages, and in which the whole congregation is supposed to take part. The author has executed the compilation and versification with commendable judgment and skill. As regards the composer's share in the work, it must be noted, in the first place, that whilst endeavouring to illustrate in the best manner possible the outward course of the events, the dramatic element, properly so-called, has been carefully kept out of the work. Individual characterization has been avoided by allotting the different solo musical passages without regard to any representative character. This arrangement has no doubt been prompted by judicious reasons, and there is much to be urged in its favour. Mr. Gaul has adopted the arioso style of musical setting for the solo portions of his work. In certain parts, as in the melodious solo, "Blessed are the departed," the writing approaches the ordinary aria form, but in general the more declamatory style is preserved. There is no imitation of archaic forms in either melodies or harmony, and in the descriptive episodes the composer has not been tempted into theatrical exaggeration in order to secure dramatic effect. The style of the composition, in short, resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the "Holy City" and other of the composer's works. Among the items which impressed us most favourably was the chorus, "The fining-pot is for silver," the beautiful choral passage "Watch and pray," the whole of the choral passages of the Condemnation scene (the original treatment of this scene evades any comparison with the part of the Passion music of other writers); the contralto air. "Oh, hear ye this, all ye people"; the fine chorus, "Consider this," the culminating point of the scene on Calvary; the trio for soprano, tenor, and bass, "Thou hidest Thy face, O Lord"; the quartet, "Hath God forgotten to be gracious"; the strikingly effective chorus, "God is not a man that He should lie"; the solo before mentioned, "Blessed are the departed," with its choral appendage (soli quartet); and last, but not least in merit, the fine setting of Adelaide Procter's lines, "Why should'st thou fear the beautiful angel Death," full like the poem of a sweet, subdued, delicious calm. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for Mr. Blissard's lyrics: the tunes selected for this occasion were from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's work will undoubtedly greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition.

The very successful Lent Cantata

PENITENCE PARDON and PEACE

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1/1/99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1/2/98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15/1/98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5/3/98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15/2/98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5/3/98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2/8/98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9/3/98: "It will doubtless be used in many 'quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23/2/98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25/3/98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16/4/98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4/2/98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1/2/98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

FOR LENT. THE NEW EDITION OF MERBECKE'S MUSIC

FOR THE

OFFICE OF THE HOLY COMMUNION

EDITED (WITH AN ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENT) BY CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

Price Sixpence.

"The Plainsong has been carefully compared with the original, and, in translating it into modern notation, the note values (which are so vital to the due declamation of the words) have been scrupulously preserved. . . . The melody should be sung in unison and in free time. Accents have been placed over the important notes, which require a stress in order to make the meaning of the phrase clear. Marks of expression are added in the organ part only, and occasional alternations of men's and boys' voices are suggested for the sake of contrast and variety."—C. V. S.

The above are all very simply arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemplative than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—compiled with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautiful and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE	(1st Position)	2s. 0d.	1B.	STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. 0d.
2A.	Ditto	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 0d.	2B.	Ditto (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ...	2s. 6d.

	Books 1A, 2A, 3A, and 4A now ready.				Books 1B, 2B, 3B, and 4B now ready.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

A SUITE
OLD ENGLISH DANCES
COMPOSED BY FREDERIC H. COWEN.

1. MAYPOLE DANCE.
2. PEASANTS' DANCE.
3. MINUET D'AMOUR.
4. OLD DANCE, with Variations.

MINUET D'AMOUR (from the above):—

Pianoforte Solo	1s. 6d.
Violin and Pianoforte	2s. 0d.
Quintet (Pianoforte and Stringed Instruments) (in the Press)	2s. 6d.

Separate String Parts, 6d. each.

Small Orchestra Arrangement (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

TO MUSIC MASTERS AND TEACHERS OF THE VIOLIN.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

Prices from £1 1s. to £5.

MISS ESTELLA LINDEN
Returning from Concerts in the North, March 11.

PRINCIPAL SOPRANO SOLOIST, Southwark Cathedral, seven years. Recommended by Dr. Madeley Richardson. Principal of Tonic Sol-fa Festival, Crystal Palace, May, 1906. Has sung 60 Oratorios—at Sheffield (Dr. Coward's), Bristol (Mr. Riseley's), Hanley (Mr. Whewall's). Address, 18, Stanley Gdns., Hampstead, N.W.

MADAME NORLEDGE
(SOPRANO).

"Perhaps the most completely artistic thing was the singing of 'Annie Laurie' by Madame Norledge, who invested the old song with new charms. It was given in response to a loudly-insisted-upon encore at the conclusion of a very fine rendering of the song 'She wandered down the mountain side,' the shake at the end of which was a perfect piece of execution. Her second song, 'Villanelle' (del Acqua) enabled her to display with the utmost effect the great control she has over her voice, as well as the sympathetic charm it possesses."—Yarmouth Mercury, December 22, 1906.

Address, Newark-on-Trent.

MISS ETHEL RADBURN
(SOPRANO).
Pupil of and recommended by Mr. Charles Santley.
Oratorios, Operatic Airs, Ballads, &c.

"Hymn of Praise."—"Exceedingly sweet voice, vocal power being especially marked."

"Messiah."—"A safe & well-trained singer, well in tune & reliable."

Brahms's "Requiem."—"Sang with good taste and due regard for character of music."

Address, 39, Earlsfield Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

MISS AMY SARGENT
A.R.A.M. (SOPRANO).
8, Middleton Road, Camden Road, N.

MISS AGNES WALKER (DRAMATIC SOPRANO).

"Miss Agnes Walker possesses a highly trained voice, and sang with charming effect and dramatic power."—Surrey Herald, June, 1906.

"Special mention must be made of the talented Miss Agnes Walker, who sang and acted 'The Jewel Song' with decided dramatic effect."—The Westminster Mail. Address, 147, Brockley Road, London, S.E.

MR. WILLIAM SHEEN

Teleg., "Glynn," Stratton St. Margaret.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

St. Albans Philharmonic Society ("Judas Maccabæus").

"Mr. Samuel Masters possesses a remarkably fine voice of extraordinary power. His ringing top A's, which were produced without effort, completely filled the large hall, and undoubtedly Mr. Masters is one of the finest tenors ever heard in St. Albans. Anything more beautiful could hardly be imagined than his magnificent rendering of 'Sound an alarm,' while very artistic was his treatment of 'Call forth thy powers' and 'How vain is man.'"—Hertfordshire Mercury, April 26, 1906.

Wigan and District Philharmonic Society ("Judas Maccabæus").

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang with dramatic skill and fire; his upper notes are full and telling and of fine power. He aroused the enthusiastic feelings of his audience by his powerful declamation in 'Sound an alarm,' while the beauty of his voice was well brought out in 'How vain is man.'"—The Wigan Observer, December 29, 1906.

Leicester New Musical Society ("Jephtha").

"Mr. Samuel Masters' rendering of the music allotted to Jephtha was of a high order of artistic accomplishment. It reached its highest level in the dramatic recitative 'Deeper and deeper still' and the favourite air 'Waft her, angels,' which was beautifully sung. He also gave a spirited rendering of 'His mighty arm' and the difficult air 'Open thy marble jaws.'"—Leicester Daily Post, December 11, 1906.

Address, 21, GRANGE ROAD, KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.

MR. GWILYM RICHARDS

THE GRENADIER GUARDS BAND.

British military music seems to have had its origin in the Grenadier Guards. This premier infantry regiment in his Majesty's forces was founded by Charles II., in the year 1656, as the 'Royal Regiment of Guards': it was subsequently called the 'First Regiment of Foot Guards.' The familiar Grenadier designation came into vogue just after the Battle of Waterloo, according to the following order:

> War Office. July 29, 1815.
> His Royal Highness [The Prince Regent] has been pleased to approve of the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards being made a regiment of Grenadiers and styled the 1st or Grenadier Regiment of Foot Guards, in commemoration of their having defeated the Grenadiers of the French Imperial Guard upon this memorable occasion. [Battle of Waterloo.]

When the regiment was first raised (in 1656) it was musicless, unless seven drummers—three in the King's company, two in the Colonel's company, and two in 'one other company' at 12*d.* per day—come under the designation 'music.' Even so important a person as the drum-major was omitted at the raising of the regiment, but in October, 1662, he was created with the pay of 1*s.* 6*d. per diem*, or, two guineas per mensem. One solitary piper (fifer), at a shilling a day, was also added to the strength of the regiment. In 1674, by Royal warrant, an allowance of 1*s.* 6*d.* a day was granted to one Peter Vanhausen, to instruct one man in each company in the use of the pipe (fife). So far, drums and fifes only. The late General Sir F. W. Hamilton, author of 'The origin and history of the Grenadier Guards' (1874-77), is the authority for fixing the date of the introduction of military music into the British Army. He says, under date 1685—the year of the birth of Bach and Handel:

> Musicians were at this period introduced into the British Army, and a warrant signed by Charles II., dated January 3, 168$\frac{4}{5}$, authorising the entertainment [maintenance] of twelve hautbois in the companies of the King's Regiment of Foot Guards in London, and that a fictitious name should be borne on the strength of each of the other companies of the regiment quartered in the country, with a view of granting these musicians higher pay, was one of the last acts performed by the King concerning the Army.

There are however references in the State Papers of the year 1678 to payments for the liveries 'for two hautboys for the troop of Granadeers under His Grace the Duke of Monmouth for the war against the French King'—not that the hautboys were thereby clothed, but the mounted men who played them. The accounts for 1686 mention 'liveryes for the hautboyes and for six drummers,' their uniforms being 'trimmed with silk and silver lace.' Even if space permitted us to trace the development of music in the Army, the historical material is so scanty that any attempt at completeness would be futile. It appears, however, that by the middle of the 18th century the Foot Guards had 'an excellent band,' the authority for this statement being a no less dependable person than Dr. Burney. In his 'Present state of music in Germany,' he writes, under 'Mannheim' (1772):

> The first music I heard here was military. I lodged on the Place d'Armes, or parade; the retraite had only drums and fifes; and in the morning there was nothing worth listening to. If I had had an inclination to describe, in a pompous manner merely the effects of wind instruments in martial music, there had been no occasion to quit London; for at St. James's, and in the Park, every morning, we have now an excellent band; and hitherto, as I had not seen more soldierlike men in any service than our own, so the music and musicians, of other places, exceeded ours in nothing but the number and variety of the instruments; our military music, at present, must seem to have made great and hasty strides towards perfection, to all such as, like myself, remember, for upwards of twenty years, no other composition made use of in our foot-guards, than the march in Scipio, and in our marching regiments, nothing but side-drums.

Burney's reference to the March from Scipio recalls the tradition that this stately strain, still played on parade, was 'specially composed by Handel as a Parade Slow March for the Grenadier Guards, before it was introduced into Scipio.' While on the subject of the Scipio march, reference may be made to a march specially composed for the Guards by Samuel Wesley as a child between the age of seven and eight. Its origin can best be told in the words of the composer's father, the Rev. Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, who says:

> He [Samuel] was desired to compose a March for one of the regiments of Guards, which he did, to the approbation of all that heard it; and a distinguished officer of the Royal Navy declared that it was a movement which would probably inspire steady and serene courage when the enemy was approaching. As I thought the boy would like to hear the march performed, I carried him to the Parade at the proper time, when it had the honour of beginning the military concert. The piece being finished, I asked him whether it was executed to his satisfaction, to which he replied, 'By no means.' I then immediately introduced him to the band, which consisted of very tall and stout musicians, that he might set them right. On this, Sam said to them: 'You have not done justice to my composition'; to which they answered the urchin with astonishment and contempt, 'Your composition?' Sam replied, however, with great serenity: 'Yes, my composition,' which I confirmed. Then they stared, and severally made their excuses by protesting they had copied accurately from the manuscript which had been put into their hands. This he most readily allowed to the hautboys and bassoons, but said it was the French horns that were in fault; who, making the same defence, he insisted upon the original score being produced, and showing them their mistake, ordered the march to be played again, to which they submitted with as much deference as they would have shown to Handel.

Here are two themes from the said March, composed by Master Sam:—

A NEW MARCH.
As Performed upon the Parade and at St. James's.

Composed by Samuel Wesley.

The Trio is in this melodious strain:

The Lieut.-Colonel commanding the regiment, Colonel the Hon. J. T. St. Aubyn, C.V.O., has kindly allowed the following information relating to the Grenadier Guards Band to be copied, specially for this article, from the old Regimental Orders:

June 24, 1768.

The Field Officer in Waiting orders that the Officers of the Brigade be in Hyde Park tomorrow morning at half past 7 o'clock, instead of half past 6, as before ordered; he likewise orders that the Musitions of the three regiments play the Dorsetshire March when the Brigade are marching slow, and the Bellisle when they are marching quick.

June 26, 1768.

The French Cotillon is to be played in the quick time on the day of review.

September 1, 1790.

The Musicians of the Regiment are to take the greatest care of their instruments, as each of them will be ordered to make good any deficiencies that may happen from neglect or carelessness.

Horse Guards,
General Orders. 5th August, 1803.

It is His Majesty's pleasure that in regiments having bands of music not more than one private soldier of each troop or company shall be permitted to act as musicians, and that one non-commissioned Officer shall be allowed to act as Master of the Band. These Men are to be Drill'd and instructed in their Exercise, and in case of actual Service are to fall in with their respective Troops or Companies compleatly Armed and Accoutred.

His Royal Highness the Commander in Chief desires that General Officers Commanding in Districts will immediately communicate the above Order to the several Regiments under their Command and strictly enforce its Observance.

While these extracts speak for themselves, it is clear that at this time the Bandmaster was acknowledged at the War Office. As to the exact date when the dusky percussionists of the Band were introduced it is impossible to say with any certainty. It was certainly before 1793, as is proved by the following letter, written on July 2 of that year by Mr. W. J. Mattham, an innkeeper of Lavenham, Suffolk, and a member of the West Suffolk troop of Yeomanry. He says:

> We have had four companies of the West Middlesex Militia quartered upon us for three days, consisting of three officers and forty-nine men, who had the best band I ever heard,—'tis worth mentioning to those who are lovers of superior music. It consisted of five clarionets, two French horns, one bugle horn, one trumpet, two bassoons, one bass drum, two triangles (the latter played by boys about nine years old), two tambourines (the performers mulattos); and the clash-pans by a real blackamoor, a very active man, who walked between the two mulattos, which had a very grand appearance indeed.

The illustration given on p. 151 not only shows the 'blackamoors' of the Grenadier Guards, but furnishes evidence of the constitution of the Band. Moreover, it will be observed that the drummers have a dark band on the left arm, a feature of the uniform which is still continued, but only by the Grenadiers. This band, now of dark blue cloth, goes half round the arm. It is supposed to be the relic of an old mourning band, probably for Charles II., who instituted the hautbois, and died so very soon after.

No account of this famous Band would be complete without some reference to that stirring and typically British tune 'The British Grenadiers.' Concerning it, Chappell says: 'The correct date of this fine old English melody appears altogether uncertain, as it is found at different periods.' As the tune is intimately related to other airs, and thus became very popular, it may have been adapted to the military words, which, however, must be of ancient origin. Here they are:

Some talk of Alexander,
And some of Hercules,
Of Hector and Lysander,
And such great names as these;
But of all the world's great heroes
There 's none that can compare
With a tow row row row row row, row,
To the British Grenadiers.

2.

And when the siege is over,
We to the town repair,
The townsmen cry, Hurrah, boys!
Here comes a Grenadier!
Here come the Grenadiers, my boys,
Who know no doubts or fears,
Then tow sing row row row row row,
The British Grenadiers.

3.

Then let us fill a bumper,
And drink a health to those
Who carry caps and pouches,
And wear the louped clothes:
May they and their Commanders
Live happy all their years,
With a tow row row row row row, row,
For the British Grenadiers.

According to the Regimental Records the following are the known Bandmasters preceding the late Lieut. Dan Godfrey:

Mr. Blaney (during the occupation of Paris).
Mr. William Hardy, 1835, and ante.
Mr. Sibold, c. 1838.
Mr. A. J. Schott, appointed August 12, 1844.

So far the Regimental Records. But a perusal of that scarce book, the Musical Directory of 1794, has enabled us to discover an earlier Bandmaster than has hitherto been given, in the person of one Elrington, who is stated to be a flute player and 'Master of the 1st Guards Band,' residing at 34, Tufton Street, Westminster. The above source of information furnishes sixteen members of the Grenadier Guards Band, of whom five resided under the same roof as the Bandmaster. The instruments are distributed thus:

Flute	1
Clarinets	6
Trumpet	1
Horns	3
Bassoons	3
Serpents	2
Total	16

Directory, but this information is an addition to the history of the subject that is not without interest. Mr. Blaney, the first Bandmaster named in the Regimental Records, is doubtless the James Blaney, a clarinet player in the regiment, whose name appears in the Directory. He lived with Elrington and probably succeeded him in the bandmastership. Mr. A. J. Schott, the immediate predecessor of Dan Godfrey, published a Journal of military band music, one of the earliest of its kind, at his shop in St. James's Street. Upon Schott's retirement in 1856, Dan Godfrey, then a young man of twenty-five and a former student of the Royal Academy of Music, was appointed Bandmaster, a post he held with distinction for forty years. Godfrey was the first bandmaster in the British Army to receive a commission, when, on the occasion of Queen Victoria's Jubilee in 1887, he was gazetted an honorary second lieutenant. During his long régime he not only greatly increased the size of the Band but made it famous. One of the chief events during his period of office was the visit of the Band to the United States in the summer of 1872, to take part in the 'International Peace Jubilee' held at Boston, when the Band was received with unbounded enthusiasm. An American girl thus described its first appearance in America:

> The great 'hit' of the performance was the Grenadier Band under Dan Godfrey—elegant six-footers, in fresh superb scarlet, faced with gold, and tall fur caps. They filed down the centre to the front of the stage, looking as if they had just marched out of St. James's Palace, and Dan Godfrey was as handsome and big a blond man as the Grand Duke of Russia. The applause was maddening, and after their playing, the encores were endless; and when at last his band, accompanied (sic) by 20,000 chorus-singers, the big organ, the cannon, and church bells, struck up 'God save the Queen,' with every spectator standing on their seats, waving handkerchiefs, the scene became so exciting that tears of delight ran down the cheeks of thousands.

The present constitution of the Grenadier Guards Band is as follows:

3 flutes and piccolos
3 E flat clarinets
2 oboes
11 1st B flat clarinets*
5 2nd do.
3 3rd do.
4 bassoons
4 1st cornets
3 2nd do.
3 trumpets

6 French horns
4 tenor trombones
1 bass trombone
3 euphoniums
3 E flat bombardons
3 E flat contra-bombardons
2 side-drums
1 bass drum
1 cymbals
65 Total.

* Some of the 1st B flat clarinets occasionally play saxophones in French and other music when considered essential.

Every member of the Band has to enlist and ranks as a private, except the three serjeants and three corporals, and of course the Bandmaster. Their regimental pay is augmented from the Band Fund, which also provides the means for the purchase of instruments and music. The men do not live in barracks but in their own homes, therefore they have an allowance for lodging, rations and fuel, and are supplied with their uniforms. In turn with the three other bands of the Household infantry regiments—the Coldstreams, Scots Guards, and Irish Guards—the Grenadier Band is on duty at the mounting of the guard which takes place every morning at Buckingham Palace (when the King and Queen are in residence) or at St. James's Palace. A similar arrangement is in operation in regard to the Sunday services at Wellington and Chelsea Barracks. When the Sovereign is at Windsor, the Band of whichever regiment is quartered in the Royal borough has to attend the mounting of the guard there, the men travelling daily to and from Windsor for that purpose. The many engagements, in all parts of the country, which the Band fulfils, no less than the private engagements of its individual members at theatres and concerts, greatly augment the emoluments received from the military authorities.

It is very interesting to attend a rehearsal of the Band which, by the courtesy of Lieut. Williams, we were permitted to do on a recent morning. The practice is held in a large room of the Soldiers' Home, Buckingham Gate. The players are in mufti, bereft of their resplendent uniforms, and one looks in vain for a busby. Hard work and strict discipline are the tonic and dominant of the practice hour. The men are seated down the length of the room, and Lieut. Williams conducts from a platform. Meyerbeer's imposing Fackeltanz in C is being studied. One is immediately conscious of the Bandmaster's magnetic personality, his whole hearted enthusiasm, and his poetic temperament. Phrasing receives special attention; a diminuendo is asked for that shall be 'as it were, the shadow of a ghost'; such a word as 'feathery' is used to obtain lightness; and, indeed, mere technical phrases give place to words that shall stimulate poetic imagination. How wise and practical this is! Lieut. Williams is anything but a four-in-the-bar type of conductor. No wonder that he obtains such splendid results from his alert and capable men. A test of sight-reading, in a new march composed by Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts for the St. David's Day celebration at St. Paul's Cathedral is easily accomplished, and the tone is as superb as the execution is faultless. What would the twelve 'hautbois' instituted by Charles II., or even the Merry Monarch himself, say if they could hear the Grenadier Guards Band of 1907?

In 1904 this 'thin red line' of military musicians fulfilled an engagement at the St. Louis Exposition and elsewhere in the United States and Canada with triumphant success. For that visit Messrs. Boosey & Co. specially manufactured a complete set of instruments tuned to the low pitch, that being one of the conditions of the engagement. The same instruments were used at the daily performance given (in the same year) at the Earl's Court Exhibition. In this connection The Musical Times said: 'This will be the first opportunity afforded to musicians of hearing an English regimental band playing at the low pitch; a fact which cannot fail to be one of interest, and, indeed, of satisfaction.' 'appreciation' of the Grenadier Band may be quoted as furnishing a specimen of Chicago feminine journalism:

> Anybody expecting last night at the Auditorium that the brass would crash, the trumpets bray, met with a charming disappointment as his majesty King Edward's Grenadier band was made of singing woods and silver, some soft-toned gold and two giant strings to round out its beautiful measure of splendid melody.
> An audience of vehement patriotism assembled to greet the dandy musicians of the King, not a society audience at all, but one British to the core, full of Trafalgar and the gallant ghost of Nelson, hungry for the old English war songs and folk tunes and marches and up to the chest heavy in the feeling that England expected every man to do his duty in the manner of being strictly English. . . . . .

In regard to the conductor, the account goes on to say:

> His management of the baton is buoyant, dynamic, vivacious and graceful, without one iota of pose or other trait than vigorous individuality and magnificent command. He holds his scepter—a slender, tiny wand—delicately between his thumb and one finger and picks the notes out of every instrument with an elegance which is almost amusing were it not so masterly and magnetic.

It has been said that every private soldier carries a Field Marshal's baton in his knapsack. Whatever truth there may be in this statement, it is quite certain that a poor drummer-boy can become Bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards, a Doctor of Music at the University of Oxford, and receive a commission in one of the crack regiments in the British Army. Let the following biographical sketch furnish the necessary proof.

Lieutenant Albert Edward Williams, Mus.D., Bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards, was born at Newport, Monmouthshire, March 6, 1864. His father, a master mariner, died when his son was a child, leaving the family in anything but affluent circumstances. The boy was sent to the care of an unsympathetic uncle who kept a school in Derbyshire, where, when not assisting in the school, he was set to do menial work in the household. One day his uncle gave him money to pay his fare to Newport. He got as far as Bristol, whence he despatched a post-card to his uncle saying that he should not return to the school. At Bristol the 61st Regiment had its depôt, and the boy, aged only thirteen, then and there enlisted. While at the depôt he learned to play the drum and fife. Upon joining the regiment, then stationed at Malta, he entered the band as a euphonium player, and the next six or seven years (in India) were devoted to serious study of the theory of music under the guidance of the Bandmaster of the regiment, Herr Carl Barthmann. He attained the rank of corporal in October, 1885, and a few weeks after that of serjeant in the band in order that he might enter the Military School of Music at Kneller Hall and qualify for a bandmastership. Perseverance and hard work have been the predominating characteristics of his life. He returned to England and became a student at Kneller Hall in January, 1886. He made rapid progress in his studies, and at the end of two years he qualified for the important appointment of Bandmaster of the 10th Hussars. At that time the Band president was the late Prince Albert Victor and the regiment was stationed at York. The next four years were devoted to hard study under the late Dr. Naylor, organist of York Minster, with the result that the Bandmaster of the 10th Hussars obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford in November, 1891, his testamur being signed by Sir John Stainer, then Professor of Music at the University.

At that time the Bandmaster of the Royal Marine Artillery, Portsmouth, was John Winterbottom, formerly a famous bassoon player in Jullien's band, and a veteran soldier nearly seventy years of age. Upon his resignation in 1892 Albert Williams, then aged twenty-eight, obtained that important appointment. Among his large collection of letters, one which he specially cherishes is that written by General Sir Dighton Probyn on behalf of the King, then Prince of Wales, to the Commandant, warmly recommending Williams for the post. During the next five years at Portsmouth he did much public work outside his military duties. He conducted the Philharmonic Society which gave admirable performances of such works as Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' He also inaugurated a series of Symphony concerts which have since been imitated at other seaside resorts on the south-coast. For these concerts he wrote his own analytical programmes. So efficient did the Royal Marine Artillery Band become under his inspiring leadership that Queen Victoria 'commanded' its attendance at Osborne on several occasions.

In 1897 the retirement of Lieut. Dan Godfrey, after forty years' service, from the Bandmastership of the Grenadier Guards caused that blue riband appointment in the Service to become vacant. As in the case of the 10th Hussars, the Royal Marine Artillery was only a stepping-stone whereby Bandmaster Williams was to attain to the coveted post so long held by Godfrey. He obtained it; and during the ten years he has held the appointment the Grenadier Guards Band has fully justified the choice, not only by the high reputation it holds in military circles, but by the favour in which it is regarded by the general public. In November last he took the degree of Doctor of Music at Oxford, being the first Bandmaster in the British Army to obtain that distinction. After Dr. Williams had received his degree the Vice-Chancellor shook hands with him and said: 'I understand you are a pioneer in the Army in regard to the degree of Doctor of Music: I hope it will bear the fruit it deserves.' On that occasion the whole of the Grenadier Guards Band voluntarily went to Oxford to witness the ceremony of conferring the degree upon their Bandmaster. Moreover, these excellent musicians offered to give a concert in the Town Hall the same afternoon (December 6, 1906) in aid of the Radcliffe Infirmary, an offer which was accepted and which secured the sum of £60 for that excellent institution.

The compositions of Dr. Williams include a setting of Psalm xxx., and the oratorio 'Elisha,' written for his degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music respectively; a setting of Psalm lxxxiv.; an Evening Service in D; a Te Deum and Jubilate in E flat; three Overtures for military band; some Military Marches; several songs, &c.

Dr. Williams has received many congratulations and still continues to receive them—one from a regiment stationed at Pretoria—upon the honour recently conferred upon him by the King: that of a commission as Second Lieutenant in the regiment he has served so faithfully and efficiently.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

When the building committee of the present cathedral had to select an organ-builder, to whom should they go but to Bernard Smith? His great reputation, no less than his victory over Renatus Harris, his formidable rival, in connection with the Temple Church organ, marked him out as the master-craftsman who would build an instrument worthy of the great cathedral. From a document in the possession of Dr. W. H. Cummings we find that at a committee meeting held on October 19, 1694—those present including the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, 'Mr. Dean of St. Pauls,' the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs (Mr. Sweetaple and Mr. Cole), and Sir Christopher Wren—it was > Ordered that it be referred to the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls and to Sr. Chr. Wren and Dr. Blowe to receive Proposalls from Mr. Smith Organ-Maker and to treat and agree with him to make the Organ for St. Pauls.

Two months later the committee considered, approved and confirmed the following contract:

> Memd: That in pursuance of the Order first above written it was then agreed by the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls and ye Surveyor of the Workers of St. Pauls Cathedral for and in the behalfe of the Rt. Honable. ye Lords and others Coms. for rebuilding and adorning ye said Cathedral with Bernard Smith Organ-Maker to make a large Organ containing 21 stops, part wood and part metall, and 6 halfe stops, according to Two Lists of ye said stops hereunder expressed as followeth:
> [This Father Smith specification will be given later, in order that it may be compared with that of Father Willis.]
> And the said Bernard Smith doth hereby agree to make all ye said stops in Workmanlike manner together with all sound-boards, Conveyances, Movements and Bellowes thereunto appertaining and to fix ye same and tune them perfectly according to ye best of his skill in ye Case that shall be set up and provided with all Ornaments, Carvings, Gildings, and Outside painting over the Great Entrance of the Choire of St. Pauls at the Charge of ye said Coms.; the said Bernard Smith being only at ye expence of all ye inside work,—of ye Pipes, Conveyances and Movements as afforesaid to render it a compleat Instrument, from Double F fa ut to C sol fa in Alt inclusive.
> And the said Bernard Smith doth also Agree to set up and tune fit for use all ye stops expressed in the first of the afforesaid Lists at or before the ffive and Twentieth Day of September which shall be in ye yeare of Our Lord 1695. And the rest of the said Stops (expressed in ye Second List) at or before our Lady Day ensuing for the intire sume of Two Thousand Pounds, to be paid in manner following (that is to say) ffoure Hundred Pounds in hand (the Receipts whereof he doth hereby acknowledge), and when ye Sound-board and first Setts of Pipes (expressed in ye first of the afforesaid Lists) shall be made and provided, the further sume of One Thousand Pounds, and the residue to make up ye entire Sume, when ye said Organ shall with all ye stops be ffixed in the Case provided, and shall be approved by able Organists and particularly Dr. John Blowe, Organist to their Maties. and such others as the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls shall nominate.

Sir George Martin has extracted from the paybooks used at the building of the cathedral some interesting information concerning the cartage of Father Smith's pipes. In November, 1695, payments were made:

ffor Iron work for a new sledge to bring ye Organ Pipes to ye Church, wt. 1 c. 2 qrs. 12 lbs. at 4d. per lb. - - - - -	03. 05. 00
ffor Carriage of Organ Pipes from Suffolk Street to ye Church with one teame, 2 days - - - - - - - -	01. 04. 00
ffor 2 days work of one Teame to fetch Organ Pipes - - - - - -	01. 04. 00

Father Smith—who lived in a house 'over again the Cock, in Suffolck Street, near Chering Crose'—was paid £2,000 for the organ, exclusive of the case, a sum which would be equal in the present day to about £8,000. And this was not all. The committee paid (September, 1696):

For the Frame within ye case to support ye Pipes and Sound Boards - - -	40. 00. 00

Two amounts of £90 and £66 10*s*. were paid for 'gilding ye organ pipes,' and among the odds and ends of charges was one of £16 8*s*. 'for charcoale and old coale for Mr. Smith.' The case—of which an illustration appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1900—was provided with window-sashes fitted with glass, which could be drawn down when the organ was not in use, with the idea of keeping out the dust. Charles Hobson, the joiner, made the frames at a cost of £31 10s.; Grinling Gibbons carved them for £8 18*s*. 6*d*., and John Oliver supplied the glass—the 89 panes costing £117 14*s*.! But, as Sir George Martin says, 'We must not forget that the glass was Christalle.' The octet of statue angels on the top of the organ, about 5 ft. 6 in. in height, and carved in oak, cost £20 each, while 'The Draperry and whole Boys, and two halfe Boys' were supplied for £25. These are above the central panel of pipes in the Chayre organ, where the organist sits. A further payment was made to Hobson, the joiner, of £339 15*s*. 10*d*. for his share of the case, and Grinling Gibbons received £610 18*s*. 2*d*. for the carving. The latter seems a large sum, but we have in Grinling Gibbons's work an inheritance that can never be replaced. The photograph on p. 157 brings out details of Gibbons's carving that are not visible to the naked eye owing to the dim light of the cathedral.

Sir Christopher Wren wished to place the organ on the north side of the choir, as in the old cathedral, in order not to interrupt the view from one end of the building to the other; but he was overruled by the Dean, who decreed that the instrument should be placed on a screen erected in the choir a few feet eastward from the dome. After Wren had designed the case, Smith extended his scheme—making the manual compass to CCC—whereby more room for the pipes was needed. But when Smith asked Wren to enlarge the case he refused, declaring that the building was already spoiled by that 'confounded box of whistles'! Smith showed his revenge by causing some of the largest pipes in the two side towers to project through the top of the case nearly a foot. No wonder that Wren was angry with Father Smith, but he soon overcame the difficulty by adding the angels, with trumpets, standing at the side of a small altar.

Renatus Harris was naturally jealous of Smith for having been selected to build the St. Paul's organ. He subsequently (about 1710) made a proposal for erecting a large organ in the Continental style over the west door of the cathedral; the complete text of this important proposal was given in The Musical Times of August, 1905 (p. 533). Harris, or one of his friends, was doubtless the author of the following examination-paper, the original of which, printed on a broadside, is preserved at the British Museum:

QUERIES ABOUT ST. PAUL'S ORGAN.

I.—Whether Sir Christopher Wren wou'd not have been well pleas'd to have receiv'd such a Proposal from the Organ-builder of St. Paul's, as shou'd have erected an Organ, so as to have separated 20 Foot in the Middle, as low as the Gallery, and thereby given a full and airy Prospect of the whole length of the Church, and six Fronts with Towers as high as requisite?

II.—Whether the difficulty this Organ-builder finds in making Pipes to speak, whose bodies are but 16 Foot long, does not prove how much harder it wou'd have been for him, to have made Pipes of 22 Foot speak, as those at Exeter; or 32 Foot, as several organs beyond Sea? And whether he has reason to complain of want of height, or room in the Case for higher, and larger Pipes, since those of a common size have put him to a Non-plus? And whether he has not the greater Reason, because he gave the Dimensions of the Case himself?

III.—Whether the double Bases of the Diapasons in St. Paul's Organ speak quick, bold, and strong (with a firm, plump, and spreading Tone) or on the contrary, slow, soft, and only buzzing, when touch'd singly? And whether they may not more properly be call'd Mutes than speaking Pipes?

IV.—Whether the Organ be not too soft for the Quire now 'tis inclos'd? And if so, what will it be when laid open to the Cupulo and Body of the Church? And what further Addition of Strength and Lowdness will it require to display its Harmony quite through the large Concave of the Building, and answer the Service of the Quire, which is the noblest for Eccho and Sound, and consequently of the greatest advantage to an Instrument, of any in Europe?

V.—Whether the Sound-boards, and Foundation of the Instrument, as well as Contrivance, and Disposition of the whole Work, will admit of more Stops to render the Organ in Proportion, five times as Lowd as now it is?

VI.—Whether if 12 Stops (supposing there were so many in the great Organ) were plaid full in Chorus, 'twould not make S. Paul's Organ vibrate and faint? And if so, how can it be render'd lowder by the Addition of Stops, since the Wind that does not well supply 12, must of necessity worse supply 13, and so onward?

VII.—Whether 'tis possible to make an Organ lowder, that has all the Strength it can contain already?

VIII.—Whether there been't Organs in the City lowder, sweeter, and of more variety than St. Paul's (which cost not one 3d. of the Price) And particularly, whether Smith at the Temple, has not out-done Smith of St. Paul's? And whether S. Andrew's Undershaft,* has not out-done them both?

IX.—Whether the Open Diapason of Metal that speaks on the lower set of Keys at S. Andrew's Undershaft, be not a Stop of extraordinary Use and Variety, and such as neither St. Paul's has, or can have?

X.—Whether Depth in the Case gives not Liberty for containing the greater Quantity and Variety of Work? And if so, why should not St. Paul's have as great Variety as other Organs, and the order of the Work be as well contriv'd, and dispos'd for Tuning and other Conveniences, since its Case is near double the Depth to any in England?

XI.—Whether the great Organ-builder will condescend to submit his Organ to the same Scrutiny, which all Artists of the same Profession do in all Countries? And if it be deny'd whether it will not give the World, and particularly the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's reason to fear, that this Noli-me-tangere proceeds from some secret Cause? And to Question—

XII.—Whether the Cupulo, or the organ at St. Paul's, will be first finished?

* Built by Harris at a cost of £1,400, and opened May 31st, 1696.

Father Smith's organ originally consisted of two manuals. In the latter part of the 18th century Byfield tuned the instrument at a charge of £10 per annum, and Crang added a miserable little swell of seven stops, only to tenor C (4 feet compass)! In 1802 (or thereabouts) a Swede named Orchmann (or Ohrmann) and his son-in-law named Nutt took the organ to pieces and lowered the pitch by a semitone, whereby they had to supply a new series of pipes for the CCC key. It is said that both these artificers—unknown to fame—died from the effects of colds caught in the cathedral while carrying out the work. In 1826 Bishop made several additions, including an octave of large pedal pipes acted upon by toe pedals: previous to that time this noble instrument had no independent pedal organ! William Gardiner, of Leicester, in his 'Music and Friends' (vol. ii., p. 651) describes a visit he paid to St. Paul's on the afternoon of a Whitsunday (circa 1832). He there mentions that the organ had 'lately received an addition of pedal pipes of the largest size, descending an octave below the original notes. These, under the gigantic tread of Cooper, have conferred a grandeur upon the instrument never surpassed.' Bishop further improved the organ in 1849 with a new swell, and added new keys and pedals; up to that time the naturals were white and the sharps were black. What a pity that the old keyboards, on which Handel and Mendelssohn played, have not been preserved.

In 1860, Messrs. Hill removed Smith's organ from the screen and placed it in the second arch of the north side of the choir, as shown in the illustration on page 159. The first services under the new conditions were those of Advent Sunday, December 2, 1860. Following the example of Canterbury, the keyboards were placed on a level with the choir stalls; but after having been more or less buried for three years, Goss made such a strong protest that the keyboards were transferred to a position above the stalls and on a level with the instrument itself. This was carried out by Father Willis and formed the beginning of that distinguished artist's connection with St. Paul's. In 1872 the organ was divided as we now know it—Father Smith's case being cut in two, so to speak, and a replica of the 'chayre organ' made for the south case in order to match that on the north side. The keyboards of this organ—upon which Sir John Stainer played during the whole of his organistship—are now preserved in the Trophy Room. In 1899 Father Willis built the present magnificent instrument, incorporating much of his 1872 work, which stands to-day as a triumph of his mechanical skill and organ-building genius. For the purpose of comparison we give in

THE PRESENT ORGAN BUILT BY FATHER WILLIS, 1872-99.

The organist sits on the north side of the choir in that part of the instrument which juts out from the rest of the case; the connection with the opposite side is made by pneumatic tubes which pass under the floor of the Choir.

There are five rows of keys or manuals, and pedals. The connection with the quarter dome part is by means of electricity, and the weight imposed on the bellows for the most powerful stops is about three tons.

Two-thirds of the pedal organ and three of the most powerful tubas are placed in the north-east quarter dome, invisible except from the Whispering Gallery.

There are 4,822 speaking pipes in the instrument, and 76 sounding stops, and, reckoning couplers, 102 stops in all.

The following is the specification of this magnificent instrument:

Two other organs must be mentioned. In 1851 Messrs. Bishop erected a temporary organ at the west end of the cathedral for the Sunday afternoon services held in the nave during the time of the Great Exhibition. At first placed in the west gallery and afterwards removed to a platform below, this instrument consisted of a great organ of nine stops, a tenor C swell, and a pedal open diapason of nineteen notes. In order to compensate in some measure for the removal of Father Smith's organ from the screen to the north side of the choir (in 1860), the Dean and Chapter purchased from Mr. E. T. Smith—it is said for £500—Hill's organ, then in the Panopticon of Science and Art (now Alhambra), Leicester Square. This instrument consisted of four manuals and sixty sounding stops, including 'Drums CC—C' on the pedal! Placed in a gallery in the south transept, this organ was caseless, with the exception of the Wren-Smith 'chayre organ' case, detached from the main case when the organ was removed from the screen and rebuilt over the north stalls. The original Panopticon case would not have harmonized with the architecture of the cathedral: thus this Transept organ remained an unsightly object during the thirteen years it remained at St. Paul's, until 1873, when it was removed to the Victoria Rooms, Clifton. The gallery, with its five marble columns, on which this organ stood in the south transept, has but recently been removed. Sir John Stainer always considered this gallery to be the best place for hearing the great musical services in the cathedral.

'In aid of the cathedral fund, especially the purchase of the new organ,' the Dean and Chapter organized a festival performance of Handel's 'Messiah,' which took place under the dome on St. Paul's Day, January 25, 1861. It was the first time that an oratorio had been performed in the cathedral since its erection more than a century and a half before. The band and chorus numbered 600 performers. Goss conducted, George Cooper presided at the transept organ, and the solo singers were Lemmens-Sherrington, Mrs. Lockey, Sims Reeves, and Lewis Thomas, in addition to Francis, Winn and Buckland, who were officially connected with the cathedral. On that occasion the cathedral was warmed, and the charges for tickets were as follows: 'Under the dome, 21*s.*; transept, 10*s.* 6*d.*; nave, 5*s.*' This method of raising money drew forth some scathing denunciations from Mr. J. W. Davison in the Musical World. He wrote three leading articles on the subject. The first began: 'Amplitude is one of the principal elements of the sublime,' while the last ended thus:

> Where are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners? Echo knows—and answers 'Where?' Ubi (to emphasize the question) the Ecclesiastical Commissioners? The Dean and Chapter know—and answer, 'Ubi.'
> To conclude. Would not Mendelssohn's St. Paul have better suited the anniversary of the Festival of St. Paul's (or Saul's) conversion? Answer—decidedly not. The Messiah draws more money; the Dean and Chapter want money; they don't want St. Paul; St. Paul won't pay Mr. E. T. Smith; the Messiah will (perhaps).

For the opening of the choir of the cathedral and of Father Smith's organ Dr. Blow composed an anthem beginning 'I was glad when they said unto me,' which is still unpublished. A contemporary transcript at the British Museum contains at the end this information:

> This was made by Dr. Blow Octr. ye 15, 1697, att Hamton town for the opening of St. Pauls Cathedrall.

Various copies of Dr. Blow's anthem exist. One of them, at the British Museum—presented to the nation in 1849 by Vincent Novello and formerly in Dr. Hayes's collection—contains an instrumental introduction of fourteen bars, and is orchestrated for trumpets and strings (the strings doubling the voice parts) in addition to the organ. The vocal part of the anthem opens thus jerkily:

Handel frequently played upon Father Smith's organ during the organistship of Dr. Greene.

One of the master's visits is thus recorded in The Daily Journal of August 25, 1724:

> Yesterday their Royal Highnesses the Princess Anne and Princess Carolina, came to St. Paul's Cathedral, and heard the famous Mr. Handel (their Musick-Master) perform upon the Organ; the Reverend Dr. Hare, Dean of Worcester, attending on their Royal Highnesses during their Stay there.

As Dr. Hare was also a canon of St. Paul's, this accounts for his having been the cicerone of the royal party.

More than one hundred years later another master-musician passed his fingers over the keys of the St. Paul's organ, during Attwood's organistship. In the British Museum is preserved a little note, which reads:

> Sunday, May 27th, 8 o'clock [1832].
> Dear Novello—Mendelssohn has just received some manuscripts of Sebastian Bach which he purposes trying this morning, hope you will meet him—11 o'clock. Yours truly,
>
> Thos. Attwood.
> V. Novello, Esq.,
> 67, Frith Street, Soho.

It was most probably on this occasion that Mendelssohn played (from memory), to Attwood and Novello, Bach's little E minor prelude and fugue. Novello was so struck, as well he might be, with the beauty of the composition that he asked Mendelssohn to send him a copy of it, with the result that Novello published the work, and, moreover, for the first time in any country, even including Germany, the land of Bach's birth.*

Mozart, as a boy, most probably visited the cathedral during his only visit to England in 1764-5. Haydn certainly did in 1792, when he attended the annual service of the Charity Children. On that occasion he noted in his diary the florid double chant in D of John Jones, then organist of St. Paul's, and wrote underneath the copy: 'I was more touched by this innocent and reverent music than by any I ever heard in my life.' Berlioz was even more affected at a similar service in 1851. He, surplice-clad—Berlioz must have looked an imposing figure in a surplice—and his friend G. A. Osborne sang in the select choir. In an article he contributed to the Journal des Débats (afterwards reprinted in his Les Soirées de l'Orchestre) Berlioz speaks of the 'overpowering emotion' he experienced, and Osborne has recorded how the great French composer wept while listening to the simple strains sung by those poor London children. The last of these services, held for so many years at St. Paul's, took place in 1877, but under greatly altered conditions: after 1871 no tiers of seats were allowed to be erected.

The annual festival of the Sons of the Clergy has long been held at the cathedral. It now takes place under the dome with all due significance. Until 1854, however, singers, players and congregation were located in the choir, as shown by the illustration (on p. 161)—from the Illustrated London News of May 13, 1843, there stated to be an 'accurate picture'—when Sir George Smart conducted. Shortly after this the Bishop of London (Blomfield) forbade the use of an orchestral band, on account of the gross irreverence of some of the performers. The band was revived in 1873.

The first special Sunday evening service was on Advent Sunday (November 28), 1858, before the organ had been removed from the screen. A special choir (including ladies in 1861, if not earlier) was then enrolled, and thus constituted: sopranos and altos, 200; tenors, 150; basses, 150. At first the services were held from January to Easter, but since 1872 they have been held on every Sunday throughout the year, the music being of a simple, congregational character. In 1873, the year after Sir John Stainer's appointment as organist, those oratorio services were inaugurated at St. Paul's which have become such interesting features of the cathedral's music. The first was on St. Paul's Day, 1873, when a selection from Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul' was performed by a full band and chorus under Stainer's direction. To this followed Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion (Lent, 1873) and the Advent service 'The Last Judgment' (1878), or Brahms's 'Requiem,' introduced in December, 1901. These services have been well sustained during the régime of Sir George Martin, who has entered thoroughly into their devotional spirit.

The almoners of St. Paul's—those who have been responsible for the choristers of the cathedral—have included Michael Wise, Jeremiah Clark, Dr. John Blow, Charles King ('the serviceable man'), William Savage, Robert Hudson, Richard Bellamy, John Sale and William Hawes. After Mr. Hawes (the last layman as Almoner) the music-masters of the choristers were William Bayley, Henry Buckland, and Mr. Frederick Walker. The last named resigned when the Choir School was established on the present basis, and Mr. (now Sir) G. C. Martin was appointed. As to the choristers themselves, have not some of them attained fame in the realm of English church music? Here are some names of cathedral organists and others, former choristers of St. Paul's, which will answer that question:

* See Novello's 'Select Organ Pieces,' No. 42, which contains a characteristic personal note by Vincent Novello as to how he obtained the transcript of one of the most beautiful of all the great Cantor's organ pieces.

The above list may serve as a stimulus to the present choristers of the cathedral in the discharge of their daily duties. As an illustrated article on the Choir School appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1900, there is no need to enlarge upon this splendid adjunct to the music of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The first recorded organist of St. Paul's after the Great Fire was Isaac Blackwell, who was appointed vicar-choral on February 7, 1686. As he was able to play the organ, he held the office of organist in 1687, when the present cathedral was being built. Until Sir John Stainer's time (1872) a vicar-choral's stall always went with the organistship, as in most cathedrals of the Old Foundation. Although he is mentioned by Hawkins, Mr. Blackwell is practically unknown, as no modern English dictionary notices him. That he was a composer is proved by the second set of Deering's 'Cantica Sacra' (1674), to which he contributed two anthems, 'Behold, how good and joyful' and 'Let my complaint come before Thee, O Lord' (both for two voices, cantus and bass), also a hymn for Good Friday, 'See sinfull soul, thy Saviour's sufferings see.' In John Playford's 'Choice Ayres, Songs and Dialogues' (1676), Blackwell's name appears as the composer of seven songs in that collection.

Jeremiah Clark appears to have succeeded Blackwell. As composer of the tune 'St. Magnus' Clark is widely known. In consequence of a love affair 'he shot himself with a little screw pistol in the side of the head, as he sat in his chair by the fireside,' as a broadside at the British Museum has it (see THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1906, p. 33, for further details). Upon the death of Jeremiah Clark, Richard Brind, a former chorister of the cathedral, was appointed organist on February 23, 1708. Beyond the fact that he composed a few forgotten anthems he is unknown to fame. As the next five organists (excepting John Jones, who held office from 1755 to 1796) have formed the subjects of illustrated biographies in this journal, there is no need to repeat what has already been set forth in detail. Their names are—Dr. Maurice Greene, Thomas Attwood (a pupil of Mozart's), Sir John Goss, and Sir John Stainer, a former chorister of the cathedral, and Sir George Martin, the present organist.*

Mention must be made of some of the sub-organists during the past century: George Cooper, senior, George Cooper, junior (a masterly performer), and William Hodge; also Mr. Charles Macpherson, a former chorister, who now holds the office of sub-organist and discharges his duties with distinction.

Of Sir George Martin, who succeeded to the organistship in 1888, it is sufficient to say that he is a worthy compeer of those men of genius whose names are household words in English church music, and who have held the important office of organist of London's great cathedral. It has been said that St. Paul's has a melodic school of its own. Is this true? The compositions of Attwood, Goss, Stainer, and Martin furnish an affirmative answer.

For valued help in the preparation of this article the writer is indebted to the Rev. W. P. Besley, M.A., minor canon and librarian, and Sir George Martin, M.V.O., organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and in a special manner to Mr. John S. Bumpus, whose book 'The Organists and Composers of St. Paul's Cathedral' is a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject.

CHINESE MUSIC.

A man without virtue, what has he to do with music?—OLD PROVERB.

'Ceremony and Music'—these seem to have been considered, in the life of ancient China, two of the most important things. As there were 'rules of propriety' to guide a man to the right and seemly manner in which to meet every situation of his life, so music was the inner force by which this outward form of reverent and comely action was inspired—music, that is, not merely of drum and bell, of psaltery and flute, but also of harmonious thought and word and deed. Thus music became to be regarded not only as an Art to be minutely regulated and carefully performed, but as itself the great regulating influence in state and family and individual life. One of the most famous instruments of antiquity was named, it is said, from the power it had to restrain the evil passions. Remembering all this, we are not surprised to find that Confucius, the great restorer of the ancient ways of virtue, was a lover of music; and there is something very fascinating in the thought of 'the master' himself as an enthusiastic musician, not merely valuing the political and moral uses of the art, but himself singing and playing and being deeply moved when he heard great music. Already in his day (c. 550 B.C.) the true old music was less practised, and, about a century later, as we learn from the protest of Mencius, vulgar modern music had supplanted the ancient even in royal performances. But it was not, perhaps, till the reign of the vandal Ch'in Shih-huang (c. 250 B.C.) that the old art was lost beyond hope of recovery.

'How to play music may be known,' said Confucius, when instructing the grand music-master of his own too degenerate state. 'At the commencement of the piece, all the parts should sound together. As it proceeds, they should be in harmony, but each part distinct and flowing without break, and thus on to the conclusion.' We wish he had told us in more detail 'how to play music'; we long to learn what the grand music-master, who probably, like most of his profession at that time, was blind, taught or rather should have taught. But we are doomed to disappointment. All that has been recovered from that early period, largely it seems through the research of Tsai Yü,* is some knowledge of the scales in use and of the instruments on which the music was performed.

* For these biographical sketches, see THE MUSICAL TIMES as follows: Dr. Greene, February, 1903; Thomas Attwood, December, 1900; Sir John Goss, June, 1901; Sir John Stainer, May, 1901; and Sir George Martin, July, 1897.

Very early in their history the Chinese seem to have known the octave and the division of it into twelve semitones. These semitones were evolved from a series of perfect fifths, and were consequently not uniform in dimension (cf. Table, note a). The legends of the invention of this scale are variously interpreted; but they point at any rate to a time before the settlement of the people in China, and they may indicate, as some think, that elements were borrowed from the still earlier tribes through which the Chinese passed or among which they finally made their home. The simplest form of the story hints at a truth which is insisted on by scientific musicians to-day, that scales were derived from instruments, and that instruments were not primarily designed to play known scales† ; for when the 'Prime Minister' was ordered to make a scale, his first thought was to make himself a bamboo flute. The note of the first pipe he cut was D above middle C; this, as Tsai Yü tells us, was the note of Huang Chung, the foundation note of the whole theory of music in the earliest historical age. Later, and probably within the second millennium before Christ, the octave was artificially divided into equal semitones, and musicians seem to have given much attention to the art of transposition‡ made possible by the new equal-temperament (cf. Table, notes b, c). This mathematical treatment of the scale may have given rise to the belief, if it were not derived from the fact, that the pipe which gave the note Huang Chung was the foundation not only of music, but of all measures, whether of capacity or length.

Ancient musicians knew and named the notes of the octave below and of the octave above their original or normal octave. But besides the thirty-six notes of fixed pitch thus obtained, they had also a scale, Wu Yin, consisting of the well-known 'five notes' (cf. Table). This pentatonic scale may well have preceded the complete series of twelve notes; yet as early as it has been traced ‡ Detailed instructions for the transposition of the classical or state music are given in the official regulations. For instance, although the actual melody of the Confucian Hymn (on the opposite page) remains the same for each season, the key is transposed according to the moon during which the ceremony, at which it is sung, takes place. It is interesting to remember that Bach's first Twenty-four Preludes and Fugues were written to show the advantages of equal-temperament on the 'bundfrei' clavichord—his Wohltemperirte Clavier.

NOTATION OF THE FIRST TWO PHRASES OF THE CONFUCIAN HYMN.

EXPLANATION.—The above reproduction of a page from a Chinese 'Full score' is divided into eleven vertical columns—the first, on the right, gives the description of the vocal part and the names of the instruments; the next four columns give the vocal part and musical accompaniment or the four notes of the first phrase of the Hymn. The sixth column gives directions for the sounding of the stone gong and bell and the beating of the large and small drums (designated by circles). The next four columns contain the vocal and instrumental parts for the second phrase, and the last column is for the drums (solo).

The page is also divided into six horizontal sections. The uppermost section gives the vocal part, or rather, the words only; the second the notation (in two forms Lü Lü and Wu Yin or sol-fa) for the bells, stone chimes and panpipes; the third for the Hsiâo (vertical flute), Hsuän and Ch'ih; and the fourth for the Ti (transverse flute) and Shêng in Kung Ch'ê characters; the fifth for the Ch'in, and the sixth for the Shê. The two latter notations are in a form of tablature. The Lü Lü is a fixed notation. See the Table on the opposite page.

the names seem to indicate not fixed notes, but the relative position of the notes in a scale, corresponding to our tonic, supertonic, mediant, dominant and submediant, and bearing a close resemblance to the sol-fa system with its movable Doh. This was subsequently enlarged to seven notes by the addition of the semitones below the dominant and the octave. The existence of a diatonic scale implying or actually using semitones might show, if proof were needed, that the twelve equal divisions of the octave were not the first idea of a scale possessed by the Chinese. For such a scale might naturally have been divided into six whole-tones, and evidence of an actual tendency to do this exists in the fanciful division of the notes into six pairs, the six odd numbers being called active, and the even numbers passive.[*] Equal-temperament, however, never took firm root, so that when the study of music began to revive in the second century before Christ, and efforts were made to recover the lost ancient art, musicians declared the modulations and transpositions of which tradition spoke to be impossible on instruments of a fixed pitch like chimes of bells or stone gongs. It is characteristic of the confusion that now prevails in classical music (i.e., the music of the state religion) that while the tunes are duly transposed according to the time of year, some of the instruments on which they are played are not conformed to the rules of equal-temperament.[†]

The two semitones added to the five-note scale, moreover, seem never to have become universally popular, though it is said that they are not uncommonly used in the north of China; and it may be broadly stated that the pentatonic scale, in some form very similar to that already given, has been continuously the characteristic Chinese scale from a very remote date. While this is so, the ancient names of the notes long ago gave place to names borrowed from a foreign scale which was introduced, it is said, by the Mongol tribes with which China had constant intercourse of peace or war from the beginning of the Christian era, until the whole country was conquered by Kublai Khan towards the end of the 13th century (cf. Table). The practical introduction of this foreign scale was, we may be sure, a gradual process to which it would be hard to assign an exact date. It is important, however, to notice that the scale had seven notes, and that it was nearly the same as the European diatonic scale; that is, that if we use only the white notes of the pianoforte, and take the ancient native scale as beginning on F, the first note of the Mongol scale is C. But there are indications that the scale, like the nation, conquered the conqueror. The outward form was changed, but the scale remained the same. First a new note and name (kou) were added to represent the augmented fourth of the old scale; but this seems to have been too artificial a device, and the new name is said to be now quite forgotten. The required result was attained, nevertheless, by treating the fourth note of the new scale as tonic instead of the first. Of this arrangement several incidental traces may be found in various music books; but, on the other hand, Tsai Yü very carefully gives the Mongol scale, though using the ancient notation, as the scale of an almost prehistoric flute.

There seems to be nothing at all like staff notation in China, nor any attempt to show the relative pitch of notes by the positions of the written symbols, though this latter device is, I believe, known in Thibet. The Chinese represent notes by words written just as any other words would be written. For many classical instruments ingenious special symbols have been used, as is shown in the accompanying reproduction of the Full-score of the first two phrases of the celebrated Confucian Hymn (page 165).

SHAKESPEARE.
Much Ado About Nothing, II., 3.

The recent death of Viscount Goschen recalls the fact that he was a connecting link with Weber. In his interesting book 'The life and times of Georg Joachim Goschen: publisher and printer of Leipzig, 1752-1828,' the deceased statesman says: 'Weber became a friend of my grandfather (the subject of the above memoir) and of my father. The latter often visited the great composer when he was in London in 1826, and attended his sick bed during the illness to which Weber succumbed in that year in the house of Sir George Smart.' In the life of Weber, by his son Baron Max von Weber, there is a charming reference to Mr. Goschen, the late Lord Goschen's father. Two days before his death, Weber, fully under the impression that he would soon return to his native land, asked his friend Goschen: 'Have you anything to say to your father? At all events I shall tell him that his son has been a dear kind friend to me in London.' 'But you leave many friends and admirers here,' said Mr. Goschen. 'Hush! hush!' replied Weber, gently smiling, 'that's not the same thing, you know.' A few hours afterwards the spirit of the great composer had taken its flight.

[*] This classification did not, perhaps, affect composition till the present dynasty, when, Van Aalst says, if a tune (in classical music) begins on an active note no passive notes may be admitted. This rule is no doubt connected with the eccentricities of the official manual of classical music, whose compiler gives a diagram showing a scale of fourteen semitones—the diatonic intervals all regarded as tones—and is driven to most curious devices to find equivalents among the ancient twelve notes for the last two of his fourteen.

[†] In modern popular music several different keys are used. Little attention, however, seems to have been paid to them as yet by foreign students, and, owing to the faulty intonation of voices and instruments, we cannot be sure whether the difference between one key and another is merely a difference of pitch or may involve to some extent a different succession of intervals. Compositions, it should be understood, do not wander from the limits of the diatonic scale, and there appears to be no direct evidence that the Chinese have ever used their knowledge of the twelve divisions of the octave except for purposes of transposition. In modern popular music even this use is forgotten, and keys are defined not by the ancient note names, but by the position of the dominant in each on some instrument, usually the tranverse flute.

The first performance in England of Signor Enrico Bossi's 'Paradise Lost' (noticed on p. 180), excites curiosity as to previous musical settings of Milton's great epic. In 1816—not 1817, as stated in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' and other books of reference—an oratorio entitled 'The Intercession,' composed by Matthew Peter King, the text from Milton, was produced at Covent Garden Theatre on Whitsun Eve, June 1, of that year. The Morning Post of June 3, 1816, thus records the event:

> COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.
> On Saturday evening was produced at this Theatre, a new Oratorio, called The Intercession, taken from Milton's Paradise Lost. The music is the composition of Mr. M. P. King; and it decidedly surpasses all his former productions. The composer appears to have caught the inspiration of the Poet, and throughout has strongly portrayed the opposite effects of grandeur and beauty.
> The Overture and Choruses, particularly 'Heaven rung with jubilee,' are original and impressive. Mr. Braham was truly great in the air of The Intercession. Miss Stephens completely enraptured the audience in the beautiful air of Eve's Lamentation; and the whole Piece was hailed with the most universal and deserved applause.

This work contained the air known as 'Eve's Lamentation' ('Must I leave thee, Paradise?'), a song which had an extraordinary run of popularity. It may suffice merely to mention the oratorios on Milton's poem composed by John Christopher Smith and John Lodge Ellerton. The 'Paradise Lost' music of Dr. Wylde — performed by the New Philharmonic Society on May 11, 1853—must not, however, be passed over so slightly, by reason of the comment of Punch on the performance, which reads:

> MARRIAGE IN VERY HIGH LIFE.
> Married, at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, the 11th instant, by Dr. Wylde, Music to Immortal Verse; the latter having been selected from Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' and the former composed by Dr. Wylde himself. The marriage ceremony attracted a large concourse of persons, to whom its performance appeared to afford high gratification. We have much pleasure in stating that the match is considered a very satisfactory one by the friends of both parties, notwithstanding the exalted position of one of them in the poetical world. The other, however, it should be remarked, is of genuine English parentage; a fact which refutes the fashionable supposition that the higher class of music is necessarily of Italian or German origin.

This reads as if it had been written by 'J. W. D.' To the above works must be added a setting of the poem by Rubinstein, which he called 'a sacred opera.' Although an early work of Rubinstein's, it did not receive its first performance in England till June 9, 1882, when it formed the programme of the Philharmonic Society's concert on that date. In 1878 the distinguished French composer, M. Théodore Dubois, obtained the Concours Musical prize, instituted by the city of Paris, by his oratorio 'Paradis perdu,' first performed in the French capital and at public expense on November 27, 1878. So far as we know, this work has not been performed in England. While the foregoing list makes no attempt at being complete, it serves to show that composers of different calibre have not hesitated to set to music Milton's 'immortal verse,' even though they have failed to immortalize themselves in the process.

Bath, like its neighbouring city Bristol, has its male-voice choir. To carry the analogy further, it is in a flourishing condition, thanks in no small degree to the efficient manner in which the Bath Orpheus Glee Society is conducted by Mr. H. J. Davis, who is a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music and organist of Christ Church. The active membership of the Society is just over two full scores—to be quite accurate, forty-one. At their annual concert, held at the Assembly Rooms on February 11, these well-attuned gleemen of Bath gave abundant evidence of their vocal powers and artistic restraint. Like other glee societies, it is the custom of the Bath singers to begin their programme (after the National Anthem) with the same piece year after year. Admitting the acceptance of this custom, no better choice could be made than that of Cooke's 'Strike the lyre,' that fine old glee so well-beloved of singers and so delightful to listen to. Versatility made itself manifest in the programme—to wit, Schumann's 'Battle song,' Dudley Buck's 'Hark! the trumpet calleth,' and Elgar's 'Yea, cast me from heights,' 'After many a dusty mile,' 'It's oh! to be a wild wind'—while humour found 'full fling' in 'The three chafers' and 'The owl and the pussy cat.' All the various moods suggested by the above compositions were very happily caught by the singers and their conductor, and the result was a very pleasant and enjoyable music-making in the famous old city of Bath.

The Hallé Choir, previous to the performance of 'Elijah' at Manchester on January 24, presented Mr. Santley with a large and handsome silver cigar case, to mark their appreciation of the veteran artist's distinguished service to music during a period of half a century. Mr. R. H. Wilson, the chorus-master, said it was Mr. Santley who sang the Prophet music on the occasion of the first performance of the oratorio at the Hallé concerts—in 1860. 'It is your hope and my hope,' said Mr. Wilson, addressing the choir, 'that Mr. Santley may long be spared to show to the world how the greatest dramatic character in sacred music should be faithfully and reverently portrayed.' The presentation was made by Mr. G. H. Kenyon, Chairman of the Choir Committee. In warmly acknowledging the gift, Mr. Santley said: 'I should like to correct both the gentlemen who have spoken, in one particular. I have been before the public longer than fifty years. I came to Manchester for the first time in 1854, to sing at St. John's Church, Salford, now the Roman Catholic Cathedral, when a Mass was performed, so that I am three years ahead of you. I have done my best.' With this modest reference to a distinguished, as well as a long career, the veteran vocalist brought his remarks to a close and was cheered to the echo.

Scotland is so rapidly becoming a musical nation —as our Edinburgh and Glasgow correspondents monthly testify—that the words which, nearly forty years ago, Punch put into the mouth of a canny Scot, seem likely to become more or less true. Here they are:

> A' music whatever is o' Scottish origin an' derivation. It a' cam Sooth frae ayont the Tweed. A' music just resolves itsel' intil' a meexture o' Tweed-ledum an' Tweedle-Dee — the Scottish Dee. The oreeginal St. Cecilia was a Miss MacWhirter. She invented the Bagpipes.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians should invite Miss MacWhirter to their next music-making on St. Cecilia's Day.

Mr. Percy Pitt is to be heartily congratulated upon his appointment of Musical Director to the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, in succession to M. André Messager. Born in London, January 4, 1870, Mr. Pitt studied music at Paris, Leipzig—where Jadassohn and Reinecke were his masters—and Munich, where he studied under Rheinberger. He first came before the English public as organist and accompanist at Queen's Hall in 1895. His connection with the Royal Opera began in 1903, when he was appointed Maëstro al piano. He subsequently became musical adviser to the Syndicate, stage conductor, and, in 1906, assistant conductor both for the summer and autumn seasons. Not the least important of his duties in connection with Covent Garden have been his journeys to the Continent to hear and engage singers for the Royal Opera.

MR. PERCY PITT.

(Photograph by Lizzie Caswall Smith.)

Mr. Percy Pitt's compositions include an Orchestral suite in four movements (1895); a suite 'Fêtes Galantes' (1896); a Coronation March (1897); a Clarinet concertino, Overture 'Taming of the Shrew,' and a choral ballad 'Hohenlinden' for male voices and orchestra (1898); a Ballade for violin and orchestra, a Symphonic poem 'Le Sang des Crépuscules' and 'Cinderella,' a musical fairy tale (1899); Suite de ballet 'Dance Rhythms,' and the incidental music to Mr. Stephen Phillips's play 'Paolo and Francesca' (1901); incidental music to 'Richard the Second' and 'Flodden Field,' for Mr. Tree's performances at His Majesty's Theatre (1903); two series of vocal poems with orchestral accompaniment, one for baritone (Philharmonic Society, 1903), the other for a mezzo-soprano voice (Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts, 1904), and the Sinfonietta composed for the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1906. This does not, however, exhaust the catalogue of the new director's creative output, as there must also be placed to the credit of his account a ballet, two cantatas, part-songs, chamber music, pianoforte pieces, studies, and songs. In addition to his high musical qualifications Mr. Pitt is an excellent linguist, therefore he is doubly equipped for a post in which he has many well wishers for complete success in the discharge of his onerous and important duties. It is most satisfactory that an Englishman has been selected for this responsible office, and with so able a colleague as Mr. Neil Forsyth—who is also to be congratulated upon being appointed General Manager to the Syndicate—great things may be expected of the régime of Mr. Percy Pitt.

Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom' is attaining popularity even more rapidly than the composer's previous works. Of six performances announced for March, two will take place on the same day (the 14th) at London and Leeds, and, curiously enough, three more on the same day a week later (the 21st), at Birmingham, Leicester and Sheffield, the sixth performance taking place at New York on March 26. April will bring with it two performances—Liverpool and Birmingham—on the 9th and 18th respectively, while Cambridge (in June), Cardiff (in September), Leeds (at the Triennial Musical Festival in October), Huddersfield (also in October), Berlin and Amsterdam, will have opportunities of hearing the work during the year.

The competition festival movement continues to extend. The second annual report of the Association of Musical Competition Festivals, which has just been issued, gives a list of fifty-seven places in England alone where competitions have been held. But there are numerous other events of the kind that are not registered on this list. Among the new centres starting this year are Belfast, Paisley, Ilkley, Doncaster, Buxton, Herts and North Middlesex. The sad deaths of Lady Althorp and Mrs. Stephen Massingberd deprived the Association of two staunch and influential supporters. A résumé of the papers read at the July conference is given in the report. The Association makes no claim to interfere with the freedom of the local managers of festivals. It is simply an organization to discuss ways and means and to unify the aims of the movement. The President is Her Grace the Duchess of Norfolk, Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis is the Chairman of the Executive Committee (of which Miss Mary Egerton and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland are members), Mr. W. H. Leslie is the Treasurer—a not very burdensome office withal, as the subscription is only one shilling per annum!—and Miss Wakefield and Dr. McNaught are the Secretaries.

The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society has received a legacy of £1,000 bequeathed by its lamented President, Dr. C. J. Oldham, an enthusiastic amateur who was seldom absent from his place among the violinists of the orchestra, and who had a wonderful collection of fine 'Strad' violins. Mr. Robert Taylor, conductor of the Society, and all who work with him are to be warmly congratulated on this munificent windfall. The Society, now in its eightieth season, gave an effective performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on February 14, under Mr. Taylor's inspiring direction, the concert having been opened with the 'Dead march in Saul' as a tribute of respect to the late President and benefactor of the Society.

A local paper in reporting a funeral service says: 'As the cortege left the church en route for the cemetery, the organist played Schumann's Quintett "O rest in the Lord."' Here we have the quintessence of a 'mix up.'

Church and Organ Music.

MR. WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME.

THE COMMANDERY, FORMERLY THE COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND SONS OF GENTLEMEN, WORCESTER.
(Photograph by Messrs. Littlebury & Co., Worcester.)

No less remarkable than interesting is the fact that two of our most gifted composers of organ music are sightless. If the deprivation of sight has stimulated their creative faculties, then their loss is our gain, for which we have every reason to be thankful. The melodious and well-knit compositions of Alfred Hollins and William Wolstenholme not only brighten many a recital programme, but are greatly appreciated by those who play them and those who listen to them. A biographical sketch of Mr. Hollins—'Alfred the great,' as Mr. W. T. Best used to call him—has already appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES, and now the life-story of his friend and brother musician is about to be told.

William Wolstenholme was born at Blackburn, Lancashire, on February 24, 1865. His father, Mr. James Wolstenholme, was an architect and surveyor in the town, while his grandfather, after whom he is named, was an intimate friend of Henry Smart during the latter's organistship of Blackburn Parish Church seventy years ago. Both the parents of William Wolstenholme were enthusiastic singers, and his father voluntarily taught singing to many young people of Blackburn. From his earliest childhood Willie had an acute sense of absolute pitch, and was gifted with a wonderful memory, and, as he was sightless from his birth, he lived almost entirely in a world of sound. When about six years old one of the little fellow's amusements was to drag a small portable harmonium close to the pianoforte; the two instruments were half a tone different in pitch, but Master Willie would play a melody, say, in the key of C on the harmonium and accompany it in the key of D flat on the pianoforte. It was about this time that he learned to read from the old-fashioned raised Roman type. One Easter Sunday morning a friend gave him a copy of St. John's Gospel in this form of type, the reading of which was a source of intense interest and absorbing delight to him, so much so that before Whitsuntide he had committed the whole volume to memory; and, given chapter and number of verse, he could, without the least hesitation, repeat any verse that was asked for.

With the hope that he might enter the Church, his parents sent him, aged eight, to the 'College for the Blind Sons of Gentlemen' at Worcester, where for many years he found in the head-master, the Rev. S. S. Forster, a most kind friend and counsellor. At that time the College occupied the ancient building known as the 'Commandery,' built by the chivalrous old Knights Hospitallers in the days of the Crusaders (see the view above). Classics (especially) and the ordinary public school subjects formed the curriculum at the College, in which the Braille system greatly aided the boys in acquiring knowledge. Drill and music were 'extras.' From the late Dr. Done, organist of Worcester Cathedral, he received lessons in pianoforte and organ. One of his fellow pupils with Dr. Done was Dr. Hugh Blair, whose father, the Rev. R. H. Blair, was the first head-master of the College for the Blind, and afterwards rector of St. Martin's, Worcester. Wolstenholme soon became recognized as school-organist, and in that capacity officiated at a small chamber organ at morning 'Prayers,' and as a solo organist when opportunity offered.

Wolstenholme also learned the violin at Worcester, his teacher being one Edward Elgar, who has since been heard of in another capacity. A warm friendship sprang up between master and pupil, and when the latter decided to work for the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford, Elgar proved a most valuable and patient amanuensis. He wrote down from dictation the exercise necessary to obtain the degree, and Mr. Wolstenholme greatly cherishes the rough sketches, reminiscent of 'tobacco reek,' which the Worcester violin teacher made. Nor was this all. When the would-be graduate went up to Oxford for the examination, Elgar voluntarily went with him as his amanuensis, and it may be assumed that he was as pleased as the candidate himself when Wolstenholme—the first blind person to take the Oxford degree—passed. The subject of this sketch retains most pleasant memories of those Saturday afternoons at Worcester. Sometimes Elgar would say: 'Willie, I have a tune to play to you.' Then some fresh idea of his own, or something new from the outside music world, would be played for the benefit of his young friend, while 'tobacco reek,' as he called it, from the kind friend's pipe, filled the room, and the 'tune' spread itself over a happy hour or two! The degree exercise was a setting of Campbell's 'Lord Ullin's daughter,' and as the candidates were required to show an intimate knowledge of Beethoven's 'Fidelio,' Wolstenholme transcribed the full-score almost entirely into 'Braille' and then committed the opera to memory!

After taking his degree (in 1887) the subject of this sketch returned to his native town and became organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Church, Blackburn, a post he held with distinction for thirteen years. Teaching, the giving of organ recitals, and composition helped to fill up his time. So popular did he become at Blackburn that, towards the end of 1897, a Wolstenholme Society was formed for the purpose of giving chamber concerts. 'The members of this little Society,' he says, 'were among the first friends to encourage and help me in a really practical way.'

In February, 1902, Mr. Wolstenholme settled in London, when he accepted the invitation to become organist of the King's Weigh House Church, Grosvenor Square. Two years later—in May, 1904—he became organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Church, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, an appointment—formerly held by Dr. E. C. Bairstow, now organist of Leeds Parish Church—which he now worthily holds. In his vicar, the Rev. William Boyd, himself a musician, and composer of the well-known tune to 'Fight the good fight,' the organist has found an appreciative and sympathetic friend and helper. Mr. Boyd has kindly furnished the following 'appreciation' of his gifted organist:

> I have been singularly fortunate in my musical coadjutors. When I first came to London, in 1893, I was faced with the resignation of the then organist at All Saints', Norfolk Square. In twenty-four hours, by the help of my old friend Sir Frederick Bridge, I was put into communication with a growing lad—Edward Bairstow by name—with whom I soon became fast friends. I found him to be a musician of the very first quality. He remained with me four years, until, indeed, he left for Wigan. He is now Dr. Bairstow, organist of Leeds Parish Church, and one likely to make a mark in the annals of church music. Then came Mr. Hamilton Harty, from Ireland. But, as we both of us soon discovered that his métier lay in a direction other than that of organ playing, he left to ascend the ladder of accompanists, and I am told he has no superior in London. And now Mr. William Wolstenholme assumes, and has assumed for some three years, the responsibilities of organist at All Saints'. He is a friend of Dr. Bairstow's, and would in all probability have succeeded him if I had been quite sure that he knew his 'Psalms' as well as I do. I am now well aware that he knows them better than I do, and the charm and the finish, and the delicacy of his work, leave nothing to desire.
> To listen to William Wolstenholme every week as I do is to listen to a fresh spring charged with the sparkle and the gaiety of clear rushing water. He never tires or wearies one—there is always the unexpected, the possibility, the potentiality, and just when you think he may be getting a little volatile there comes a phrase, a chord, a suggestion of an old-time memory which carries you back to Gregorian times, and induces a picture of tonsured monks with their violoncellos rolling out the music which befits the great 'Amen.' The exordium—the preface—to the anthem is a work usually of extreme beauty and originality. Last Sunday for instance we were singing the 'Ave Verum' of Mozart. Wolstenholme's introduction might have been an excerpt from an unknown, an unfinished sonata. There were the tunes, the simple melody, their orchestration, the benignant and spontaneous flow. It was pure Mozart throughout, and as one listened the atmosphere cleared, man became attuned to the spiritual throb that inspired the music. Religion is 'touched with emotion,' as Matthew Arnold says, and I can only suppose that, as it is so with me, so it is with others who listen. The man who makes such music is a spiritual force. We feel it instinctively—intuitively.

> And what shall I say of Wolstenholme as a friend and a comrade? Kindly, pleasant, genial, he has the best of tempers, and is as modest as he might be arrogant.

Ever since he has been with me our relations have been cordial and affectionate, and I do not know a more beautiful sight than to behold the care which the choirmen, one and all, take of their Maestro. They look upon him and handle him as a piece of precious blue china, while he responds to their gentleness with unfailing good humour and good breeding. In company he is the life and soul of the meeting. But I am bound to say that his jokes are sometimes 'hideous exceedingly,' while his love of tea is immoderate. He clasps his big cup, which he always insists on having, with two hands as the precious thing of life. Perhaps, however, this clasp is only to hand-warm and to preface an exhibition of extempore playing which is unique and wonderful. Of this prime fact—most difficult of all—he is a master sui generis. I never heard Liszt extemporise. I wish I had. I have heard Saint-Saëns and Widor, and Léfébure-Wély and Gounod. Gounod was, in his day, wonderful. It seems, somehow, to be always Wolstenholme's day, and we of All Saints' appreciate him and it to the full. He possesses, indeed, a gracious mind.

At All Saints' the Paragraph Psalter is used, and Mr. Wolstenholme has a Braille copy in order to assist him when rehearsing the Psalms. He writes out all the voice-parts of the music that is used at the services, whereby he is able to make any needful correction at rehearsal, but the organ accompaniments he memorises. The hymn-tunes are never played over: a prelude, foreshadowing the opening phrase of the tune, is given, and then choir and congregation 'go right away.' The Sunday services at All Saints' are fully choral, services like Barnby in E, and anthems such as 'Blessed be the God and Father' being sung.

Like Mr. Hollins, Mr. Wolstenholme is an excellent pianist. In December, 1885, he played, with much success, Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte concerto for the Worcester Philharmonic Society. In a notice of this performance a local newspaper said:

> In the second part of the programme Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor was played by Mr. W. Wolstenholme (a blind young gentleman). The manner in which he maintained his time in relation to the orchestra, the confidence and certainty of his touch in the most involved passages, and the animation with which he reproduced the music, were worthy of a gifted sighted pianist, and more than merited the burst of applause which greeted Mr. Wolstenholme as he concluded his performance.

He has also on several occasions shown himself to be a skilful performer on the harpsichord, his last performance being at a concert of old music given by the Chaplin Trio, when Bach's Concerto in C minor for two harpsichords and strings was performed.

As a composer Mr. Wolstenholme is widely known, especially through his organ music. He was started on his composing career, as a boy of fifteen, by Dr. C. H. Lloyd. In 1880 that genial musician, then organist of Gloucester Cathedral, came to Worcester in order to examine the boys of the Blind School in music. 'On that occasion,' says Mr. Wolstenholme, 'Dr. Lloyd encouraged me to extemporize, in three parts, in the key of E flat. I did my best and that was my starting-point as an improviser and composer.' As a matter of fact he extemporizes many of his organ compositions before writing them in Braille notation and dictating them to his sister. His well-known pair of pieces 'The question' and 'The answer,' are the outcome of two improvisations made in about the year 1893. In regard to the German titles of these twin pieces their composer tells us: 'Messrs. Cocks & Co., the original publishers, did not like the English titles, so I just Germanized them—Die Frage, Die Antwort, and the publishers were satisfied; but they are always known as "Question" and "Answer."'

The long list of Mr. Wolstenholme's compositions testifies to his versatility and creative industry. The published works include about fifty organ pieces, some twenty pianoforte solos, several pieces for violin, viola or violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment; a Sonata in G for violin and pianoforte, a string Quartet in C, and an Intermezzo ('Phantasy') for orchestra. Five anthems, some songs, part-songs, &c., help to swell the list of printed works. But this is not all His most important unpublished compositions are:

Pianoforte quintet in D.
Pianoforte trio in C.
String quartet in B flat.
Wind instrument quintet in F (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon).
Overture in B flat, for organ and orchestra.
Legende, for solo viola and orchestra.
Suite in F, for stringed orchestra.
Pianoforte sonata in E flat minor.
Duetto for two pianofortes.
Morning service (Te Deum and Jubilate) in A flat.

In the course of conversation Mr. Wolstenholme refers in generous terms to Mr. Alfred Hollins—'one of the first to play my pieces,' he says. Therefore it is not unfitting that this brief sketch of a highly gifted composer, and one of the most modest of men, should conclude with a few words from Mr. Hollins, which, at our request, he has specially written. Mr. Hollins says: 'I have always greatly admired Wolstenholme's compositions, and, as he said to you, I was among the very first to play them. He has a wonderful power of grasping the genesis of any composition he wishes to write, and he can imitate any style to perfection, and at the same time be quite original. I always think he has an excellent idea of part-writing and lays out his chords in a very clear and finished manner. When you get to know him he is a most cheery soul, and has a keen sense of humour, though he appears a quiet fellow to those who first make his acquaintance. I always enjoy hearing him play his compositions, and he and I have had great music-makings together.' Need anything more be said? Yes, and that is to make honourable mention of Miss Maude Wolstenholme, her brother's amanuensis, correspondent, guide, and counsellor.

Dr. H. E. Ford, the doyen of English cathedral organists, recently celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of his appointment to Carlisle Cathedral, having played his first service there so long ago as February 12, 1842! He retired from the active duties of his office at the end of 1902, after having held the post for the long period of sixty-one years. Dr. Ford, who officially still retains the organistship of Carlisle Cathedral, is wonderfully active, and possesses a vitality which many a man several years his junior might envy. Long may he enjoy the vigour of perpetual youth!

The fourth annual dinner of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association was held at Huddersfield on January 26, with the success which has hitherto attended this fraternal foregathering of organists. The president, Mr. J. W. Armitage, occupied the chair, and the guest of the evening was Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, who gave an interesting address, in which he said, and with perfect truth, that 'the musician—which of course includes the organist—must be in some sense a poet, otherwise he becomes a poor machine.' Although this Association has only been in existence four years, it already boasts of a membership of 108 organists, and it has been the means of accomplishing much from a social as well as from a musical point of view. May it continue to flourish like the sister society at Wakefield, and have many imitators in various parts of the country. The honorary secretary is Mr. George F. Garner, Lion Arcade, Huddersfield.

The two-manual organ in St. George's United Free Church, Edinburgh, was re-opened, after various alterations and improvements, on February 14, by Mr. Alfred Hollins, organist and choirmaster of the church. According to the programme the changes that have been made in the instrument are as follows:

> The most important of the alterations is the substitution of electro-pneumatic action for tubular pneumatic. This has been done in order to render the response instantaneous, and the result is a perfect success. With the former mechanism there was an appreciable delay between the pressure of the key and the answer of the pipes, most disconcerting to the player. Instead of the tubes connecting the console with the organ, there is now a flexible cable, along which, when a note is pressed, an electric message, as it were, is immediately flashed to a magnet which controls a tiny valve smaller than a threepenny-piece, and this in its turn operates the pneumatic machinery. Over 100 feet of this cable connect the pipes of the Great organ with the console. A reed stop, of seventy pipes, has been added, which is made to do duty as a trombone on the Pedal organ and as a tuba on the manuals. A clarion (four feet) has been substituted for the trumpet (eight feet) on the Great. The Open Diapason No. 1 on the Great, and the Great Bass on the Pedal, have been transposed up two notes in order to obtain a fuller and rounder tone. Two extra shutters have been added to the swell-box, and the wind pressures have been increased—main bellows from five to seven inches; pipe-work from three and a half to four inches; wind pressure of Trombone and Tuba, seven inches. All the above work has been carried out by Messrs. Norman & Beard, Ltd., and their system of electro-pneumatic action has been employed for the manuals and pedals, while the original tubular pneumatic draw-stop action remains.

At the re-opening recital Mr. Hollins played the following programme:

Overture in C (Op. 24)	Mendelssohn.
Andante in D	Hollins.
Scherzo	Hoyte.
Prelude and Fugue in D	Bach.
Improvisation
Prière et berceuse	Guilmant.
Marche militaire	Gounod.
Concert Rondo	Hollins.

The Rev. M. O. Hodson, Precentor of Leeds Parish Church, gave an interesting lecture on January 31 at Leeds Church Institute, in aid of the Selby Abbey restoration fund, the subject of his discourse being 'Church music and how to listen to it.' In the course of his remarks the lecturer asked the question, 'Why do we have music in church?' To which he replied: 'Because man wished to worship with his whole nature, and the æsthetic faculty, which is part of his nature, finds expression in music.' Musical illustrations were efficiently sung by the Leeds Parish Church Choir, under the direction of Dr. Edward C. Bairstow, organist of the church.

The Sunday afternoon oratorio services at Brixton Parish Church continue to run their successful course. On February 3 Elgar's 'Light of Life' (Lux Christi) was sung by the oratorio choir, accompanied by a professional orchestra of forty performers, under the direction of Mr. Douglas Redman, organist and choirmaster. An immense congregation thronged the church to listen to a work that is admirably suited for an oratorio service.

A performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given on February 11 at St. Margaret's Parish Church, King's Lynn, when the work was sung by Mr. Arthur Shirley's Festival Chorus of 200 voices, with contingents of singers from other places in the neighbourhood, accompanied by an orchestra and the organ. Mr. Arthur Shirley, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

A correspondent writes: 'There is a choral celebration of the Holy Communion at Chichester Cathedral on every Sunday throughout the year, excepting two Sundays in August, when the choir are away for their annual holiday. I thought your correspondent "Alpha" would be glad to know this.'

A LENTEN BOOK OF VOLUNTARIES.

Under the editorship of Mr. John E. West the recent issue of 'The Village Organist' (Book 44) consists of 'Music for Lent and Holy Week.' The chief contribution to the book is a series of 'Variations on the tune Heinlein' (associated with the hymn 'Forty days and forty nights'), effectively written by Mr. H. M. Higgs, who has skilfully avoided difficulties. The authorship of this beautiful minor tune is not definitely known, but it was most probably composed by Martin Herbst, a 17th century German divine. The remainder of the pieces are arrangements—Chopin's beautiful Prelude in C minor, Mendelssohn's 'If with all your hearts,' 'Behold the Lamb of God' and 'He was despised' ('Messiah'), concluding with 'Procession to Calvary' from Stainer's 'Crucifixion.' It is proposed to issue a similar Book of Voluntaries suitable for Easter.

The following pieces were played at the organ recital given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music in the concert-room of the Institution on February 11:

Last two movements from Sonata in D minor	Bach.
Slow movement from Concerto—Violin and Organ	Mackenzie.
Allegretto, Presto comodo, from Sonata in G	Elgar.
Scherzo, Finale, from Sonata, No. 5	Guilmant.
Fantasia in F	John E. West.
Introduction and Fugue on a Choral	Liszt.

The Church Music Society has issued its 'First list of services', under the headings (a) Easy, (b) Moderately difficult, (c) Difficult, and Communion Services. No living composer's name appears in the list, the only modern composers being Garrett, Goss, E. J. Hopkins, Smart, Stainer, Turle, T. A. Walmisley and S. S. Wesley.

Reviews.

PART-SONGS.

Song of the pedlar. Words from Shakespeare's 'Winter's Tale.' Music by C. Lee-Williams.

My sweet sweeting. Words anonymous. Music by Harold Fraser Simson.

The marriage of the frog and the mouse. Words from Thomas Ravenscroft's 'Melismata.' Music by A. Herbert Brewer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Shakespeare's 'Song of Autolycus' has had many settings, some of them memorable; but it is not too much to say that Mr. Lee-Williams's music compares favourably with the best. The figure sung to 'Fa, la, la' by the basses alone, at the opening of the piece, at once most happily suggests the debonair spirit of Shakespeare's incorrigible rogue; its recurrence is admirably planned, and the entire composition is permeated by genial humour.

'My sweet sweeting' might be described as an illustration of the line 'Love is meant to make us glad,' for Mr. Simson's music trips along with a confident contentment that is infectious. The part-song will not be found difficult, but it demands crisp and dainty singing.

As the title indicates, 'The marriage of the frog and the mouse' is broadly comic. If it had been taken as a subject by an advanced French impressionist it would doubtless have been made symbolical, but Dr. Herbert Brewer has been content to express the emotions rising from the series of incidents that cause such a tragic termination to the zoological supper party, and he has written a logical part-song that, if sung with serious humour, will be sure of a hearty reception.

Hector Berlioz: Les Années Romantiques (1819—1842). Correspondance publiée par J. Tiersot.

[Paris: Calman-Lévy.]

In one of his letters the French composer, speaking of his 'Mémoires,' says: 'In them you will find me such as I was, such as I am,' and he spoke the truth. Yet, as M. Tiersot truly remarks, that though the letters may be less brilliant than the 'Mémoires,' they reveal in fuller measure the thoughts and feelings of the man. The correspondence now published for the first time has been gathered together from various sources; for the greater part M. Tiersot is indebted to Madame Chapot, Berlioz's niece.

The father of Berlioz kept a Livre de Raison in which he noted down day by day moneys received and paid away, and memoranda of various kinds, among which was a family pedigree, and certain comments respecting some of the persons named therein. In this interesting document the family is traced back to Claude Berlioz, a merchant tanner at La Côte, who died in 1667, and who in his will expressed the wish to be buried in the tomb of his ancestors. Mention is made of a Berlioz at Vienne in the 14th century, but owing to the imperfect state of the municipal registers, Berlioz's father could not trace the family directly from him.

When Wagner was only seventeen years old he wrote to Schotts Söhne offering an arrangment for pianoforte solo of Beethoven's ninth Symphony. Berlioz commenced his artistic career in similar manner: he sent a letter to the publishers Janet and Cotelle—he being then little over sixteen years of age—and what he offered was an original composition, a potpourri for flute, horn and strings. Both offers, it may be added, were refused.

In a letter to his sister Nanci (December 13, 1821), Berlioz, in describing Gluck's 'Iphigénie en Tauride,' remarks that in 'Le calme rentre dans mon cœur,' sung by Orestes, 'the sustained pianissimo note of the violin expresses tranquillity, but below it the basses murmur, the remorse, as it were, which in spite of his apparent calm, the parricide feels at the bottom of his heart.' More than twenty years later the composer, in his 'Traité d'Instrumentation,' refers in similar terms to this very air. If the two passages be compared there will be found a slip of the pen in the former, due evidently to hasty writing. In another letter to the same sister (December 12, 1825), Berlioz tells how he finds out whether anything he composes is good. On finishing it he puts it by for a time until the excitement which the act of composing produces has passed away, 'and when I am quite calm, I read my work as if it were not mine; then, if it extort admiration, I am convinced that all who have feeling and intelligence enabling them to listen aright, ought to be similarly affected.'

There we have a bit of the real Berlioz: like Beethoven, like Wagner, he had confidence in himself. And there was a musician, who even before Berlioz had won the Prix de Rome, believed in him. This was his teacher and friend Lesueur. To a letter addressed by Berlioz to Count Martignac, the Home Secretary (August 20, 1828), pleading for help ('un encouragement annuel') to enable him to continue his studies, Lesueur added a postscript in which he answers for it that the young man 'will become a great composer, an honour to France; and I venture to predict that, ere ten years have passed, he may become even a véritable chef d'école.'

His prophecy came true to the letter; not only did Berlioz become a great composer within the period specified, but he was the founder of the school of which Liszt afterwards became a notable representative.

ANTHEMS.

Angel spirits ever blessed. By P. Tchaikovsky.

The Lord is my Strength and my Shield. By Josiah Booth.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The first of the above group of anthems is intended for Trinitytide or general use, the words being adapted from 'The Cherubic hymn' by Mr. W. G. Rothery. The design is in verse form; the harmonic scheme is diatonic, and is written in six to eight parts, the sopranos and altos being divided throughout and the tenors and basses occasionally. The music, which should be sung unaccompanied, will present no difficulties to a competent choir; of its impressiveness there can be no doubt.

Mr. Booth, who has chosen his text from the Bible version of the psalms, has made a judicious selection of words that furnish subject-matter for effective contrasts. The music is chiefly in solid harmony, diatonic and massive in character and admirably expressing the confident spirit of the words. The anthem includes a setting of three verses from the 23rd Psalm, which could be sung as a quartet unaccompanied.

Moods. Seven pieces for the pianoforte. By Ricardo Mähllig.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

That the charm of variety characterizes these compositions is evidenced by their titles—Tranquil, Heroic, Pensive, Joyful, Loving, Melancholy and Inspired. And the strains themselves are not without a certain charm, for the composer has true musical feeling and an imaginative faculty which are blended together in these little pieces. Another point in their favour is that they make no serious demands on the technique of the performer; they are true to themselves and are free from that veneer which is too often the 'make believe' for the real thing.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—I have read with great interest the article on Samuel Wesley which appeared in the February issue of The Musical Times. I find that the poetry therein given appeared for the first time in Dr. Adam Clarke's memoirs of the Wesley family. In the sixth verse Dr. Clarke gives the name 'Stokes' as 'Holks,' and the first two lines of the last verse are :

Still will I fret, and fume, and rage
And keener wax, and keener.

As to the poetical remonstrance to the Bristol Corporation by the eight-year-old Samuel Wesley, Dr. Adam Clarke says : 'To shew that he possessed a poetic genius at a very early period, I shall present the reader with a copy of verses, which have never appeared in print, occasioned by his brother, Charles Wesley, being chosen to play a solo on a violin, before the Corporation of Bristol, and some business calling him from Bristol about the same time, Samuel Wesley was chosen in his room ; but, in the meantime, Charles Wesley returned, and Samuel was set aside.'

As to the possibility of Charles being advertised in mistake for Samuel, I see the date of the oratorio performance was March, 1774. As Dr. Clarke gives 1775 as the date of the verses, is it not possible that they did not refer to the oratorio performance of 1774?

It will be noticed Dr. Clarke states that Charles was to play a violin. Perhaps you could throw some light on these few discrepancies.—Yours &c.,

Wm. Longley Holgate.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret :

On January 30, at Stoke Newington, William Davies, aged forty-seven. As a boy, passionately fond of music, he worked for seven years in a Welsh colliery ; and when he came to man's estate he held successively the following appointments as a tenor singer : Bangor Cathedral, Magdalen College, Oxford, and St. Paul's Cathedral. At the time of his death, Mr. Davies was a professor of singing at the Guildhall School of Music.

On February 3, at his residence, 19, Hyde Park Terrace, after a short illness, Thomas Threlfall, M.A., aged sixty-four. A cultured lover of music, Mr. Threlfall was well known and held in the highest esteem as the chairman of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music, a post he efficiently held for nearly twenty years, his membership of the Committee having begun in 1886. He was also chairman of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. As one who never failed to further the interests of musicians and to promote the study of music, Mr. Threlfall will be greatly missed, especially by Sir Alexander Mackenzie and his colleagues at the Royal Academy of Music.

On February 14, at Osborne House, St. Mary's Terrace, Paddington, Vernon Blackburn, aged forty, for the past fourteen years musical critic to The Pall Mall Gazette. As a clever writer on music and musicians, Mr. Blackburn had a high reputation. Like himself, his style was imaginative and literary to a degree ; moreover, he was an enthusiast, especially when he spoke of or wrote about those composers—Mozart and Elgar in particular—whose works specially appealed to him. Mr. Blackburn contributed the volume on Mendelssohn to Messrs. Bell's series of musical monographs, and at one time he was engaged upon an exhaustive biography of Sir Arthur Sullivan, of whom he was a warm admirer.

THE CONCERTS OF ANTIENT MUSIC.

A paper was read at the Musical Association on February 19, by Mr. James E. Matthew, on the 'Concerts of Antient Music.' The lecturer pointed out that although domestic music flourished during the Madrigalian period, public concerts had no existence. It was not till after the Restoration that their introduction was attempted. They were chiefly held in taverns to an accompaniment of ale and tobacco. In the Hon. Roger North's 'Memoirs of Musick' was to be found an account of these early efforts, the most serious of which was the Academy of Antient Music, founded in 1710, a Society composed partly of amateur and partly professional musicians. In spite of internal jealousies, this Society existed till 1789. It must not be confounded with the more important institution, the Concert of Antient Music, founded by a body of noblemen and gentlemen in 1776, which formed the subject of Mr. Matthew's discourse. Its object was to give the best music in the best possible manner. The executants were all professional, and the difficulty of getting together an adequate chorus in London was overcome by bringing up a number of lady singers from Lancashire, who were boarded in London for the whole series of twelve concerts. The Society was strictly aristocratic ; no one could join unless properly introduced by a member, and the undertaking was carried on at a great expense, the average cost of a concert amounting to £370, although the terms of principal artists were on a much lower scale than at the present day. Throughout, the expenditure was magnificent : for instance, one of the ladies from Lancashire, Miss Deborah Travis, showing much promise, was virtually adopted by the Society and educated both musically and generally.

The earliest meetings were held at the Tottenham Rooms, on the site of the Scala Theatre. A move was then made to the Haymarket Theatre, and in 1804 to the Hanover Square Rooms, of which the Society became the lessees. All the best singers, both native and foreign, were engaged. A certain number of gentlemen were the directors, each of whom in turn took charge of an evening, selecting the programme, which was largely composed of the works of Handel, a rule existing that no work composed within twenty years should be admitted. Another duty on his evening was to entertain his fellow-directors and the conductor at dinner.

The subscription for the twelve concerts was eight guineas, and the tickets were strictly untransferable ; it was only when the fortunes of the Society began to decline that this absurd rule was so far modified as to allow the transfer between mother and daughter, or between sisters, and the same between fathers, sons and brothers. With these old-world restrictions, and the great change in social habits, it is not wonderful that the fortunes of the Society drooped. The number of concerts and the amount of subscriptions were reduced, members were even allowed to buy single tickets at a guinea, but it was too late to avert misfortune and the Society expired in 1848.

Mr. Matthew, who had been fortunate enough to get together a large number of interesting documents bearing on the history of the Society, was able to give many details of its proceedings, which belonged to an age differing greatly from our own. He concluded by saying that, although the Antient Concerts had outlived their time, they were deserving of our grateful recollection for much good work carried on.

The chair was taken by Dr. Cummings, who was able to add several interesting details from his own collection.

GERMAN OPERA SEASON.

The season of German Opera at Covent Garden, originally announced to continue for four weeks, proved so successful that an extension of a fortnight to February 23 was announced, but owing to the illness of Mr. Van Dyck the doors were abruptly closed on February 16.

The promised revival of Beethoven's 'Fidelio' took place on January 31, when Madame Leffler Burckhardt, famed on the Continent for her embodiment of the devoted and heroic wife, was specially engaged and proved a very capable exponent, albeit somewhat lacking in subtlety. Madame Minnie Nast sang daintily as the coquettish Marcelline, but did not seem quite at home in the part. Mr. Allen C. Hinckley appeared as the soft-hearted jailor, Mr. Hans Bussard as the impressionable Florestan, Mr. Theodor Bertram as the bold, bad Pizarro, and Dr. Felix von Kraus as the timely arriving Don Fernando. Mr. Eugene Ysaye conducted.

Another interesting revival was that of Otto Nicolai's 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' (originally produced at Berlin on March 9, 1849), on February 16, the last night of the season. The opera was mounted for the first time in England at the old 'His Majesty's Theatre' on May 4 (not May 3, as generally stated), 1864, when the jealous husband Ford and his mischievous wife were severally impersonated by Mr. Santley and Mlle. Tietjens. On February 16 these characters were efficiently sustained by Miss Jenny Fisher and Mr. Theodor Bertram. The important part of Falstaff was played with lively appreciation of its humour by Mr. Max Lahfing, whose physical proportions caused him to impersonate the character to the life. Vivacious exponents of Mistress Page and the 'Sweet Anne' were provided in Madame Kraus Osborne and Miss Minnie Nast, and the parts of Page, Fenton, Slender and Dr. Caius were capably impersonated by Messrs. Wilhelm Jung, Franz Naval, Willy Birkenfeld and Kromer. Mr. Hugo Bryk conducted and secured an excellent performance of the concerted numbers of this melodious, light-hearted and amusing opera.

The only other addition made to the list of operas mentioned on page 112 of last month's issue was 'Die Walküre,' which was mounted on January 22 with Madame von Westhoven as Sieglinde, Madame Litvinne as Brünnhilde, Miss Olitzka as Fricka and Messrs. Kraus and Feinhals as Siegmund and Wotan. The eminent conductor, Mr. Franz Schalk, made his début at Covent Garden on this occasion and with much success. Several other performances were given of 'Die Walküre,' in one of which, on February 6, Madame Agnes Nicholls appeared for the first time as Sieglinde, achieving a distinct success. Subsequently, on February 2, Madame Nicholls impersonated with equal success Elsa in 'Lohengrin,' with Madame Marie Brema as Ortrud, and Venus in 'Tannhäuser' on February 13 with Madame Aïno Ackté as Elisabeth. In all these works the English soprano sang with a beauty of voice and expressiveness that fascinated her listeners.

We much regret to record that Fräulein Schoene (who had appeared as Elsa and Elisabeth only on February 15 and 16) and a number of the German Opera chorus-singers perished in the wreck of the Berlin on February 21.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

A more appropriate work for Ash Wednesday could scarcely be named than Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' and the performance under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge on February 13 was highly impressive. The choristers are to be specially commended for the reverent feeling with which they sang the 'Kyrie eleison' and 'Be merciful, be gracious.' The 'Demon chorus' was vigorously attacked, and the volume of tone in the splendid conclusion of the first part and in 'Praise to the Holiest' was magnificent; in fact the singing of the choir throughout was worthy of warm commendation, and they have rarely been heard to greater advantage. The soloists were Miss Edith J. Miller (who displayed a voice of excellent quality in the part of the Angel), Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, artists who are successfully identified with this work, and Mr. H. L. Balfour occupied his customary place at the organ.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An excellent chamber concert was given by the students on February 20 at Queen's Hall. Great praise is due to the Misses Gladys Clark, Elsie Owen and Gwendolen Griffiths, and Messrs. Thomas Morgan and John Mundy for the intelligence and the admirable balance of tone that distinguished the performance of two movements from Schubert's String quintet in C (Op. 163). Special talent was shown by a young violinist, Mr. Urik Tchaikovsky, in Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen,' and another young musician who showed exceptional promise was Mr. Sydney Rosenbloom, who played with great brilliancy a 'Theme and variations,' for the pianoforte, composed by himself. Miss Evelyn Brown, the possessor of a fine mezzo-soprano voice, sang Brahms's 'Von ewiger Liebe' with sympathetic intelligence, and Mr. Thomas Gibbs gave a dramatic interpretation of 'O Paradis' from Meyerbeer's 'L'Africaine.' Other vocalists were Miss Edith L. John, Miss Natalie A. Campbell, and Mr. J. McNaughton Duncan. Pianoforte pieces were contributed by Miss Adelaide M. N. Dodgson and Mr. Percy Hughes, and Brahms's Sonata in F minor for violoncello and pianoforte was entrusted to Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell and Miss Myra Hess.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

QUEEN'S HALL.

The programme of the sixth concert of the season, given on January 28, included the overture to 'The Flying Dutchman' (Wagner), the Violin concerto in B minor (Saint-Saëns), the tone-poem 'Also sprach Zarathustra' (Richard Strauss), and the Hungarian Rhapsody in F (Liszt). Mr. Albert Spalding, the violinist, created a favourable impression. The Strauss tone-poem was most admirably played, and even if we do not as yet admit with Otto Floersheim that this work 'is the greatest score penned by man,' we may agree that it has noble moments.

The seventh concert, given on February 11, was the speciality of the series. The Leeds Philharmonic chorus, 200 strong, came to perform Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Beethoven's Mass in D. The concert began with one of the most beautiful performances of Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony in B minor we have ever heard. Here we were afforded the rare sensation of an ideally perfect piece ideally rendered. In the Brahms cantata the Leeds choir sang with much beauty of tone, certainty of execution and depth of expression. The sopranos, and particularly the altos, seemed to us to excel the tenors and basses. In the basses there was hardly the deep, rich resonance we sometimes hear in the North. The Mass, splendid as was the achievement, did not afford such complete satisfaction. But this was very far from being a fault of the choralists. They sang con amore and often with great dramatic intensity, and in every detail exhibited fine training and capacity. It was rather the operation of the irresistible law of sympathy with the singers, who were obviously subjected to strain by the relentless and inconsiderate demands of the composer, that hindered full enjoyment of the splendour of the inspiration of this colossal work. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Robert Radford. Londoners owe gratitude to Mr. Fricker and his fine choir, as well as to the London Symphony Orchestra, for this memorable performance.

At the eighth concert, given on February 18, the programme was again highly attractive. Beethoven's joy-inspiring Symphony No. 8, in F, was the first item, and it was performed splendidly. Interest centred upon Mischa Elman's interpretation of Brahms's Violin concerto. His performance was distinguished by astonishing masterfulness and intensity of expression. His genius laid bare in this profound work a wealth of beauty for which many other violinists have dug and delved in vain. The Cadenza was a marvellous exhibition of skill and charm. Another welcome and cheerful piece was the tone-poem 'Vltava,' in which Smetana vents his local patriotism in fanciful and gorgeous imagery.

The fourth item in this long programme was the new Violin suite composed by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The composer was exceedingly fortunate in having Mischa Elman to introduce his important contribution to violin literature. There are four movements which are entitled: (1) Celtic legend, (2) Scherzo capriccioso, (3) Ritornello, (4) Alla Zingara. The first movement, in E minor, has a sombre tone relieved by a very expressive second subject that clings to the ear. The Scherzo, in C major, is brilliant and melodious and full of harmonic ingenuities that maintain interest. But the third movement, in B minor, seemed to us the most attractive of the suite. This may be because its effects are more obvious and natural. The last movement is bright and rhythmic, and again appeals to the attention because of its freshness and fluency. As a whole the suite, which takes over half-an-hour to perform, seemed too long, and it would apparently gain greatly by compression. But this feeling of over-development may have been caused by the newness of the music, and the fact that it was performed after the ear had been almost surfeited, and the mind excited, by what had gone before. The concert closed with a fine performance of Berlioz's overture, 'Le Carnavàl Romain.' Dr. Richter most ably conducted all these concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

DOHNÀNYI'S NEW CONCERTSTÜCK.

At the Queen's Hall symphony concert conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood on February 2 was played for the first time in England Mr. Ernst von Dohnànyi's 'Concertstück' for violoncello and orchestra. This piece is in one movement, but contains a centrally placed Adagio, which forms the most memorable feature of the work, its two subjects being melodiously expressive and poetically treated. The other themes are less admirable, but their development is interesting, and the entire work is redolent of a refinement and artistic sensitiveness that cause the music specially to appeal to cultured listeners. The solo part is effectively written, and the composer is to be congratulated on having his Concerto presented to an English audience by such a consummate violoncellist as Mr. Hugo Becker, by whom it was rendered with fascinating beauty of tone and executive finish. The remainder of the programme consisted of a selection from 'Die Meistersinger,' Beethoven's seventh Symphony, and Richard Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' tone-poem.

The concert on February 16 was noteworthy for the baton being wielded by three conductors, Sir Charles V. Stanford, Mr. Arbós and Mr. Henry J. Wood, the first-named directing an impressive performance of his fine 'Irish Rhapsody' in F minor, No. 2, and the second taking charge of his two pleasing and effective pieces 'La Zambra' and 'Tango' for violin and orchestra, the solo part being beautifully rendered by Mr. Fritz Kreisler. This popular violinist was also heard in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, which seemed perfectly suited to his finished style. Another notable work on the programme was the Andante from Mozart's 'Cassation' in G, No. 1, composed at the age of twelve. The work comprises seven movements, of which the Andante is the second, and is scored in five parts for strings. The music is as simple as it is graceful. The overture to Weber's 'Oberon,' Beethoven's fifth Symphony and the Prelude to 'Parsifal' completed an interesting scheme.

THE LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

ENRICO BOSSI'S 'PARADISE LOST,' QUEEN'S HALL, FEBRUARY 4.

This Society can justly claim credit in that it has been the first to introduce to an English audience the symphonic (choral and orchestral) poem 'Paradise Lost,' the composition of the Italian musician, Mr. Enrico Bossi. Not much of this composer's music has found its way to this country. Yet Bossi is a prolific composer, a fact proved by the statement that 'Paradise Lost' is Op. 125. The theme is a large one, and is indelibly associated, in the British mind at least, with Milton's great poem. It appears that Bossi's music was set originally to an Italian poem, freely adapted from Milton by L. A. Villanis. This adaptation in its turn was translated into German, and from this last version the English words used on this occasion were written by Miss Florence Hoare.

The general impression derived from the performance is that Bossi's music is a mixture of styles, and that it seldom compasses the height and depth of its subject-matter. The prologue, which sets out to depict the evolution of order from chaos, failed to create a deep impression. The following three parts of the work are styled respectively, Hell, Paradise, and Earth. In the first part there was much to interest the attention and much that exhibited fluency of invention, yet there were few really dramatic moments and the music did not seem to glow—if we may use such a word in this uncomfortable connection. This weakness of colouring and suggestiveness were further exhibited in the 'heavenly' section. Here there was some warmth of melody, but never the dignity that held one enthralled, and there were patches of sheer triviality. The third part was to us the most adequate and satisfying section of the work. The composer seemed more at ease with the situations, which here do not demand a large canvas. The long duet between Adam and Eve has many beautiful effects of melody and treatment. A chorus on a subject adapted from Marcello was particularly grateful to the ear, and the Finale is a well wrought up climax. Such are the general impressions of one hearing, and it is quite probable that increased familiarity with the work may modify them.

The chorus sang admirably in the matter of tone and attack, and the band, although not first-rate, was good. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen (Eve), Mrs. George Swinton (Belial and Uriel), Mr. Dalton Baker (Adam), Mr. André Kayà (Moloch) and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies (Satan). There are three baritone parts and no tenor part in the work. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with his usual zeal. We understand that the Society has determined to perform the work again shortly.

London Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The opening concert of the ninety-fifth season—held at Queen's Hall on February 6—does not call for detailed notice. Its most important features were the occupancy of the conductor's rostrum by M. Edouard Colonne, in the temporary absence of Dr. Cowen, and the masterly interpretations, as on former occasions, by Madame Teresa Carreño of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor. The orchestra, perhaps not at its best, owing to the presence of some deputies, played the 'Hebrides' and 'Benvenuto Cellini' overtures and Beethoven's ever-welcome 'Eroica' symphony. Miss Amy Castles was the vocalist.

THE BACH CHOIR.

Under the direction of Dr. Walford Davies the Bach Choir is certainly making good progress, but there is no kindness in concealing the fact that the choristers need reinforcement, particularly in the male department. To the want of vigour of the tenors and basses may be attributed the weaknesses in the rendering of the choral singing on February 8 at Queen's Hall, when the works chosen were Bach's Sanctus in D, Sir Hubert Parry's impressive Sinfonia Sacra, 'The love that casteth out fear,' and Beethoven's Choral fantasia. The soloists in the Sinfonia were Miss Marie Stuart and Mr. Dalton Baker. Miss Stuart is gifted with a contralto voice of particularly rich volume, but she is to be warned against the fatal error of indulgence in vibrato. Mr. Richard Buhlig played the pianoforte part in Beethoven's work very finely.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

Mozart's 'Requiem' and Handel's 'Triumph of time and truth' were the works selected by the Handel Society for its concert at Queen's Hall on February 16, and they were rendered with much testimony of good intention. For the revival of the latter work the Society certainly deserves much credit. The solos were sung by Miss Ruth Freeman, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. R. Jackson and Mr. F. Harford. Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor conducted and Mr. E. G. Croager was the organist.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society gave an excellent concert, conducted by Mr. Ernest Ford, on January 30 when the band distinguished itself by its interpretation of Brahms's 'Tragic' overture, two movements from Godard's suite 'Scènes Poétique,' and the Prelude to the third act of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's opera 'The Troubadour,' Miss Gertrude Meller played with vivacity and brilliancy in Rubinstein's fourth Pianoforte concerto, and the vocalists were Mr. Luis Alvarez and Madame Louise Dale.

On February 5 the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society presented an extremely interesting programme. It opened with the first performance in London of Reinecke's 'Friedensfeier' (Peace festival) Overture in G (Op. 105), which proved a scholarly and effectively scored work built round Handel's tune—if it is Handel's—'See, the conquering hero comes,' which is ingeniously treated, and at the end is combined with the German chorale 'Ein' feste Burg' in a triumphant conclusion. Other notable works were Sibelius's symphonic poem 'Finlandia,' and Goetz's beautiful symphony in F, which received excellent interpretations under the direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne. Sir Charles Stanford's 'Five songs of the sea' were to have been sung by Mr. Plunket Greene, but when Mr. Greene found that the Stock Exchange Orchestra uses the old high Philharmonic pitch, he declined to sing. This was a great disappointment, particularly to the male-voice choir, which, however, was heard in madrigals and part-songs with excellent effect, thanks to the skill as a choir-trainer of Mr. Munro Davison.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL CHOIR.

Only words of congratulation need be extended to the London Sunday School Choir in reference to its annual concert at the Royal Albert Hall on February 16. Under Mr. W. Whiteman's direction the choral singing showed decided advance upon that of previous occasions, and it is doubtful whether the singers or the listeners enjoyed themselves the most, for enthusiasm was in the air. The solo vocalists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Lily Gover, and Mr. Charles Saunders, who certainly never sang to a more appreciative audience. The orchestra, under Mr. Wesley Hammett, contributed several pieces in capital style, and capable assistance was given at the pianoforte and organ respectively by Mrs. Mary Layton and Mr. Horace G. Holmes.

VARIOUS CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

At Queen's Hall, on January 29, Miss Marie Hall gave what was described as a farewell recital prior to her departure on tour in distant lands. If this highly-gifted violinist plays during her travels anything like as admirably as she performed on this occasion, she will give untold delight to her audiences abroad. More than on any former occasion, in our experience, Miss Hall displayed not merely technical skill but the highest interpretative power. The following are the pieces she played: Partita in D minor for violin and pianoforte (C. Hubert H. Parry), Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins (with Mr. Max Mossel), Aria (Tenaglia), Menuet and Gigue (De Angelis), and most notably Joachim's Concerto in G major, with pianoforte accompaniment. A new singer, Miss Marie Stuart, sang 'Che farò' (Gluck) and other songs, and displayed a fine contralto voice and an artistic style. Her progress will be watched with interest. Mr. Hamilton Harty was the pianist throughout the concert.

Sufficient success crowned the first series of the 'Thursday Twelve o'clocks' at Æolian Hall to justify the commencement of a second on January 31. The principal work performed on that occasion was Mendelssohn's Pianoforte trio in C minor, which was admirably rendered by Miss Mathilde Verne, Madame Beatrice Langley and Miss May Mukle. The other concerted work was Madame Alice Bredt-Verne's neatly-written fantasia for pianoforte and strings, in which the above-mentioned artists had, as a colleague, Miss Cecilia Gates in the viola part.

Messrs. Hans Neumann and W. H. Thorley gave an enjoyable concert at Æolian Hall on February 5, at which was performed a 'Ballade' for violin and pianoforte by the latter musician. If not remarkable for originality, Mr. Thorley's music is interesting and well written, and the violin part of the composition was most effectively rendered by Mr. Neumann. Excellent interpretations were also given of Richard Strauss's Pianoforte and violin sonata in E flat (Op. 18), and of Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' sonata.

Mr. Edward Ramsey, a new baritone, who has studied with Mr. Jean de Reszke and Mr. Murray Davey, gave a recital at Steinway Hall on February 14, when he introduced four new songs by the latter. Of these 'Twilight' and 'It is the hour when lovers' vows' proved especially melodious and well-written. Mr. Ramsey was assisted by Miss Evelyn Suart, who contributed some pianoforte solos.

CESAR FRANCK'S TRIO IN F SHARP MINOR (OP. 1).

Record is due for what was probably the first performance in London of Cesar Franck's Trio for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, at Miss Cecile Brani's concert at Æolian Hall on February 19. The work—which is the first of three 'Trios concertans' forming Opus 1, and dedicated to Leopold I., King of the Belgians—consists of an Andante con moto, Allegretto and Finale, all of which are distinguished by continuity of thought, poetical feeling, significance and earnestness of expression. It is music that stirs the imagination of the listener, and it is astonishing that it has been so long neglected. The Trio was beautifully played by Madame Barnard and Messrs. H. Fellowes and J. Schofield.

DR. ERNEST WALKER'S NEW FANTASIA IN D.

The Chamber Concert given by the Norah Clench Quartet on February 19, at Bechstein Hall, was distinguished by the first performance of the Fantasia in D for string quartet by Dr. Ernest Walker, and five songs recently composed by Miss Agnes H. Lambert. The Fantasia is a scholarly, imaginative composition of essentially refined character, and is remarkable for a centrally interpolated Scherzo for muted strings, the viola playing an engaging theme accompanied by brilliant contrapuntal passages assigned to the other instruments. The work was excellently interpreted, and most favourably received. The most successful of Miss Lambert's songs, which were sung by Madame Evangeline Florence, proved to be those named 'The whispering waves were half asleep,' and 'The throstle.'

Mrs. Miriam Mauchlen and Mr. Dawson Freer gave much pleasure to a large audience at their vocal recital at Steinway Hall on February 20. As on a former occasion, Mrs. Mauchlen excelled in her admirable interpretation of Scotch songs, and scarcely less charming were her renderings of compositions by Arne, Haydn, and Purcell. Mr. Dawson Freer sang with artistic insight and marked feeling, while Miss Margaret Holloway played some violin solos, and Mr. Henry R. Bird was, as heretofore, a perfect accompanist.

The Stonebridge Park and Harlesden Choral Society gave a concert at the Constitutional Hall, Harlesden, on January 24, when Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' constituted the main attraction. It was excellently performed by the choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. Walter Marlow, organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Ambrose, Mr. W. H. Pocklington and Mr. Harry Long.

The St. Peter's, Brockley, Choral Society gave a repetition performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' in St. Peter's Hall on February 5. The singing of the choir reflected much credit on their trainer, Dr. C. J. Frost. There was a small orchestra and Mr. John Curran was at the pianoforte. The solo parts were ably rendered by Miss Teresa Blamy, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' at the Crystal Palace on February 9. The solo vocalists were Miss Marie Titiens, Miss Aimée Ferdinand, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. André Kayà. Miss Roberts also sang Elgar's 'Sea pictures.' Mr. C. H. Kempling was at the organ, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with his customary care and skill.

Musical Competition Festivals.

PRESTON.

January 31, February 1 and 2.

This recently-established festival is steadily growing in utility. Over 2,000 competitors were attracted this year. The public hall is a fine one, and it is well matched by the public spirit of many of the townsfolk. About £200 was subscribed towards the various expenses, and large audiences testified to their interest in the event. Solo-singing classes brought forward and revealed much talent, and the instrumental classes were well filled with eager competitors.

A children's day was a happy event, as all children's days should be. One feature was the combined performance of the cantata 'The waits of Bremen' (B. Luard-Selby), under the able direction of Mr. J. E. Adkins, Mus. Bac., the organist of the parish church, whose choir took a first prize in the Church Choir competition. The results of the school competitions and the sight-singing tests used are given in full in this month's School Music Review.

On the last day choirs came from near and far, and the singing reached a high standard. The following were the results and the tests in the chief classes:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (8).

'The spinning chorus' (Wagner).

Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. Ernest Hitchon) } Bracketed 1st.
Preston Lyric (Mr. Joseph Smith) .. .. }

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (5).

'Hungarian march' (de Rillé), 'Breathe soft, ye winds' (Calkin), 'John Barleycorn' (J. F. Bridge).

1st. Habergham Glee Union (Mr. Ernest Hitchon).
2nd. Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (7).

Sir Patrick Spens' (Pearsall), eight-part arrangement, 'I can but love thee' (Cornelius), 'Sweet day so cool' (E. C. Bairstow).

1st. The Southport Choir (Mr. W. Tattersall).
2nd. Mr. Aldous's Lancaster Choir.

The sight-singing powers of five choirs were also tested. In this section Mr. Aldous's choir was supremely successful.

Dr. McNaught, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. C. A. Fogg adjudicated. The president of the festival is a well-known medical man, Dr. R. C. Brown, and the active secretary is Mr. Walter J. Archer.

HUDDERSFIELD.

February 9 and 11.

The 'Mrs. Sunderland' competitions were again held with success. Solo singing is always a feature of the scheme, and pianists are well catered for. The following are some of the principal results:

Pianoforte.—Test-pieces—(a) Sonata in F sharp major (Op. 78), Beethoven; and (b) Fantaisie-Impromptu (Op. 66), Chopin. Twenty-three entries. 1, Mr. Lewis Oddy, Bradford; 2, Miss M. A. Akroyd, Halifax.

Mixed-voice choirs.—Test-pieces—(a) anthem, 'They that go down to the sea,' Attwood; and (b) part-song, 'The sands of Dee,' Myles B. Foster. Eight entries. 1, Keighley Vocal Union, 114.

Male-voice choir.—Test-pieces (a) glee, 'In a cell or cavern deep,' John Parry; and (b) part-song, 'What care I how fair she be,' Blumenthal. Seven entries. 1, Morley Vocal Union (Mr. S. Smith).

Dr. Roland Rogers adjudicated.

CARLISLE.

February 5, 6 and 7.

This festival has been established many years and it is satisfactory to report that it is flourishing. It caters chiefly for choirs of all constitutions and degrees of ability. In the chief choral class the Carlisle Madrigal Society (Mr. J. R. Cockbain) was the winner of the challenge shield, the Carliol Singing Class (Mr. W. H. Reid) won the first place in the female-voice choir section, and the Senior Male Choir (Mr. W. H. Reid) the principal male-voice choir prize. The 'Hymn of Praise' was given by the combined choirs numbering 350 voices and a specially engaged orchestra under the direction of Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. A feature of this festival is that it includes choirs composed of girls and lads in business. The competitors in these classes were satisfactory not only in number, but in their display of good training and musical ability. The junior classes were also fairly numerous. They combined to sing an interesting new children's cantata 'The Luck of Edenhall' composed by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, who again conducted. The cantata was very well received by a large audience. Dr. Sinclair adjudicated.

OTTAWA, CANADA.

Much public interest has been shown in the unique competition in the twin Arts of music and the drama which took place here in the first week of February. According to the official programme, the competition was originated by Earl Grey 'first with the view of encouraging an interest in music and the drama throughout the Dominion, and, second, with the object of providing an opportunity for the representatives of the principal cities of British North America to make each other's acquaintance, and to acquire a feeling of affection and loyalty for the Federal city of Ottawa.'

The result was that ten companies—four musical and six dramatic—presented themselves in Ottawa for the competition. They came from as far west as Winnipeg and as far east as St. John's, Newfoundland. Lord and Lady Grey were present during the competitions, His Excellency having selected Mr. George Whitfield Chadwick to act as judge of the musical events.

The musical entries were as follows: 1st Battalion Newfoundland Regiment Church Lads' Brigade, St. John's; Quebec Symphony Society, Quebec; St. Lambert Choral Society, Montreal; D.F.P. Minstrels, Ottawa.

The musical trophy was awarded to the Quebec Symphony Society. A detailed report will be found in this month's School Music Review.

A choral and orchestral competition is to be held in the Town Hall, Kensington, on March 14. The classes will include church choirs (female voices), choirs of mixed voices, ladies' orchestras, mixed orchestras (amateur and professional), and sight-reading. Dr. W. G. McNaught and Mr. Joseph Ivimey are the adjudicators. Full particulars can be obtained of Miss Browne, 19, Roland Gardens, S.W., one of the hon. secretaries.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, February 15.

I have to-day to make mention of an out-and-out Austrian composer, Robert Fuchs by name. He lives in our midst as a professor of theory at the Conservatorium. His sixtieth birthday has just been celebrated by musical Vienna, and this has caused general and marked notice to be taken of him. Robert Fuchs was born in Styria, but when quite young came to Vienna, where more than thirty years ago he won his first success with a Serenade for strings performed at a Philharmonic concert, under the direction of Dessoff. A second Serenade followed soon after, which added to the composer's reputation. In the course of time, however, he attempted larger forms. During the lifetime of Brahms, and to his great joy, there appeared two Symphonies by Fuchs; and now, on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday, he presents us with a third. His opera 'The King's Bride' was produced here more than twenty years ago, and a second, 'The Devil's niece,' came out at Leipzig.

The composer has been very successful in his chamber music: he has written three Pianoforte quartets, two Pianoforte trios, four Sonatas for violin and pianoforte, duets for various instruments, a Sonata and many solos for pianoforte; also a Concerto for viola and one for violoncello, in addition to numerous beautiful songs, those for female chorus being specially worthy of mention. His music is healthy, spontaneous and attractive. As a man he is highly esteemed. At a musical evening held in his honour various pianoforte and chamber works and some of his finest part-songs for female chorus were admirably rendered, and his private pupils surprised their honoured teacher with an address. The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde at one of its choral concerts performed two of his finest choruses for female voices. The Concert Union produced his new brilliant Symphony in C, the Philharmonic Society a Serenade, while the Male Choral Society and other bodies in Vienna and throughout Austria sent congratulations.

The appearance here of Ernst von Lengyel from Budapest, a boy only thirteen years of age, has caused quite a sensation. He plays the most difficult pianoforte works with perfect technique, while his conception of the music displays such understanding and deep feeling that one may expect him to become a second Dohnànyi. The latter has written a new Concertstück for violin, violoncello and orchestra, which has been performed by Hugo Becker at the Concert Union. It is more of a notturno on a large scale than a brilliant concert piece; there is genuine feeling in the work, and it is as effectively written for the solo instrument as for the orchestra; moreover, it is perfect in form, and like everything by Dohnànyi, it is pleasant to listen to. Hugo Becker gave a masterly reading of the solo part.

From among the many works performed by the Concert Union I single out: an overture to an opera, 'Das Veilchenfest,' by Brands-Buys, a Dutch composer living in Vienna, Bach's Concerto in C for three pianofortes, performed by Brands-Buys, Julius Fischer and Margaret Melville, the last-named a young and talented American living here, who has already distinguished herself both as pianist and composer.

Ferdinand Löwe, the conductor of the Concert Union, has again proved himself an eminent interpreter of Brahms. In him are united in a most extraordinary way the heterogeneous tendencies which show themselves in Brahms and Bruckner; for whether as pianist or as conductor he interprets to perfection the works of both masters. He is a perfect model of a modern musician.

Mandyczewski.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concert of the Philharmonic Society on February 1 was a miscellaneous one, in which the joint work of chorus and orchestra was represented by only one item, Sir Hubert Parry's noble setting of Milton's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The solo singers were Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Florence Nixon (a rising local soprano), and Mr. Dalton Baker. Mr. Percy Grainger, a very fine young pianist, played Liszt's 'Hungarian fantasia' with the orchestra, and the orchestra —almost entirely local, which has immensely improved under Dr. Koeller's tireless training—contributed Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Elgar's 'In the South,' and Rossini's 'La Gazza Ladra' overtures.

On February 15 and 16, two chamber concerts, under Dr. Lawrence Walker's direction, were given in the Queen's College Examination Hall, a room which is unfortunately most remarkable for bad acoustic quality and cold draughts. The Kruse Quartet played at both concerts, and their selection of music, which gave them ample scope for a display of their finished execution, comprised Mozart's Quartet in B flat, Brahms's Violin sonata in D minor, Grieg's only String quartet, Beethoven's third Rasoumovsky Quartet, Tartini's Sonata in D major, violoncello pieces by Godard and Davidoff, and Christian Sinding's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 5). The vocalists were Miss Florence Nixon and Miss Florence Macnaughton, and both concerts were altogether excellent in quality and performance.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra has enhanced its reputation at the excellent concert given by this newly-formed musical organization in the Town Hall on January 23, under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter. Mr. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Landon Ronald had already previously obtained remarkable results with our band of local players, but it was left to Dr. Richter to further strengthen its reputation as one of the best equipped orchestras in the provinces. By the striking performance of Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony, Elgar's 'Enigma variations,' and excerpts from Wagner, Dr. Richter proved to the hilt what can be done with an orchestra even after one or two rehearsals. The same band gave a popular Saturday night concert in the Town Hall on February 2, conducted by Mr. H. Lyell-Taylor. The vocalist was Mr. Frank Mullings, a young tenor gifted with an excellent voice.

The Birmingham Choral Union again relied upon Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' to fill the Town Hall on January 27, nor was there disappointment, the Hall being crowded in every part, the whole performance reflecting the utmost credit on Mr. Thomas Facer, the conductor, and the executive. The principal vocalists—Madame Aston, Madame Margaret Gell, Mr. Joseph Whitehouse and Mr. William Evans—rendered most artistic service and Mr. C. W. Perkins was as usual indispensable at the organ.

The Midland Musical Society could not have chosen a more popular work for its ninety-fourth artizan concert than Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy, given in the Town Hall on February 9. The music strongly appeals to the imagination of all classes of music-lovers, and it is no wonder that Mr. A. J. Cotton, the conductor, once more achieved a genuine success with his fine all-round performance of the work. Excellent as were the previous renderings of 'Hiawatha' by this Society, that under notice certainly excelled in richness of tone and dramatic conception. Mr. William Maxwell (of London), whose services were secured at a moment's notice to replace another tenor absent through illness, gave a fine exposition of 'Onaway! awake, beloved.' Madame Amy Kendal (a local soprano) and Mr. Arthur Walenn (a London baritone) completed the list of principals.

Local Welsh residents, like the Scottish clan, give now their regular annual concerts. The organizers are the members forming the choir of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, who gave an interesting concert in the Town Hall on February 13. The choir is well-balanced, and is steadily advancing in artistic delivery, tone-quality and gradation of light and shade under its new conductor, Mr. R. T. Hughes. The vocal principals comprised Madame Jones-Hudson, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Thomas-Thomas, and Mr. Ivor Foster. Mr. Charles Collier was the harpist, and Mrs. W. G. Roberts accompanied.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on February 14, consisting of Beethoven's Mass in D, Brahms's 'Alto Rhapsody,' and a Wagner selection comprising the 'Trauermarsch' from 'Die Götterdämmerung,' and the 'Preislied' and Finale from 'Die Meistersinger.' It has been the invariable custom of our Festival Choral Society to include in its scheme one or two of the principal new works given at a Birmingham Musical Festival, and the choice has this season fallen on Beethoven's Mass and Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' the latter to be given at the last concert on March 21, together with Bach's motet 'Sing ye to the Lord,' also one of the festival items. Dr. Sinclair again showed himself a masterly conductor who had his forces under complete control. Most of the choristers were associated in the festival performance of the Mass, and had not forgotten Dr. Richter's valuable hints on phrasing, earnestness of purpose, and inspiration, and the outcome was a fine and impressive rendering of the colossal work, aided by the excellent services rendered by the principals, Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Frances Braun, with Mr. C. W. Perkins at the organ. The 'Alto Rhapsody' had the advantage of Madame Ada Crossley's beautiful delivery of the solo part. Miss Perceval Allen was also heard in a vivid rendering of Elisabeth's prayer from 'Tannhäuser.'

The third for the season of the Clifton Chamber Concerts was held at the Victoria Rooms on January 31, and was well attended. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane and F. S. Gardner (violas), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Satisfactory interpretations were given of Brahms's String quintet in G (Op. 111) and Smetana's String quartet in E minor, and other works.

On February 7 the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society held its sixty-third annual Ladies' Night at Colston Hall. The soloists were Mr. E. J. Way and Mr. Wilson Pembroke, and their singing afforded much satisfaction. Contributions to the programme which had not before been given by the choir were 'Nightfall' (Schumann), 'The phantom host' (Hegar), 'The blind raven' (W. H. Bell), 'The meeting of the waters' (arranged by J. C. Long), and 'The height of the ridiculous' (C. Lee-Williams). Peculiarly impressive was the graphic production of Hegar. Mr. George Riseley conducted with his accustomed ability, (Mr. Lee-Williams, who is a favourite with Bristol audiences, conducting his own part-songs). His new composition is a setting of lines by Oliver Wendell Holmes and is broadly humorous. His other contribution to the programme, 'Faithless Sally Brown,' is a setting of Tom Hood's well-known ballad, which was originally given by the Society in 1901. Both part-songs were well received and Mr. Williams was warmly applauded. The programme-book was a most tasteful and interesting feature of an enjoyable evening's music.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the annual general meeting of the Dublin Orchestral Society the committee were able to present a favourable report and balance sheet for the season 1906. The Society is now out of debt, having during the past year not only paid all expenses but also cleared off a deficit of £47. Mr. Philip Hanson, one of the Commissioners of Public Works, was chairman at the meeting, which was addressed by Mr. Charles Manners, of the Moody-Manners Opera Company.

On February 7 the Irish Ladies' Choir, under the direction of Madame Cosslett-Heller, gave an enjoyable concert in the Rotunda, when the Choir was heard to great advantage in a number of arrangements of Irish airs by Jozé, and various part-songs. Miss Madge Murphy, who made a most successful début as a violinist, is a player of exceptional merit of whom we hope to hear more. Miss Georgina MacDonald played two harp solos extremely well, besides accompanying Madame Cosslett-Heller in Tosti's 'Serenata,' to which Miss Madge Murphy played a violin obbligato. The other solo vocalists were Madame Joan Holland, Miss Kemp and Miss Kathleen Cody, who sang with much taste. Miss Dorothy Bewley, Miss Eileen Addey and Mr. Arthur Oulton accompanied.

Mr. Alfred Johnson, assisted by Mr. Arthur Oulton's Trio, gave a song recital on February 11, when he effectively sang selections of German songs, old English songs, modern English songs and Irish songs, the last-named arranged by the late Joseph Robinson.

At the Royal Dublin Society recitals, recitals have been given by the Brodsky Quartet, Max Mossel Quartet, Esposito-Beel Quintet, Kruse Quartet, and Mr. Herbert Walton (organ). The Amateur Operatic Society on February 14 gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' with orchestral accompaniment, conducted by Mr. Barton McGuckin. The solos were all sung by the members of the Society.

On February 19 the Orpheus Choral Society, conducted by Dr. J. C. Culwick, gave its second concert for the season. Of the pieces sung by the choir, special mention must be made of S. Wesley's 'In exitu Israel,' Brahms's 'Dirge of Darthula,' and Dr. Culwick's own 'Fairy song,' a pianoforte duet arrangement of the orchestral accompaniment of which was played by Miss Dorothy Bewley and Mr. Arthur Oulton. Madame Joan Holland, and Mr. Alfred Heather, who made a successful first appearance at these concerts, were the vocalists, and Dr. Esposito made his only appearance this year as a solo pianist, playing with much acceptance Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 27, No. 1), and a Liszt 'Rhapsodie Hongroise.'

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third and fourth of the University historical concerts were given on January 23 and February 13, and fully maintained the high standard of artistic and educational worth that has characterized them ever since they were instituted by Prof. Niecks. The former was devoted to melodramatic music, and of this genre two of the finest examples were chosen—Schumann's 'Manfred' and Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream.' Of these works—in which he had the valuable co-operation of fifty members of the Scottish Orchestra, with Mrs. Tobias Matthay as reciter—Prof. Niecks secured splendid readings, and the concert was no less pleasant than instructive in the highest degree. The same can be said of the subsequent concert—a recital of German songs, in chronological order, by that gifted artist and exponent, Miss Mary Münchhoff. The illustrations, which in this case numbered considerably over a full score, were rendered with quite remarkable insight and vocal charm. Mr. Jupp's beautiful and sympathetic accompaniments were a feature of the recital, the audience at which crowded the building.

The orchestral concert on January 21 was conducted by Mr. S. von Hausegger, who is already highly esteemed in Edinburgh. Two overtures ('Egmont' and 'Die Weihe des Hauses') and the C minor symphony of Beethoven formed the chief features of this music-making, and proved Mr. von Hausegger to be an intellectual and sympathetic interpreter of the great master. The ninth concert (January 28) was also chiefly devoted to Beethoven, whose ninth Symphony was very finely rendered under Dr. Cowen. Mr. Kirkhope's choir sang the choral portion of the work, and overcame the very trying music in gallant style. Misses Perceval Allen and Frederica Richardson, and Messrs. Webster Millar and Fowler Burton formed a very capable quartet of soloists. The choir was equally happy in Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' which Mr. Kirkhope himself conducted, and Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture set its seal upon an enjoyable concert. The band gave evidence of its admirable flexibility and discipline at the tenth concert (February 4), when that prince of conductors, Dr. Hans Richter, appeared with a programme which showed the catholicity and modernity of his taste. Wagner, Brahms, Richard Strauss, Berlioz, Liszt—characteristic samples of each, and all rendered to perfection, made a memorable night. Not one of the least enjoyable of the series was the eleventh concert (conducted by Dr. Cowen), at which the 'Unfinished' symphony of Schubert, the Adagio and Rondo of Mozart (Dr. Cowen playing the pianoforte part with delightful delicacy of tone) were performed, and Miss Mary Münchhoff, as vocalist, charmed the audience.

The Gade Sunday Concerts are still drawing enormous audiences to the King's Theatre, and the popular concerts at the Central Halls continue to be crowded. The second concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society took place on February 13, under the conductorship of Mr. T. H. Collinson, and was excellent alike as regards programme and execution. The soloists were Dr. Harold Ballantyne, who played the D minor Concerto of Rubinstein, and Dr. Herbert Thompson, who sang several dramatic songs in capital style.

Among local enterprises calling for commendation have been Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's third lecture-recital, 'A Visit to the Outer Hebrides and Celtic Music' (February 9); the vocal recital of Mr. Alberto Bach, assisted by several of his pupils (February 12); Miss Annie Reed Macdonald's vocal and dramatic recital (February 14); and the concert of the St. Andrew's Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. R. de la Haye), on February 14.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, under Mr. John Cullen's experienced direction, gave a meritorious performance, on February 7, of the first three of Elgar's 'Songs from the Bavarian Highlands' and Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride.' The Elgar numbers, especially the 'Lullaby,' were sung with fine tone and finish, and in Dvorák's dramatic music the choir gave evidence of careful and intelligent preparation. The solo music was excellently given by Miss Gleeson-White and Messrs. Henry Brearley and McLean Borthwick, and the accompaniments were irreproachably played by the Scottish Orchestra.

On February 13 the Athenæum Choral Society, under its new conductor, Mr. Alfred Heap, made a successful appearance in Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Gade's 'Erl-King's daughter,' the latter especially proving a work well suited to the capabilities of the choir.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Choral Union gave a delightful performance of 'Lohengrin' on February 5. The popularity of Wagner's opera, even without stage accessories, was proved by the attendance of one of the largest audiences of the season. The soloists were Madame Ella Russell and Miss Winifred Ludlam, and Messrs. Wilson Pembroke, Walter Harvey, Lewys James and Arthur Winckworth. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted with exceptional skill.

At the fifteenth classical concert on February 12, Mr. York Bowen played the solo part in the first performance here of his Pianoforte concerto in D. Both as composer and executant Mr. York Bowen made an excellent impression. Two other quasi-novelties were included in the programme, viz., the overture to Handel's 'Siroë' and Weingartner's Symphony in G.

Mr. F. Siegl, the deputy-leader of the Scottish Orchestra, made an excellent appearance as solo violonist at the Popular Orchestral Concert on February 16, playing a Scherzo and Tarantelle by Wieniawski, and taking part in Max Bruch's Romance in A minor for violin and orchestra. Miss Jenny Taggart sang with much charm songs by Purcell, Tchaikovsky and Dvorák. Miss Marie Hall made her first appearance under the Choral and Orchestral Union's auspices at the last classical concert on February 21, her contributions to the programme being the solo part in Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' and Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. At this concert Sir Hubert Parry's 'Overture to an Unwritten Tragedy' received a first hearing in Glasgow. The Choral and Orchestral Union's season was brought to a close by the annual plébiscite concert on February 23.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Gloucester Choral Society's concert on February 5 the chief work was Beethoven's Mass in C, which was given at the particular request of the President of the Society, Mr. Joseph Bennett. The small band was ably led by Mr. W. H. Reed, and Mr. Porter (sub-organist of Gloucester Cathedral) rendered good service at the organ. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer was unfortunately prevented taking his customary place at the conductor's desk owing to illness. Mr. C. Lee-Williams kindly officiated as conductor, he being heartily greeted on resuming a post he occupied with distinction for many years. The soloists were Miss Fanny Chetham, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Paul Edmonds. The band played the valse movement from Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings (Op. 48), and the choir sang Leslie's 'Lullaby of life' and the bridal chorus from 'Lohengrin,' these two pieces being conducted by Mr. Franklin Higgs, the oldest member of the Society.

The concert given by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society at the Town Hall, on February 6, was a remarkable success from every point of view. Mr. C. J. Phillips, with his small choir but adequate orchestra, succeeded in giving a notable performance of 'Lohengrin.' It was a great experiment, but abundantly justified by results. The choice of principals was a happy one. Miss Stella Robinson was delightful as Elsa, Madame Verrinder made a dramatic Ortrud, and the male characters were successfully sustained by Messrs. Alfred Heather, Horatio Connell, George Uttley and Ernest Davies (of Worcester Cathedral choir). On this occasion Miss Stella Robinson was presented with a silver epergne, appropriately supported by swans, and the Society presented Mr. Phillips with a silver-mounted baton and a laurel wreath.

The Dursley Choral Society gave a good performance of 'Creation' at the Victoria Hall, on February 6, with band and chorus, and conducted by Mr. A. W. Keys.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The eighth Philharmonic concert, on January 22, proved exceptionally interesting and attractive. Dr. Lierhammer sang the recitative and aria from Tchaikovsky's 'Pique Dame' for the first time here, and Mr. Pablo Casals made his début, playing Schumann's Violoncello concerto (Op. 129), and Bach's Suite in A flat with warmth of tone and marked success. The orchestra, under Dr. Cowen's direction, played Berlioz's 'Benvenuto Cellini' overture and Brahms's C minor symphony, and the choruses 'Come, gentle spring' (Haydn) and Beethoven's 'Hail, music, hail' were excellently sung by the choir.

Mischa Elman, aided by Miss Dorothy Sant-Angelo and by Miss Ada Crossley, gave a successful concert at the Philharmonic Hall on January 23, and a very large audience was present at Dr. Richter's concert in the same place on January 28, when the programme included Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Brahms's fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture.

The Symphony Orchestra continues to grow in public favour, and an immense audience attended the concert on January 28, when Wagner's 'Faust' and 'Rienzi' overtures, and Tchaikovsky's '1812' formed part of the programme. Mr. Albert Archdeacon was the vocalist.

The Philharmonic Society performed on February 5 Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan' cantata, and the fifth scene of Act III. of 'Die Meistersinger,' with the following list of principals: Misses Gleeson-White and Frederica Richardson, Messrs. Ben Davies, Frederic Austin, Webster Millar, Hamilton Earle, T. Barlow, R. W. Lee, Frances Braun, Emlyn Davies, T. Morgan and Arthur Weber.

A feature of especial interest at the third Schiever concert, on February 9, was a new String quartet composed by Novaczek, a countryman of Dvorák's. Another novelty was given at the Orchestral Society's concert on February 16 in the shape of a Scherzo, 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' by Paul Dukas.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of 'Elijah'—the forty-first—at the Hallé concerts on January 24, before a crowded audience, was stirring in the extreme. The choir specially distinguished itself. The principals were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Santley. Dr. Richter turned from Mendelssohn to Wagner, from Wagner to Strauss, and from Strauss to Elgar, in the successive concerts of January 31, February 7 and 14, in his progress sweeping our vision over nearly the whole area of modern music. On the Wagner evening the second Act was given of 'Tristan,' with Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Coates, Mr. R. S. Ripley—a member of the choir—and Mr. Robert Radford as the principals. The other orchestral selections were the 'Rienzi' overture and Siegfried's Tod und Trauermarsch. Strauss was represented by his 'Ein Heldenleben,' of which a first performance, and that a very worthy one, was given here. Still cosmopolitan, the programme not only introduced Mr. York Bowen as an executant, to play his cleverly-written and pleasing Pianoforte concerto in E minor, but it brought also Mozart, Chopin, and Liszt (the orchestrated Rhapsody, No. 4) to keep Strauss and him company. Elgar absolutely changed our point of view, in the first performance here of his latest sacred epic, 'The Kingdom.' He took us out of the realm in which heated human passions and philosophic speculations strive for utterance in music, to breathe the atmosphere of the temple of worship, where the ecstasies of religious devotion hold sway, always intense, often very beautiful. The performance of the work was admirable. The singing of the choir was such that the audience paid it the infrequent compliment of calling the choirmaster, Mr. R. H. Wilson, on to the platform at the close. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. Herbert Brown.

At the Gentlemen's Concerts on February 6, Prof. Mühlfeld, at an afternoon recital, was joined by Mr. Percy Grainger in a performance of three of Schumann's 'Fantasiestücke' (Op. 73), and of one of the Brahms works written specially for the distinguished clarinettist—the Sonata in F minor for pianoforte and clarinet (Op. 120). Mr. Grainger played Busoni's arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D. Miss Hilda de Angelis was the vocalist. On the same date Dr. Brodsky and his colleagues of the Brodsky Quartet delighted the subscribers with a fine performance of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6), and of Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in G minor (Op. 25), Mr. Edward Isaacs being at the pianoforte. Grieg's String quartet in G minor (Op. 27) was also performed.

The Promenade Concerts continue to flourish; and they continue to offer opportunities to local talent. On January 26 we had two movements—a Lento and a Scherzetto—from Mr. J. H. Foulds's Violoncello concerto in D (Op. 12), with Mr. Foulds himself as the soloist; and on February 9 a new orchestral Scherzo-Caprice by Mr. Mauritz Speelman. Both works have merit. Tchaikovsky figured largely in the programme of the former concert, which included the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius; and Madame Sadler-Fogg and Miss Annie Worsley sang well. The programme of Mr. Max Mayer's second chamber concert was specially interesting, containing Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 102, No. 1), for pianoforte and violoncello; a Sonata by Bach, in E flat, for pianoforte and flute; the five 'Stücke im Volkston,' by Schumann (Op. 102), for pianoforte and violoncello; and Brahms's Trio in A minor (Op. 114), for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello. Mr. Max Mayer was of course at the pianoforte. The violoncello, flute, and clarinet parts were taken respectively by Messrs. Carl Fuchs, V. Needham and E. Mills. Mrs. Max Mayer was the vocalist.

Mr. Brand Lane's choir maintains the fine position it has held during the season. In miscellaneous selections it made its mark again at the concerts of February 2 and 16. The soloists at the first of these were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Meta Büring, and Mr. Thorpe Bates (vocal), and Mr. Zacharewitsch (violin); at the second the vocalists were Miss Amy Castles, Miss Carmen Hill, Señor Alvarez, and Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Louis Pecskai was the violinist. Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' fragment was sung at the concert of the Vocal Society on February 6. The miscellaneous pieces included a solo and chorus by a local composer, Mr. Richard Knight. The piece is No. 5 of a series of 'Scenes' inspired by the text of Dryden's 'Alexander's Feast.' Judged from this example, the 'Scenes' constitute the most confidently incisive thing that Mr. Knight so far has done.

At his recital on January 18, Mr. Egon Petri, professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College of Music, gave a remarkably fine display of technique. His programme contained four of Bach's Choral Preludes, and the same composer's Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C (transcribed by Busoni); Beethoven's Variations in C minor and Sonata in E (Op. 109); the twenty-four Preludes of Chopin (Op. 28), and Liszt's arrangement of 'La Muette de Portici,' with the Tarantelle.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society celebrated its jubilee on January 29 and 30. The first day was devoted to Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' and the second to English music selected from composers of the last half-century—Bennett, Cowen, Elgar, German, MacCunn, Parry, Prout and Walthew being represented. Mr. T. Henderson conducted.

Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Kreisler gave an extremely attractive pianoforte and violin recital on February 7.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company gave a fortnight's performances in Newcastle, beginning February 11. The revival of Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor' was the only departure from the usual répertoire.

The Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society will give a concert at Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, March 5, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Whittaker. The programme will include some of the best part-music by Brahms, Cornelius, and Elgar, in the interpretation of which this famous choir has made a great reputation.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting concert was given at the Thatched Assembly Room, Norwich, on January 24, by Mr. Arthur Bent's string orchestra. The first part comprised 'Symphonie Spirituelle' by Asger Hamerik, its first performance in England, Mendelssohn's Andante and Scherzo from the Octet, and Victor Herbert's 'Serenade.' Miss Eothen Colenso contributed two violoncello solos by L. Boëllmann and Benedetto Marcello respectively. Mr. Henry Boulderson, who made his first appearance here, sang several songs by Nevin, Cyril Scott, Hubert Parry, Battison Haynes, Stanford and Roger Quilter.

The Norwich Philharmonic Society gave its 116th concert at St. Andrew's Hall on February 7, when the principal attraction was Mr. Julian Clifford, who played Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, which was received with great applause. Various songs were contributed by the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford, including 'Der Hirt auf dem Felsen' (Schubert) and 'Spiagge Amate' (Gluck). The band, in addition to taking part in the Pianoforte concerto, played Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, the 'Jupiter' symphony, and the 'Meistersinger' overture.

The Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival Committee announce a special concert for April 18, when 'The Apostles' (Elgar) will be given, with Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Oliver, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Albert Garcia and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies in the principal parts. The London Symphony Orchestra has been specially engaged for this concert, which will be conducted by Dr. A. H. Mann, chorus-master of the Musical Festival.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Beeston Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on January 29, in which the choruses were given with great vigour and precision. The solos were well rendered by Miss Maggie Jaques, Mr. Charles Keywood and Mr. Fred Norcup. The work of band and chorus was ably directed by Mr. W. Thums.

Another suburban effort was the concert given by the Long Eaton Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Swift. Amongst other items mention may be made of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches and Weber's 'Invitation to the valse.' Very effective aid was given by the soloists, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Gwladys Roberts and Mr. Robert Radford.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic gave two favourite works at its second subscription concert on February 7—Handel's 'Acis' and Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis night.' The solos were ably rendered by Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Charles Knowles, while local talent was ably represented by Madame Ethel Dennis in the second work. The band and chorus did their share with taste and refinement, under the spirited guidance of Mr. Allen Gill, the band being under the leadership of Mr. Lyell Tayler.

Lovers of chamber music had a special treat in Miss Cantelo's programme on February 12. Schubert's 'Death and the maiden' quartet, Beethoven's Pianoforte and violoncello sonata (Op. 69), and Richard Strauss's Pianoforte quartet formed the programme, and were performed by the members of the Brodsky Quartet and Miss Cantelo with a care and precision that roused the audience to enthusiasm.

The Swineshead and District Choral Society gave a concert on February 6, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was rendered under the direction of Mr. G. H. Gregory. The soloists were Miss Gregory, Miss Mountain, Mr. Gregory and Mr. Thacker. The same programme was also given by the Kirton and District Choral Society. Mr. Gregory's Choral Class at Boston gave a concert on February 11 in the Shodfriars Hall, when the chief attraction was Sir Hubert Parry's attractive cantata 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.'

On February 15 a violin and vocal recital given by Miss Lake, vocal, and Miss Bisiaux, violin, at the Mechanics' Institute, attracted considerable attention on account of the excellence of the performance. Miss K. Cantelo ably accompanied the instrumental, and Mr. Swift the vocal numbers.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A competition festival held in the Montgomery Hall during the week commencing February 4 served an excellent purpose in revealing the latent musical ability which is within touch of the Sunday schools of the city. Promoted by the Sheffield Sunday School Union, an organization mainly connected with the Nonconformist churches of the city and district, the competition, which embraced a wide range of subjects, has done valuable work in stimulating interest in a class of music far above the average anniversary hymn and 'service of song.' The success of the festival fully justified the promoters in holding it.

The Wentworth Choral Society gave a successful concert on February 5, when Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' were capably performed under Mr. W. J. Dickie.

The Ecclesfield Choral Society performed 'Elijah' on February 11, under the direction of Mr. T. Brameld, who, despite the limited numbers of his choral forces, secured a creditable performance.

At the Chamber Music Society's concert on February 19, Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Septet performed Beethoven's Septet and Mozart's Pianoforte quintet in E flat. Among other events of the month may be mentioned a performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' at South Street School, under Mr. W. S. Skelton, and a rendering of Mendelssohn's 22nd Psalm at St. Mary's church. Mr. T. W. Hanforth's fortnightly organ recitals at the Parish church are becoming widely appreciated.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Chorus singers, particularly those who are not only members of the two principal choral societies, but are in the festival chorus (whose rehearsals have already begun under Mr. Fricker), have had a busy time lately, for in addition to all this work there has been the preparation for the visit to London of the Philharmonic Society on February 11, which, though not strictly music 'in' Yorkshire, is nearly allied thereto. In the way of actual performances there has not been much to chronicle, the chief choral concert having been a fine performance of Handel's 'Samson' by the Leeds Choral Union, under Dr. Coward, on January 23. The chorus was vigorous and often really impressive in its force and grandeur. The soloists were Miss d'Argo, Miss Frederica Richardson, Messrs. Turnpenny and Dan Price, all of whom sang well, while the two gentlemen succeeded in giving a dramatic interpretation of the music. The subscription concert on January 30 had a programme chosen by the subscribers from a list of selected orchestral works. There were two symphonies, Beethoven's Eighth and Schubert's 'Unfinished,' which were most beautifully played by the Hallé Orchestra under Dr. Richter's direction, and the Philharmonic chorus was heard in two pieces, Samuel Wesley's 'In exitu Israel,' admirably sung, and Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto and male-voice chorus. Unfortunately the Hon. Norah Dawnay, who has made quite a reputation by her singing of the solo part, was too unwell to be present, but an efficient substitute was found in a member of the chorus, Miss Susan Cover. The subscription concert on February 20 was of chamber music; the 'Kreutzer' sonata, played by Mr. John Dunn and Miss Fanny Davies, and a series of songs by Miss Agnes Nicholls were its distinguishing features.

If the Municipal Concerts have been of varying importance, that on February 9 was of exceptional interest. A young and clever local pianist, Miss Ella Child, essayed the solo part in Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto, and played it brilliantly, if she hardly realized its more impressive characteristics. The orchestra, under Mr. Fricker, accompanied her admirably, and played Smetana's charming symphonic poem 'Vltava' with finish and refinement. The Leeds Symphony Society, an orchestra of amateurs, gave a concert on January 29, the programme of which included Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, which was carefully played under the conductorship of Mr. A. Grimshaw. Cowen's 'Old English dances' proved one of the most enjoyable features of the concert.

There have been two excellent chamber concerts during the past month, both by local quartets, whose ambition, though great, does not outrun their discretion. On February 6 the Leeds Bohemian Quartet gave a finished performance of Debussy's remarkable Quartet in G minor, which they had played during a previous season, when it evoked such interest that it was wisely decided to repeat it before the first impression had worn off. Certainly its originality and the extraordinary sense of colour and atmosphere which the composer realizes were better appreciated on a second hearing. Brahms's A minor Quartet and one of Mozart's completed this interesting programme. On February 13 the Rasch Quartet, which is giving Beethoven's 'Posthumous' quartets in turn, gave a sympathetic and artistic reading of Op. 130, and, with Mr. Percy Richardson, gave Tchaikovsky's lengthy but always interesting Pianoforte trio in memory of Nicholas Rubinstein. That two such series of chamber concerts can meet with fair support is the most encouraging thing that has happened in Leeds music during the past twenty years. Mr. Edgar Haddock has also done something to make Beethoven's chamber music better known by a series of concerts, begun on February 5, at which he, with Mr. F. Sant-Angelo as pianist, is giving all the violin sonatas in order. Considering how the 'Kreutzer' seems to overshadow all the rest, there is the more reason for such an enterprise.

At one of the Musical Union Concerts, on January 21, Dr. Bairstow, acting at short notice as a substitute for Mr. Bell, the Society's conductor, directed a series of male-voice part-songs, prominent among which was Hegar's grimly suggestive 'Phantom host' and P. Scharwenka's setting of Hölderlin's 'Song of destiny,' as well as Elgar's fine series of part-songs on classical themes. Miss Janey Fyans made a very favourable impression by her artistic singing at this concert. At the Musical Evening on January 22, Brahms's first set of Liebeslieder was given, with Messrs. Lunn and Vincent at the pianoforte, while the vocal parts were sung by Miss Rich, Miss Hoole, Messrs. Burrows and Lycett. Mr. York Bowen's brilliant playing of some of his own pianoforte compositions was another feature of this concert. At the Musical Evening on February 19 Miss Marie Hall was the principal figure. The Moody-Manners Opera Company paid its annual visit to Leeds during the week beginning February 11, but produced no novelty, revivals of 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' and 'The Lily of Killarney' being the only departures from ultra-familiar grooves.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra, which is making a determined effort to attract the public without any loss of self-respect, seems to be in a fair way of accomplishing its aim, for a very large audience assembled on January 26 to hear a programme consisting mainly of Russian music. Tchaikovsky was, of course, much in evidence, and beyond such familiar things as the 'Pathetic' symphony (of which two movements were given) and the '1812' overture, we had the 'Voyevode' overture, and the waltz from the 'Sleeping beauty.' Rubinstein and Glazounow were the other Russians included in this interesting concert, which Mr. Allen Gill directed as ably as ever. On February 16 the programme, styled 'North and South,' included the impressive 'Finlandia' of Sibelius, one of Svendsen's Norwegian rhapsodies, Cherubini's 'Water carrier' overture, and Rossini's ever-fresh 'William Tell' overture. At the subscription concert on February 8 two modern quintets of exceptional interest were given—Brahms's Clarinet quintet, and Franck's Pianoforte quintet, of which exceedingly fine interpretations were given by the Brodsky Quartet, assisted by Mr. Mühlfeld as clarinettist and Mr. Egon Pétri as pianist. Mrs. Henry J. Wood's songs were a very agreeable feature of the concert. On February 15 the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, gave Elgar's 'King Olaf' and the third act of 'Tannhäuser.' The solo parts were ably rendered by Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Goodall, Messrs. J. Harrison and Ivor Foster, and the permanent orchestra sustained an important share in the performance with marked success. The 'Old' Choral Society, on February 19, revived Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron,' conducted by Mr. E. J. Pickles. The principals were Miss D'Argo, Mr. H. Beaumont and Mr. R. Burnett. On January 23 Mr. S. Midgley gave one of his interesting chamber concerts, the chief feature of the programme being Debussy's quartet, very artistically played by the Norah Clench Quartet, and on February 6 Mr. Rasch and Miss Mary Peddle gave a recital of violin and vocal music.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

At Hull the Symphony Orchestra has begun a second series of concerts. As the Orchestra is recruited from the bands of the local theatres and music-halls these must be afternoon concerts, but this is the chief limitation to their usefulness, and they have given some excellent programmes in a style reflecting very great credit on their trainer and conductor, Mr. Arthur Wallerstein. On January 31 Haydn's 'Bear' Symphony, with a Corelli concerto, the ballet music from Gluck's 'Orpheus,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien' formed the programme; on February 14 Beethoven's first Symphony, played with great crispness and energy, was sandwiched between pieces by Méhul, Purcell and Grieg.

York also boasts of a Symphony Orchestra, but as it is chiefly amateur in its composition, concerts require greater preparation, and cannot be so frequent. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, however, manages to get a great deal out of his players, and on February 11 they accompanied Mozart's E flat Pianoforte concerto (K. 271) and Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto admirably. The soloists were Miss Caroline Bigge, a thoroughly accomplished amateur pianist, and Mr. John Dunn. At the York chamber concert, on February 9, Miss Fanny Davies played Beethoven's too-seldom heard Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) with a warmth and power that were anything but effeminate, and Miss Helen Dalby sang songs in a pleasant, ingenuous style.

At the Wakefield chamber concert on January 31, Mr. Lamond's fine interpretation of Beethoven was very noteworthy, and Miss de Angelis was violinist. At the Harrogate Choral Society's concert on February 8, Mr. C. L. Naylor conducted a very effective performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride,' in which the solo parts were taken by Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Lloyd-Chandos and Mr. Dan Price.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

Baron Liliencron, the venerable president of the committee formed to prepare a Volksliederbuch, has handed a copy of the work to the Kaiser, at whose instigation it was undertaken. The vice-president, Prof. Dr. Max Friedländer, Prof. Kretschmar, Prof. Georg Schumann and other members of the committee, Dr. F. Hegar, director of the Vienna Male Choral Society, and Henry Henrichsen, the publisher of the work, were present. Baron Liliencron, now in his eighty-seventh year, addressed the Kaiser, who in return warmly expressed his thanks and spoke of the educational importance of folk-song.——On February 6 music-director Bernhard Irrgang gave his 450th organ recital at the Marienkirche, the programme including a new Fantasia by Mojslsovics. He has recently been appointed organist of the Kaiser-Wilhelm Memorial Church, in succession to the late Prof. Reimann.——After an absence of twenty-three years, Edvard Grieg will reappear in this city on April 12 at a concert of his own compositions, conduct the orchestra and play the pianoforte accompaniments to his songs. He will be assisted by Frau Ellen Gulbranson and the pianist Halfdan Cleve, in addition to Frau Rose Bertens, who will recite the text in his setting of Björnson's 'Bergliot.'

BONN.

Following the example of the Schumann Festival of last year, a similar tribute will be paid to Schubert in a series of performances of his music in May next, from the 5th to the 9th of the month.

COPENHAGEN.

A 'Review' Exhibition is to be opened here in May, of which musical periodicals from all parts of the world will form a special feature.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

Two changes have taken place in the teaching staff of the Hoch Conservatorium; Prof. Felix Berber and Prof. Alwin Schroeder from New York succeed Prof. Heermann and Prof. Hugo Becker as principal teachers respectively of the violin and the violoncello.

HEIDELBERG.

The Bach Society and the Musical Society jointly arranged two interesting historical concerts, in which Italian and German old masters of instrumental music before Bach and Handel were represented. The programme of the first performance included works by Vitali, Veracini, Corelli, and dell' Abaco.

LÜBECK.

Enrico Bossi's new opera, 'The traveller,' was performed here, and with marked success, under the direction of the composer's son.

MANNHEIM.

At the Jubilee Festival to be held here in May, under the direction of Peter Raabe, the importance of this city in the history of 18th century music is to be demonstrated. Johann Karl Stamitz will be represented by his 'Melodia Germanica' symphony and two orchestral trios, and Ignaz Holzbauer by his overture to 'Günther von Schwarzburg.' Stamitz, who died in 1761, wrote symphonies before Haydn. Of Holzbauer's work just mentioned, Mozart wrote to his father: 'The libretto of Holzbauer's opera is not worthy of the very beautiful music which he has set to it.'

MILAN.

Sonzogno, the well-known publisher, offers to the pupils of the Conservatorio of this city two prizes, one of £120 for the best symphony in four movements, the other of £80 for a choral cantata (voices only), the poem of which will be indicated. The jury consists of Arrigo Boito, Giuseppe Gallignani, director of the Conservatorio, Amintore Galli, and G. B. Nappi. The prize-works will be performed at the Festival celebrating the 100th anniversary of the foundation of the Conservatorio by Eugène Beauharnais in 1807.

MONTE CARLO.

Massenet's new two-act opera 'Thérèse' was produced here with brilliant success on February 8. The libretto is by Jules Claretie, the scene being laid in the time of the Revolution. The orchestration is said to be exquisite, and M. Massenet has added another triumph to his previous successes. The principal parts were splendidly interpreted, Mlle. Lucy d'Albell giving a superb rendering of the title-rôle; M. E. Clement displayed a voice of remarkable réfinement as the lover De Clerval, and M. Dufranne was admirable as the husband of Thérèse. M. Massenet was enthusiastically called at the end of the opera. This is the third opera by him produced at this theatre.

PARIS.

The Academy of Fine Arts has awarded the Rossini prize (poetry) of £120 to the poem 'Laure et Pétrarque,' by MM. Fernand Beissier and Eugène Adenis. The same sum is offered for the best setting of this poem in the competition for the Rossini musical prize. The last day for sending in manuscripts is December 31.——It is rumoured that after all Strauss's 'Salome' will not be given at the Grand Opéra, but at the Gaité, of which the brothers Isola are directors.——M. Henri Maréchal has just published a book entitled 'Paris, souvenirs d'un musicien,' in which are to be found interesting and curious details concerning Auber, Berlioz, Bizet, and other composers, recalling—to quote the words of M. Arthur Pougin—'a musical past which remains brilliant and glorious, notwithstanding the strange opinions expressed by critics and by pedants and impotent folk of the present day.'——The musical committee, consisting of MM. Bourgault-Ducoudray, A. Bruneau, G. Fauré, V. d'Indy, G. Pierné, and others, request French and other composers to submit to them unpublished instrumental and vocal works for the programmes of the forthcoming Salon d'Automne. Manuscripts will be received up to May 15 by M. Armand Parent, 37, Rue de l'Université, Paris.——January 31 was the last date for sending in manuscripts for the international competition organized by the publisher Gabriel Astruc, under the patronage of Prince Albert de Monaco, M. Henry Deutsch, and the Société des grandes auditions. No fewer than 300 manuscripts were sent in.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Abergavenny.—A successful concert was given by the Choral Society on February 12, when Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and a miscellaneous selection were performed, the latter including Elgar's part-song 'As torrents in summer' and Mozart's motet 'Glory, honour, praise, and power.' The solo vocalists were Madame M. Loveless, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. A. M. Proctor. The conductor was Mr. W. R. Carr.

Alton.—The Choral Society gave a performance of 'Smart's Bride of Dunkerron' on February 7. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Montague Borwell and Mr. Holloway. The choir sang with spirit and expression, and the accompaniments were played by a small but efficient orchestra. Mr. James Everitt was the conductor. The second part included the 'Figaro' overture and two part-songs 'Homeward' (Henry Leslie) and 'If I had but two little wings' (C. Hubert H. Parry).

Blackburn.—Mr. J. F. Barnett's cantata 'The wishing bell' was the chief feature in the programme of the Ladies' Choir concert given in the Town Hall on January 28, the solo parts being ably sustained by Miss Grace Shorrock and Mr. Herbert Sagar. The choir also sang German's 'Orpheus with his lute,' 'In a year' (Felix Woyrsch), Weelkes's madrigal 'The nightingale,' and 'Baby asleep,' by Frederic H. Wood, which was given for the first time. Violin solos were contributed by Miss Kitty Redfern, and Miss F. Duckworth was an able accompanist. Mr. F. Duckworth conducted.

Boscombe.—The St. Clement's Choral Society gave its third annual concert in the Assembly Rooms on February 5. The chief features of the evening were Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' (solo, Miss Grace Hudson) and MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's daughter.' The choir, numbering seventy voices, sang well and there was an efficient orchestra. The part-music included 'The swallow' (Leslie), 'The coralled caves of ocean' (Smart)—for ladies' voices, 'Who is Sylvia?' (German) and 'Three doughtie men' (Pearson). Mr. J. V. Marsh conducted.

Cardiff.—The Cardiff Male-Voice Choir and Harmonic Societies (combined) gave a very fine performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and David's 'The Desert' in the Park Hall on February 13. The singing of the choir was notable for its intonation, precision and light and shade, and reflected great credit on the training of Mr. Roderick Williams, who conducted. The solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis, Mrs. Swinton and Mr. Ben Davies.

Caterham.—The Choral Society gave its thirty-eighth concert on January 23, Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' forming the main part of the programme. The choir sang with good attack and intonation throughout, reflecting much credit on their trainer, Mr. Charles Hunt, who conducted. The solo vocalists were Miss Phillips, Miss Holderness, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. David Brazell. There was a small string orchestra and Miss Vera Curtis presided at the pianoforte.

Chippenham.—The new Choral Society made its first appearance at the Town Hall on February 11, when Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was the chief feature of the programme. The choir and orchestra consisted of 100 performers and gave a good account of themselves under Mr. W. R. Pullein's conductorship.

Christchurch (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave performances of the 'Messiah' in His Majesty's Theatre on December 20 and 21. Both choir and orchestra rendered excellent service, and the solo vocalists were Mrs. Gower Burns, Mrs. E. E. Barber, Mr. Frank Graham and Mr. A. Millar. Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted. The retirement of Mr. Thomas Garrard, who has performed with enthusiasm the duties of hon. secretary and treasurer for sixteen years, has caused much regret.

Eccles (Manchester).—The Monton Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on February 20, when Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Parry's 'Pied piper' were performed. The choir sang with spirit and intelligence. The orchestra was heard to great advantage in a Scherzo Chromatique by Mauritz Speelman and German's 'Henry VIII. Dances.' The solo vocalists were Miss Dora Chenery, Miss Nellie Pollitt, Mr. Tom Owen and Mr. Albert Garcia. Mr. Herbert S. Rowley conducted.

Greenock.—An admirable performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was given by the Choral Union on February 19 under the direction of Mr. W. T. Hoeck. The choir sang with much spirit, and the orchestra—a contingent of the Scottish Orchestra—did good service. Miss Ellen Verrinder, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Herbert Brown interpreted the solo parts.

Haydon Bridge.—Mackenzie's cantata 'The Bride' was the principal feature of the concert given by the Choral Society on February 7. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' Barnby's 'Sweet and low' and Francesco Berger's 'Night, lovely night' were also well sung by the choir. Mr. Crozier's string quartet played the accompaniments. The solo vocalists were Madame Maggie Matthews and Mr. Davidson. Mr. Batman, who conducted, is to be congratulated on his successful training of the choir.

Horsham.—The Horsham Musical Society gave its first concert of the season on January 23 at the Assembly Rooms. The programme consisted of Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' Stanford's 'Songs of the sea,' Elgar's part-song 'The snow,' and the Pavane and Nocturne from German's 'Romeo and Juliet' music. The soloists were Miss Fanny Chetham and Mr. Graham Smart. There was an excellent orchestra, and Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

Invercargill (N.Z.).—An oratorio festival was given by the Musical Union at the Municipal Theatre in December, the 'Creation' being performed on the 13th, and the 'Messiah' on the 14th, with marked success, the choir winning special honours. The solo vocalists in the two works were Miss Amy Murphy, Miss Violet McIntosh, Mr. A. S. Cookson and Mr. J. E. Taylor. The orchestra was led by Mr. W. J. Ferguson and Mr. Charles Gray was the conductor.

Ipswich.—The annual concert of the Choral Society took place on January 31, when Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed. The choir sang with excellent tone and attack throughout, and the orchestra gave a spirited rendering of the accompaniments. The solo parts were sung by Madame Julian Clifford, Miss Marie Stiven, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. A. H. Welburn and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. W. Hockey, who conducted, was deservedly complimented on the general excellence of the performance.

Llanelly.—The Tabernacle Choir gave an excellent performance of Costa's oratorio 'Eli' on February 5. The soloists were Miss May John, Miss Rachel Thomas, Messrs. Richard Thomas, G. T. Llewelyn and David Hughes. An efficient orchestra assisted under Mr. Hulley, Miss Blodwen Davies being at the organ. Mr. C. Meudwy Davies conducted.

Luton.—The second concert this season by the Choral Society took place in the Waller Street Plait Hall on February 6, when Parry's 'Pied piper' was succesfully performed, the choir entering fully into the humour of the music and poem. The parts of the Piper and the Mayor were ably sung by Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Wallace Leppard. In addition to these artists, Miss Perceval Allen took part in the miscellaneous selection, the choir singing the 'Spinning chorus' from the 'Flying Dutchman' and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah chorus.' Mr. Gostelow was the conductor.

Malvern Link.—The programme of the Musical Society's concert at the Church Institute on February 1 comprised as its chief feature Sullivan's cantata 'On shore and sea,' other choral music being Gade's 'Spring's message,' 'The snow' (Elgar), and 'The blackbird's song' and 'In absence' (Dudley Buck). The work of the orchestra, which was excellent, included Suppé's 'Poet and peasant' overture and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march. Mr. Harvey conducted.

Midsomer Norton.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' in the Town Hall on January 28. In attack and phrasing the choir was particularly good, and it was also heard with effect in Sullivan's 'O hush thee, my babie,' Gaul's 'Daybreak' and Benedict's 'Home'; the male voices also singing 'The young musician,' by John Thatcher, and Hatton's 'When evening's twilight.' Mr. George Gay sang the tenor solo in the cantata, and the other vocalist was Miss Eveline Gerrish. Mr. W. J. Kidner conducted.

Newark.—The annual concert of the Philharmonic Society took place in the Town Hall on February 1, when 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' was the principal feature of attraction. Both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves admirably under the conductorship of Mr. W. T. Wright. Mr. James Davis sang the tenor solo.

Newcastle (Staffs).—The Male-Voice Glee Union gave a concert on February 8 in the Municipal Hall, its contributions including Horley's 'By Celia's arbour,' Maunder's 'Thor's war song,' 'Peter Piper' by Hutchins Lewis, and a new part-song by the conductor, Mr. S. E. Lovatt, entitled 'When thou art nigh,' which was warmly encored. The soloists were Madame Dews and Mr. W. Sweetman (vocalists) and Mr. Edward de Jong (flautist). Mr. Ernest Hammond accompanied.

Ottery St. Mary.—The opening concert of the season was given by the Choral Society on January 23. Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Grieg's 'Two Elegiac melodies' (Op. 34) for strings formed the main features of the programme. The soloists were Miss Evelyn Cade and Mr. Rowland Huyshe. Miss Rose Lansdown was leader of the band and Mr. Stanley Chipperfield conducted.

Pentre (Glam.).—The newly-formed Moriah Choral Society made its first appearance on February 2, and gave an intelligent performance of 'Judas Maccabæus.' The soloists were Madame J. Thomas, Miss Eva Hall, Messrs. R. Thomas and D. Davies. Mr. D. Jones was at the pianoforte and the orchestral accompaniments were excellently played by a section of Mr. Percie G. Smith's orchestra. Mr. O. T. Jones conducted.

Perth.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' at the City Hall on February 14. The choir sang well and with good articulation, and there was an efficient orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Chrissie Macdiarmid, Mr. J. F. S. Adams and Mr. Marcus Thomson. Mr. F. S. Graves was the conductor.

Rye.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and Bennett's 'May Queen' at the Monastery on January 29. The choir sang steadily and with good attack and was accompanied by a small orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Dixon, Lady Maud Warrender, Mr. Murray Rumsey and Mr. A. T. Hinds. Mr. W. Sprigg Walker was the conductor.

Smethwick.—Coleridge-Taylor's trilogy 'Scenes from the song of Hiawatha' (complete) was performed by the Choral Society on January 28. The choir sang admirably throughout (a noticeable point being excellent enunciation) and the orchestra gave efficient support. The solo vocalists were Madame Laura Taylor, Mr. W. J. Otley and Mr. J. Coleman. Mr. W. J. Peters, the conductor, is to be congratulated on an all-round good performance.

Thirsk.—Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' was performed by the Choral Society in the Public Rooms on January 22. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Breare, Mr. Edwin Morgan and Mr. H. Ward Kemp. The choir was well balanced and sang with spirit, and the orchestra was fully efficient. The performance was directed by Mr. A. J. Todd.

Timperley.—Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' received a capable rendering by the Vocal Society under the direction of Mr. H. Mozart Sheaves on January 28. The programme also included the following part-music: Macfarren's 'You stole my love,' Löhr's 'Slumber song,' Pinsuti's 'In this hour of softened splendour,' and Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land' and 'Spanish serenade.' The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Wilkinson and Mr. John L. Lowe, and Mr. Cochrane played two violin solos.

Toronto.—Two concerts were given by the National Chorus of Toronto, in Massey Hall, on January 14 and 15, under the conductorship of Dr. Albert Ham. The principal choral work was Frederic Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind.' This fine cantata was admirably rendered, and it was received with enthusiasm. Unaccompanied pieces by Elgar, Damrosch and Rogers were also delightfully sung by the choir. A great feature of the programmes was the excellent performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony, and of compositions by Saint-Saëns, Wagner, Lalo and Goldmark, by the New York Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Walter Damrosch.

Wells.—The Musical Association, under the conductorship of the Rev. Dr. Davis, gave an excellent performance of the first two scenes of 'Hiawatha' on February 12. The singing of the choir displayed an intelligent appreciation of the dramatic qualities of the work. The solos were undertaken by Madame Eva Hartshorne, Mr. Walter Heal and Mr. Frank Baber, all of Bristol, Mr. Heal's rendering of 'Onaway! awake, beloved' meeting with special recognition. In the miscellaneous second part Miss Averil Woodward played, with Dr. Davis, Bach's Sonata in A major for violin and pianoforte in a highly finished manner, and the orchestra contributed an able rendering of the overture to 'Ruy Blas.'

West Hartlepool.—The Lyric Male-Voice Choir gave its annual concert in the Town Hall on January 30, the performances including C. H. Lloyd's cantata 'The Longbeards' Saga,' and Dudley Buck's cantata 'King Olaf's Christmas,' also the part-songs 'Hunting song' and 'Vintage song' (Mendelssohn), 'O peaceful night' (Edward German) and 'Sailors' chorus' (Joseph Parry). The soloists were Miss Majorie Eaton and Mr. Austin Mahony (vocalists), and Herr Floris Ondricek (violinist). Mr. E. V. Pickersgill conducted.

Whitehaven.—The Orchestral Society gave its annual concert on February 15, in the Oddfellows' Hall. The orchestra, conducted by Mr. William Gray, played the overtures 'Rosamunde' and 'Raymond,' the 'Tannhäuser march,' and German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances. The vocalist was Miss Marjorie Eaton, who was very successful, and Mr. Arthur Broadley played two violoncello solos with marked ability.

Worthing.—The Choral Society held its annual concert on February 20, when Handel's 'Samson' was performed. The chorus and orchestra did excellently under the conductorship of Mr. F. D. Carnell. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Patching, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Dan Price.

The following appointments have recently been made at Trinity College of Music: Mr. Emil Kreuz, conductor of the orchestra; Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, professor of composition; and Mr. Charles Fry, professor of elocution.

Elgar's 'The Apostles' and Gounod's 'Redemption' are announced to be performed at St. Petersburg by the Kaiserl. Hof-Sängercapelle under the direction of Count A. D. Scheremetjeff.

Mr. Oscar Beringer recently delivered at the Royal Academy of Music—of which he is an esteemed professor—two interesting and amusing lectures on 'Fifty years' experience in pianoforte playing and teaching.'

Mr. Richard Temple has been appointed director of the dramatic class and professor of elocution and diction at the Royal Academy Music.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie delivered two interesting and instructive lectures at the Royal Institution, on January 21 and 28, on 'The latest phases of modern music.'

The Tatler of February 20 contains an article by Sir Alexander Mackenzie on 'A day in my life,' and one by Dr. F. H. Cowen on 'Are we growing more musical?'

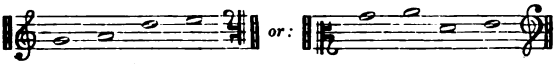
The Musical Directory for 1907 is an indispensable book of reference published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

Answers to Correspondents.

I. S.—In regard to getting the boy in whom you are interested into a choir, where he would 'be educated, clothed, and boarded,' we can only suggest that you should watch the advertisements in the columns of the musical journals, and write to the organists of those cathedrals and collegiate chapels to which are attached choir schools. In many cases, however, some payment by parents or guardians is necessary.

REX.—The organist of Gloucester Cathedral in the year 1840 was John Amott, who held that office from 1832 to 1865, the year of his death. He was succeeded by Dr. S. S. Wesley. Amott was one of the compilers of the 'Annals of the Three Choirs,' a book, in a revised and enlarged edition, which can be obtained from the publishers, Messrs. Chance & Bland, Gloucester.

SOLO BOY.—Yes, Gade is a composer whose name can be expressed in musical notation, and in such a manner as to be read upside down, or downside up. Here it is:



Take your choice, little man!

C. J. P.—The 'Musicians' Birthday Book' you want is probably 'The Music of the Poets,' compiled by Eleanore d'Esterre-Keeling, revised edition, dated 1897. The publishers, The Walter Scott Company, Limited, Paternoster Square, would tell you whether the book is procurable or not.

J. A. F.—(1) The following are settings of 'Little Bo-Peep': a unison song by J. W. Elliott (Novello), and a four-part song by Harry Dancey (Ashdown); (2) The only setting of the trio in 'The Winter's Tale' that we know is by Mr. Arthur Fox (in MS.), which he composed for Mr. Charles Fry's Recitals.

CONDUCTOR.—The new edition of Köchel's Mozart Catalogue can be obtained from Messrs. Novello, price about 25*s*., also Mozart's string quintets and quartets, both in score and arranged for pianoforte solo. Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' is published by Messrs. Chappell & Co., with French and English text, price 5*s*.

E. V. S.—As in this country there is no authority in these matters, it is not possible to say that any one method of pronouncing Latin in singing is 'correct.' Most singers use the modern Italian vowels, and generally pronounce Latin as though it were modern Italian.

H. M.—Illustrated articles on four of the five cathedrals you name have appeared in these columns, namely Chester, January, 1904; Gloucester, July, 1905; Norwich, November, 1904; Worcester, November, 1905. The fifth, Manchester, is in contemplation.

J. L.—Your question is a little vague. You ask for 'information as regards the advantages of a paid conductor in church and chapel choirs.' Do you mean musical, pecuniary, social, or theological? It is possible that all the advantages may be combined, especially the theological.

BARITONE.—The tune 'Down among the dead men' is found in vol. iii. of 'The Dancing Master' (1728) and in Walsh's 'Dancing Master,' vol. iii., circa 1730. It has every claim to be regarded as 'Old English' and as a 'lively air.'

J. E.—The ills that affect the voice are so numerous we feel it might be dangerous to attempt to advise you merely on the strength of what you say. You should personally consult a voice specialist.

E. B. W.—We regret to be unable so far to trace the carol from the clues you send. Cannot you supply us with the first verse, or the name of the composer?

E. A. Y.—Lincoln's Inn Chapel has not yet been treated in our illustrated series, but it may be at some future time. Thanks for the suggestion.

R. B.—Hulbert's 'Breathing for Voice Production,' Novello's Music Primers, No. 63, will no doubt help you.

TEACHER.—We cannot recommend 'teachers' agencies.'

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

INTRODUCTION
AND ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for he orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

No. 1. Price One Shilling. No. 2. Price One Shilling.
No. 3. Price Two Shillings.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. Three numbers are to hand. No. 1, a beautiful Allegretto Pastorale; No. 2, comprising two movements, Communion and Allegretto; and No. 3, comprising six Andante movements, all written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the slow movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S
PASSION SERVICE*
FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

In this product Mr. Gaul has the advantage of an open field, till very recently closed almost entirely to the Anglican Church composer; so that at the outset his work claims the merit of distinctiveness. The text of Mr. Gaul's work, varied and elaborate in structure, is the compilation of the Rev. J. C. Blissard, author at the same time of the original lyrical portions of the work. The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes,' the literary construction of these being similar in plan throughout, but each preserving its own separate unity and point of narrative or dramatic interest. The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: "The Traitor at the Table," "The Denial," "The Condemnation before Pilate," "The Mockery on Calvary," "The Shadow of Death," and "The Holy Sepulchre." Each comprises a prophetic portion (the words selected from those passages of Holy Writ "foreshadowing" the event), and preceded by a short choral, which is retained unaltered throughout the work; a narrative portion dealing with the especial event, and what may be termed the lyrical epode, a hymn embodying the subjective reflection on the preceding passages, and in which the whole congregation is supposed to take part. The author has executed the compilation and versification with commendable judgment and skill. As regards the composer's share in the work, it must be noted, in the first place, that whilst endeavouring to illustrate in the best manner possible the outward course of the events, the dramatic element, properly so-called, has been carefully kept out of the work. Individual characterization has been avoided by allotting the different solo musical passages without regard to any representative character. This arrangement has no doubt been prompted by judicious reasons, and there is much to be urged in its favour. Mr. Gaul has adopted the arioso style of musical setting for the solo portions of his work. In certain parts, as in the melodious solo, "Blessed are the departed," the writing approaches the ordinary aria form, but in general the more declamatory style is preserved. There is no imitation of archaic forms in either melodies or harmony, and in the descriptive episodes the composer has not been tempted into theatrical exaggeration in order to secure dramatic effect. The style of the composition, in short, resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the "Holy City" and other of the composer's works. Among the items which impressed us most favourably was the chorus, "The fining-pot is for silver," the beautiful choral passage "Watch and pray," the whole of the choral passages of the Condemnation scene (the original treatment of this scene evades any comparison with the part of the Passion music of other writers); the contralto air, "Oh, hear ye this, all ye people"; the fine chorus, "Consider this," the culminating point of the scene on Calvary; the trio for soprano, tenor, and bass, "Thou hidest Thy face, O Lord"; the quartet, "Hath God forgotten to be gracious"; the strikingly effective chorus, "God is not a man that He should lie"; the solo before mentioned, "Blessed are the departed," with its choral appendage (soli quartet); and last, but not least in merit, the fine setting of Adelaide Procter's lines, "Why should'st thou fear the beautiful angel Death," full like the poem of a sweet, subdued, delicious calm. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for Mr. Blissard's lyrics: the tunes selected for this occasion were from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's work will undoubtedly greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC

Edited by W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	Arne.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY	English Air.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY	John Davy.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST	Mendelssohn.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN	English Air.
	AULD LANG SYNE	Scotch Air.
5.	THE ASH GROVE	Welsh Air.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH	Welsh Air.
6.	THE ARETHUSA	Shield.
	THE MINSTREL BOY	Irish Air.
7.	FAIREST ISLE	Purcell.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha)	Handel.
8.	HEART OF OAK	Dr. W. Boyce.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	Irish Air.

The above are all very simply arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER ON THE CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemplative than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—compiled with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautifu and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

THREE ELIZABETHAN PASTORALS

1. AN IDYLL.
2. AMONGST THE WILLOWS.
3. THE MORRIS DANCE.

COMPOSED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, each, Two Shillings.
Full Score and Orchestral parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

Dr. Brewer was represented by "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," sung by Mr. John Coates with such admirable effect that the last had to be repeated. This, a description of a Morris dance, is an enchanting picture of a country merry-making, set to some excellent anonymous words, which are probably old. "An Idyll" and "Amongst the Willows" are also beautiful in a more romantic vein, and the three songs are as good in their way as anything the composer has done They are sure to become widely popular wherever bright songs with orchestral accompaniment are required.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In these little pieces, composed for tenor voice and orchestra, Dr. Brewer has opened up fresh ground, and shown a pretty talent for imitating the antique. The lyrics, by an old and anonymous author, are quaint and characteristic, while the music happily reflects their spirit and adapts itself to their form. All are charming, but the one most in favour this evening was "The Morris Dance," a very sprightly effusion which, encored at rehearsal, had to be repeated this evening.

MORNING POST.

Delicate and pleasing vocal pieces, which imparted a welcome lightness to the programme. They were sung by Mr. John Coates. The first, "An Idyll," proved the best in design, though the last won so much approval as to necessitate its repetition.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. John Coates sang three Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, composed for this Festival and conducted by the composer. Dr. Brewer has exactly hit off the sense of sixteenth-century music, and the Idyll which begins the series is exceedingly pretty, and was sung beautifully. Perhaps the best of the three was the "Morris Dance."

THE ATHENÆUM.

The first two of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," composed by Dr. Herbert Brewer, are dainty, but the third, "The Morris Dance," is specially characteristic, and the accompaniment has been cleverly scored.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Brewer contributed a set of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," entitled respectively "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance." The quaint words, culled from a collection of Elizabethan lyrics, have suggested music whose lightness and fancy happily reflect their character. All three have genuine charm, but the daintiness of the quaint "Morris Dance," if not matchless, could not easily be matched for its daintiness and quaint humour, which, admirably interpreted by Mr. John Coates, so exhilarated the audience that a repetition was inevitable.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, were sung by Mr. John Coates. They are also well-written pieces. The last of the three, a Morris Dance, is very effective. Mr. Brewer evidently knows how to write for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A trio of dainty Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Herbert Brewer is clever and charming. The first, entitled "An Idyll," has a quiet lyrical grace. The last, "The Morris Dance," is riotously spirited, and was encored.

HEREFORD TIMES.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," written for the Festival by Dr. Herbert Brewer, proved very attractive, and were much appreciated. They are light in character, but quite charming in their picturesque and dainty treatment. "The Morris Dance" is the most striking of the three, as there is real fibre and character in it, the quaint dance being charmingly treated both vocally and instrumentally.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

Mr. Brewer made a distinct hit with his three songs. They are bright, tuneful, and at the same time scholarly. . . . Of the three songs "The Morris Dance" aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience, though that might well have been because admiration had been pent up till the trio was completed.

THE TRIBUNE.

London Symphony Concert, Queen's Hall.—Mr. Coates, besides singing "From boyhood trained," from "Oberon," with fine vigour and much vocal skill, was wisely inspired to bring forward the "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," by Dr. A. H. Brewer, which were produced at the Hereford Festival last year. They are, indeed, little masterpieces of fresh melody.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS

AND

HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

TECHNIQUE

AND EXPRESSION

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

TO MUSIC MASTERS
AND TEACHERS OF THE VIOLIN.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

MODERN VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS

suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

"Mr. Samuel Masters possesses a remarkably fine voice of extraordinary power. His ringing top A's, which were produced without effort, completely filled the large hall, and undoubtedly Mr. Masters is one of the finest tenors ever heard in St. Albans. Anything more beautiful could hardly be imagined than his magnificent rendering of 'Sound an alarm,' while very artistic was his treatment of 'Call forth thy powers' and 'How vain is man.'"—Hertfordshire Mercury, April 26, 1906.

Wigan and District Philharmonic Society ("Judas Maccabæus").

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang with dramatic skill and fire; his upper notes are full and telling and of fine power. He aroused the enthusiastic feelings of his audience by his powerful declamation in 'Sound an alarm,' while the beauty of his voice was well brought out in 'How vain is man.'"—The Wigan Observer, December 29, 1906.

Leicester New Musical Society ("Jephtha").

"Mr. Samuel Masters' rendering of the music allotted to Jephtha was of a high order of artistic accomplishment. It reached its highest level in the dramatic recitative 'Deeper and deeper still' and the favourite air 'Waft her, angels,' which was beautifully sung. He also gave a spirited rendering of 'His mighty arm' and the difficult air 'Open thy marble jaws.'"—Leicester Daily Post, December 11, 1906.

(BARITONE)

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"SAMSON." Coleraine, March 4, 1907.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, now a great favourite in Coleraine, as elsewhere, added to his former laurels as an oratorio baritone singer. In the music of Harapha, the Philistine braggart, he was better than we have heard him ever before in any work, and as the father of the downfallen Samson, he sang the music of Manoah with great pathos and nobility of expression. He has the deeply emotional gift, a rare and enviable one. His voice is finer, more powerful, true in intonation, and his whole art finer than before. A great future is before this vocalist, who will certainly do most ambitious and remarkable work some of these days. Already he stands in the front rank of contemporaries in his line. In opera, we surmise, would lie his real opportunities. There he would be free and expansive, vocally and histrionically fit. In the well-known 'Honour and Arms,' a much-abused air received a fresh and vivid rendering. His recitative style ranks with that of the finest traditions: nothing could well be finer, and he succeeded in galvanising THE STEREOTYPED PHRASES into renewed life and significance. He had a very eulogistic reception."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 6, 1907.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),

Soloist Leeds Musical Festivals, and of the leading English and Scotch Concerts. Extensive répertoire of over 120 works.

Elgar's "APOSTLES," Leeds Choral Union, with Henry J. Wood's Orchestra.—"Mr. John Browning gave a thoroughly artistic reading of the part of St. Peter; warm, yet reticent in expression."—Yorkshire Post, March 14, 1907.

Newport Male-Voice Choir.—"Mr. John Browning has a voice of pleasing quality, and sings like an artist. . . . . interpretation was magnificent . . . . fully deserved encore . . . . will be a pleasure to hear him again."—South Wales Argus, March 15, 1907.

Bach's "Bide with us," and Selections.—"Mr. John Browning, always a welcome vocalist, maintained his enviable reputation by his fine singing of the aria 'Mighty Lord,' from 'Christmas Oratorio.'"—Sheffield Telegraph, March 20, 1907.

"Mr. John Browning's finest effort of the evening was his rendering of the great aria, 'Mighty Lord.' The well-known Yorkshire Bass was heard to exceptional advantage in this, and the enjoyment of the solo was enhanced by the fine trumpet obbligato."—Sheffield Independent, March 20, 1907.

Address—Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

Of the London and principal Provincial Concerts.
(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

"Messiah" (at Ripon Cathedral).—"Mr. J. Coleman, the bass, has a voice of exceedingly good quality, round and resonant, and he uses it artistically, without any suspicion of forcing. His singing was throughout very pleasant to listen to."—Yorkshire Post, Dec. 28, 1906.

"Hiawatha."—"One could scarcely wish for a finer interpretation than Mr. Coleman's. Pure vocalization, perfect articulation, and a thorough appreciation of the meaning of both words and music are characteristics of his singing, and all these qualities were in evidence throughout his performance."—Smethwick Telephone, Feb., 1907.

"Bride of Dunkerron."—"Mr. J. Coleman quite took the honours of the evening. He is the possessor of a bass voice of great power, range and cultivation, and he certainly put it to the best use in his portion of the programme."—Burton Chronicle, March, 1907.

"Elijah."—"Of the principals, Mr. J. Coleman, Lichfield Cathedral's Vicar-Choral, gave undoubtedly the most commanding renderings in his dramatic portrayal of the part of the Prophet. The natural ease and fervent impressiveness with which his voice is characterized, are features as conspicuous as they are remarkable."—Tamworth Mercury, Feb., 1907.

"Faust."—"Mr. J. Coleman, who is greatly admired in this district for his magnificent rendering of 'Caractacus' last season, was equally successful in the totally different music of 'Mephisto.' . . . There ought to be a great future before this young artist."—Warwick Circular, Dec. 20, 1906.

"Samson."—"Mr. J. Coleman made his début in this district, and undoubtedly it will not be his last. He has a fine bass voice, and his rendering of 'Honour and Arms' was indeed a musical treat, and he thoroughly deserved the enthusiastic plaudits which followed."—Shrewsbury News, Feb., 1907.

Address:—"Charlemont," Lichfield.

TECHNIQUE
AND
IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING
BY
FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. LORD COLERIDGE, M.A., K.C.
Warden:
EDMUND H. TURPIN, MUS.D.

April 29. The SUMMER TERM begins.

The College provides COMPLETE and SYSTEMATIC INDIVIDUAL INSTRUCTION, and training in every recognized Musical Subject.

Students are received for Single Subjects or the Full Course.

The Fees are £3 3s. for Instrumental or Vocal Subjects, and £1 11s. 6d. for Theoretical Subjects.

All Students are additionally entitled to attend the Orchestral, Chamber Music and Choral Classes, and Lectures on Musical Subjects.

In the JUNIOR SCHOOL Pupils are admitted up to the age of 15, and the fee is £1 11s. 6d. per Term, for Instrumental or Vocal subjects.

There is a SPECIAL COURSE of LECTURES on the ART OF TEACHING given on Wednesday afternoons during Term time. Students may enter for special tuition in this subject or for lessons by correspondence. The class for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS meets on Saturdays, and is intended for Students desirous of obtaining not only general instruction, but also practical experience in the Art of Teaching as applied to Music.

STUDENTS' CONCERTS are given frequently.

May 22. The last day of entry for the MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE (Theory) Examination, which takes place on June 22.

June 1. Last day of entry for FIFTEEN SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits. In exceptional cases a grant towards maintenance is made.

June 24. Last day of entry for the Higher Examinations for TEACHERS' DIPLOMAS in both Theoretical and Practical Subjects, taking place on and after July 22.

Prospectus, including particulars of Scholarships, and Examination Syllabuses on application.

By order, SHELLEY FISHER, Secretary.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

Here, where the end of earthly things
Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings;
Where stiff the hand and still the tongue
Of those who fought, and spoke, and sung;
Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
The distant notes of holy song,
As if some angel spoke again,
'All peace on earth, good will to men.'

Walter Scott.

That antique pile behold
Where royal heads receive the sacred gold:
It gives them crowns, and does their ashes keep;
There made like gods, like mortals there they sleep,
Making the circle of their reign complete,
Those suns of empire, where they rise they set.

Edmund Waller.

Of all the beautiful cathedrals and abbeys in this fair land of ours none can compare with the stately fane of Westminster. Why? Because, by reason of its national character, its historical associations, its architectural splendour, its illustrious dead, and its musical interest, this noble pile is facile princeps among English churches.

As in all ancient ecclesiastical foundations, the Abbey is not without its traditions of origination. Looking through the mists of these traditions we see the bright light of fact in that Edward the Confessor destroyed the then existing buildings and reared, on Thorney Island, the first Abbey worthy of the name of Westminster. Thorney Island was an almost insulated peninsula of dry sand and gravel, girt on one side by the Thames and on the other side by the marshes formed by the little stream Eye (now a sewer)—which gave its name to Tyburn (Th' Eye Burn)—before it fell into the river. This fine Norman building of Edward the Confessor was the first cruciform church erected in England, and it covered nearly the whole of the ground occupied by the present edifice. Its foundation stone was laid in 1049 and the consecration took place on December 28, 1065, eight days before the death of the king. The Saxon Chronicle thus records the great event: 'In this year [1065] was hallowed the Minster at Westminster on Childermas Day [December 28]. And King Edward died on the eve of Twelfth Mass and was buried on the Twelfth Mass Day within the newly hallowed church.' Not, however, until the year 1163 did the Abbey due to Edward the Confessor reach completion; even then it lacked the Lady Chapel, which was added in 1220.

The present Abbey Church of Westminster owes its inception to the art-loving King Henry III. He not only showered gifts upon the Abbey—silver vessels for the chrism; banners, baudekins, and other hangings (one to be hung opposite the organs); a cloth, 12 ft. by 6 ft., to be broidered with pearls, representing images from the Bible, and so on—but in 1241 he began to erect a new golden shrine for Edward the Confessor, his special patron, and by the side of whose body he ordained by charter that he should be buried. No doubt exists as to the actual date when the building of the present church was actually begun. 'The king caused the greater part of the Conventual Church of the Blessed Peter to be pulled down, beginning on the day week after the feast of the Apostles Peter and Paul.' Thus wrote two trustworthy scribes in the year 1245; therefore work was begun on July 6, 1245, directly after the annual feast of the patron of the church, for from earliest times St. Peter has been associated with Westminster, the West Minster, as St. Paul has with the metropolitan church standing on the hill of Ludgate. And here it may be remarked that in olden times, until the Reformation, the Abbey formed the church of the Benedictine monastery of Westminster. Moreover, the king's palace was in the immediate vicinity, Windsor Castle and St. George's Chapel furnishing a present-day analogy to the Westminster of days gone by. Among 'petty works' done at the palace in 1259 was 'cutting away for altering the king's chimney,' for which Robert de Beverley, the mason, was paid 3*s.* a week, while the ordinary cutters and bedders—one of them named Fairwife—received a weekly wage of 2*s.* 2*d.* These craftsmen were also engaged upon the construction of the Abbey. Another reference to the palace and we must hasten on. In 1262 Henry III. ordered pear trees to be planted in 'the herbary between the king's chamber and the church,' doubtless that his majesty might look upon the fruit of his fancy and munificence over a bank of blossom.

The eastern part of the Abbey (except Henry VII.'s chapel) and the first four bays of the western portion beyond the transepts were built, in the later phase of Early English, by Henry III. between the years 1245 and 1270, a space of only twenty-five years. Of the same period are the Chapter House and a portion of the cloisters. The seven westernmost bays of the nave, also in Early English, belong to the 14th and 15th centuries (1350-1420), the old Norman nave apparently standing until that time, having served its purpose for three and a-half centuries. To the same period belong the remainder of the cloisters of the Abbot's House, now the Deanery. The western towers are comparatively modern, as they date from 1735, having been designed, wholly or in part, by Sir Christopher Wren.

In regard to the first instalment of this magnificent 'symphony in stone,' which took five centuries to complete, Professor W. R. Lethaby, the present surveyor of the Abbey, says: 'It is likely that Henry III. never contemplated building more than the Chevet, the Choir, the Chapter House, and the Belfry [placed on the north of and apart from the church]. The nave and the monastic buildings of the old church, the former not yet a century old, were to remain as they were. The king therefore saw his work practically complete in all its beauty. The great bulk of the eastern work rose high above the nave and Lady Chapel; the stone work was fair and sharp; the lead roof shone like silver; the window-glass gleamed against the light like nets of sea-water or as if mixed with fire and sky; the royal doors, with their noble statues of the Apostles, were daintily illuminated in colour and gold. The greater part of the cloister was of sturdy Norman work, wood-roofed. The dormitory over its cellars and the refectory were long ranges of early Norman building, while the infirmary, which backed close upon some of the palace buildings, was of elegant transitional Norman.'*

Who was the architect of the Abbey? This is a question that cannot be answered. But whoever designed the beautiful building evidently drew his inspiration from some French cathedrals. As at Rheims, the choir passes to the west of the crossing, and includes the first bays of the structural nave. Amiens Cathedral and Ste. Chapelle were drawn upon, so to speak, in furnishing ideas to the clever designer of the Abbey, which, notwithstanding its French influence, is in spirit 'one of the most English of English buildings.' The 14th century masons employed upon the building were paid in money and kind: for instance, in 1366 three masons received 2*s.* a week each 'with "livery" of bread and ale.' In 1351-52 the head mason was paid 16*s.* 4*d.* for his dress and shoes, but two years later he became so uppish at the dilatoriness of the court tailor that he received 'nothing for his dress this year, because he refused to take it on account of delay in its delivery.'

The architecture of the 'College, or Collegiate Church of S. Peter, Westminster'—to use the designation given by Queen Elizabeth when she re-established the dean and twelve prebendaries and founded the famous School—is to be seen, not described. To those who cannot gaze upon its fascinating beauties, the art of the photographer, as represented in our illustrations, comes to their aid. A few special features may, however, be pointed out, particularly in regard to the interior, the glory of the edifice. One may go, like the present writer, from cathedral to cathedral in England, and be charmed with the characteristics peculiar to each, and yet upon entering Westminster Abbey he becomes spellbound by its majestic loftiness and overpowering grandeur, attributes of which no other church in England can boast. In height, 103 feet from the pavement to the crown of the vaulting, it exceeds any other of our cathedrals; but this elevation, great though it be, is intensified by the skilfulness of the whole design, a masterpiece of architecture typifying the beauty of holiness. The total length, including Henry VII.'s chapel, is 500 feet, and the width across the transepts measures 200 feet. One cannot fail to be struck with the skilful planning of the apse and the chapels which radiate therefrom. More subtle, but no less skilful, are the two windows in the easternmost of these chapels, the lights being so placed as to halo, as it were, the vistas of the long aisles, thus forming 'triumphs of arrangement.'

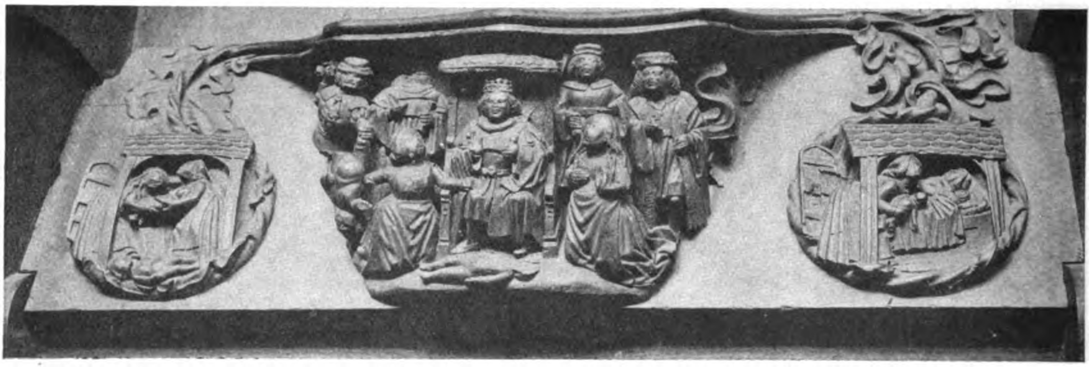
The Abbey has become so monumental as a place of sepulture—many of the tombs being hideous in their gigantic assertiveness—that the visitor is apt to overlook points of detail in the beautiful building itself, especially in its upper portions. Here the photographer's art is of special value, as we showed last month in regard to the organ-case of St. Paul's Cathedral. For instance, the photograph on p. 226 not only shows the beautiful diaper work of the walls, which in the lower parts of the church the monuments have covered up, but reveals details of the extremely graceful carving high up in the south transept. And what shall be said of Henry VII.'s chapel? Here again description can convey but a faint idea of its loveliness. 'One of the Statelyest and Daintiest Monuments of Europe both for the Chappell and for the Sepulcher,' says Bacon, and who will say him nay? This superb sanctuary is well described by Professor Lethaby as 'an exercise in architectural composition of intentionally romantic cast; self-conscious, elaborate, and artificial, it is a work of extraordinary merit.' Henry VII. laid the foundation stone of his chapel on January 24, $150\frac{2}{3}$, which in all probability was nearly finished by 1512, in which year Torregiano began the noble bronze effigies of King Henry VII. and his queen placed in the centre of this 'wonderful whole.' Amidst the wealth of architectural splendour the roof of the chapel stands out in radiant loveliness. Its rich sculptural vaulting, the finest specimen of fan tracery, has an affinity with St. George's Chapel, Windsor, the banners of the Knights of the Bath, hanging over the stalls, adding force to the comparison. A photograph of one of the elaborately carved subsellia is given above, and a view of the ceiling on the opposite page. In addition to Henry VII. the following sleep their last sleep in this most beautiful sanctuary: Queens Elizabeth and Mary I., whose remains are deposited in the north aisle in one splendid tomb which bears the inscription, written in Latin by James I.: 'Consorts both in throne and grave, here rest we two sisters, Elizabeth and Mary, in hope of resurrection.' An even more magnificent tomb covers the grave of Mary Queen of Scots, and to the above must be added those of Queen Mary II. and Queen Anne, both of whom are buried in this stately fane. Of kings there are Edward VI., James I., Charles II., William III., and George II., while kings in other spheres whose bodies here rest are Joseph Addison, the essayist, and Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Westminster's greatest dean of modern times.



THE JUDGMENT OF SOLOMON. A SUBSELLIUM IN HENRY THE SEVENTH'S CHAPEL.

(Photograph by Messrs. S. B. Bolas & Co.)

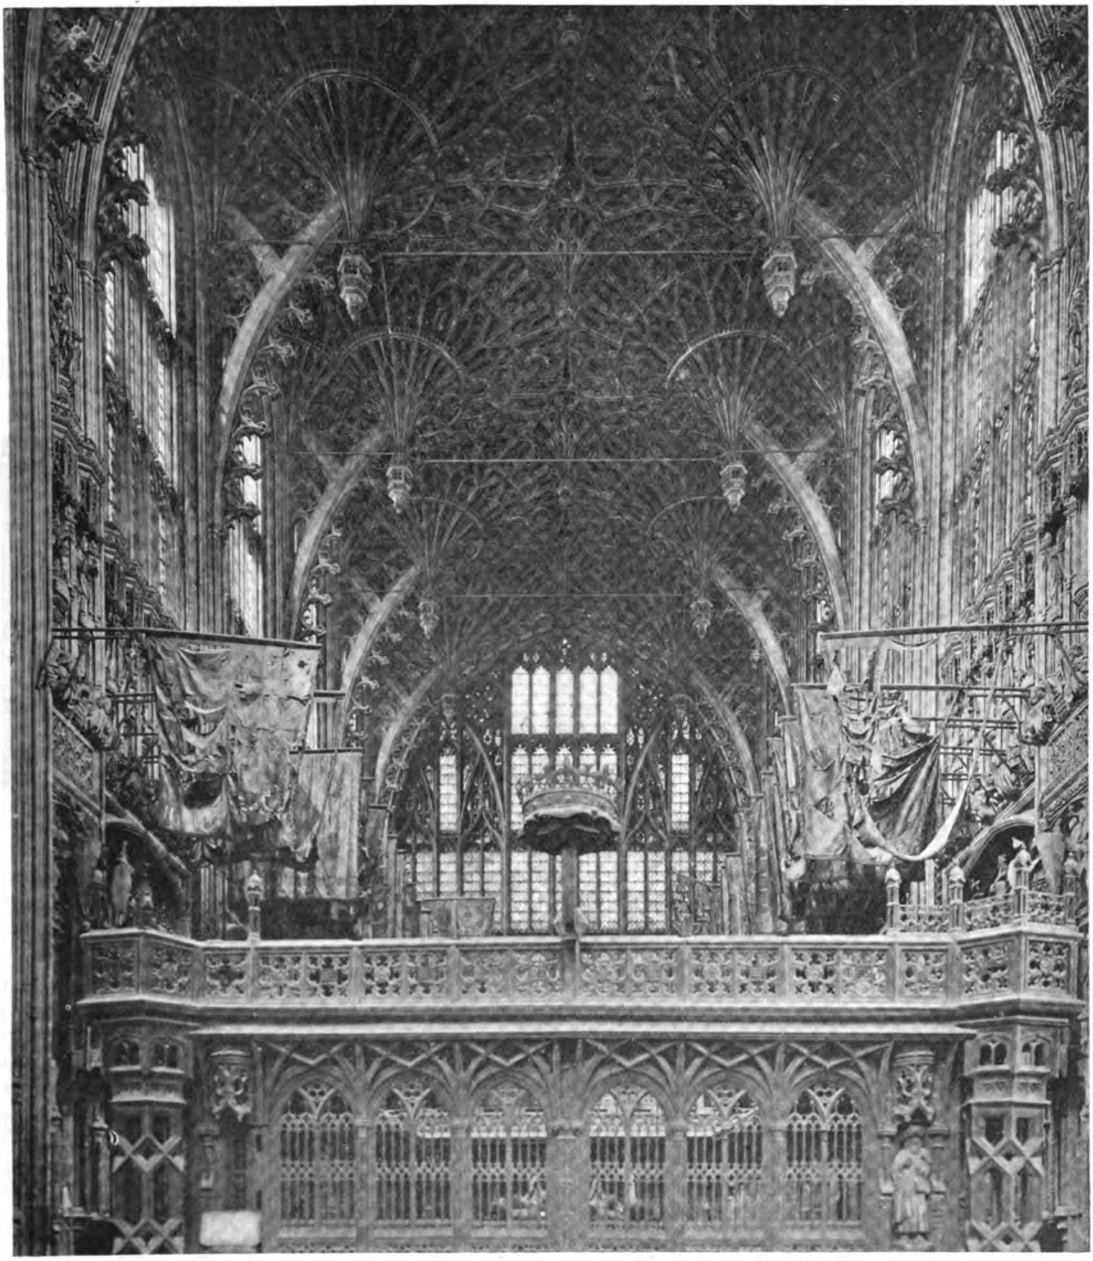
The apsidal chapels, leading from the north and south ambulatories of the Abbey itself, have already been referred to. If much of their pristine beauty has been destroyed by the presence of huge and ungainly monuments, there remains much that charms the eye in these interesting recesses. Of Edward the Confessor's chapel, its occupants hushed in death, and its immediate surroundings, more anon. Islip's chapel, screened off and vaulted by Abbot Islip before his death (which occurred in 1532) to hold his own tomb, is remarkable for the punning rebus of that eminent divine. It is many times repeated, inside and outside the chapel—an eye, and a man slipping from the branch of a tree: eye, slip = Islip. In the upper story of the Islip chapel are preserved the wax effigies of the Abbey, relics of the time when such Tussaudic emblems of the great departed were carried at their funerals in all their pomp and glory. The custom of carrying a 'lively effigy' of the deceased at the obsequies of a great man or woman may be traced to the Roman Commonwealth: in England it obtained as early as the 14th century.

Of the eleven waxworks here on view the oldest is that of Charles II., his face doubtless modelled at the time of his death, wearing the actual robes of the Garter. Queen Elizabeth, a restored effigy, has not the pleasantest of expressions on her waxen countenance. As Mary II. was much taller than her royal husband, William III. is placed upon a stool in order to equalise matters of stature!

Buxom Queen Anne, her hair flowing on her shoulders, is crowned and holds the orb and sceptre. 'La Belle Stuart' (Frances, Duchess of Richmond) has her pet parrot perched beside her. This lady, by the way, sat for the representation of Britannia which appears on the coins of the realm. A funny little effigy is the squat figure of General Monk. In the 17th century the fees paid by sightseers of the Abbey waxworks were the perquisites of the minor canons. In 1779 they added a worthless effigy of Lord Chatham to increase the attractions of the show, while in 1814 business so declined because of the counter-attraction of Nelson's tomb at St. Paul's Cathedral, that, nothing daunted, the vergers and minor canons set up a figure of the great Admiral in the Abbey and clothed him in the dress, except the coat, he actually wore.



THE VAULTING OF HENRY THE SEVENTH'S CHAPEL.

(Photograph by Messrs. S. B. Bolas & Co.)

If the contents of the Islip chapel cause a smile, one's thoughts become solemnized on entering the chapel of St. Faith, or the Revestry, at the south transept. This haven of peace, now devoted to private prayer, was formerly entered through three doors, the centre one being covered with human skins, alleged to be those of Danes. In spite of the gloom, an ancient painting on the east wall of the chapel is still visible; it represents a female figure, said to be that of St. Faith, above a painting of the Crucifixion. To return to the main building. The choir extends across the transepts and projects far into the nave, to the organ screen between the fourth pair of columns west of the crossing. Old views of the Abbey show that the choir was separated from the transepts by wooden partitions, which were removed in 1847. The stalls and pews are modern, from designs by Edward Blore, the Abbey surveyor (1847-48), replacing work of sham Gothic put up in the earlier part of George III.'s reign. Not so the pavement of the Sanctuary, which consists of beautiful mosaic work from Rome, its materials including serpentine, porphyry, touchstone, jasper, Lydian and alabaster, laid down in 1268 by skilled Italian workmen who were brought to England by Abbot Ware for that purpose. The black and white pavement of the choir was presented by the famous headmaster of Westminster School, Dr. Busby, who died in 1695 and is buried beneath it. At the west end of the church is the abbot's pew, built by Abbot Islip early in the 16th century, from which members of the Royal Family have on various occasions watched processions pass up the nave.

Not the least attractive of the externals of the Abbey are the Cloisters, especially the huge buttresses which, stridelike, stretch themselves over the north cloister walk of the 13th century (see the view on p. 223). Leading out of the east cloister walk is the stately Chapter House, with one exception (Lincoln) the largest in England. Entered by a fine double-doorway, it is a most beautiful feature of the sacred pile of buildings. The vaulting springs from a single shaft of Purbeck marble 35 feet high, and the paintings round the walls, though much mutilated, are of great interest. The original tiles of the floor of this fair structure are no less varied than quaint in their several designs. The Chamber of the Pyx, formerly the monastic treasury, and beyond the Chapter House, is the only remaining portion of the Norman buildings of Edward the Confessor, except the dark passage which leads to the Little Cloisters in which are the residences of the canons, minor canons and organist, a pleasant spot, with its centre fountain, and so quiet even in the midst of the roar of London. The College garden adjacent to the Little Cloisters is, on the authority of Canon Duckworth, one of the oldest gardens in England.

The Deanery forms part of the old abbot's house. (For a photograph of the courtyard, see p. 221.) Its most famous apartment is the Jerusalem Chamber built by Abbot Litlington, which is entered through the Jericho Parlour. It has been the scene of many interesting historical events, beginning with the death of King Henry IV. on March 20, 1413. In this connection we read in Shakespeare:

> King Henry. Doth any name particular belong unto the lodgings where I first did swoon?
> Warwick. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.
> King Henry. Laud be to God!—even there my life must end,
> It hath been prophesied to me many years
> I should not die but in Jerusalem;
> Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land;
> But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie;
> In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.
> (HENRY IV. Part II., iv., 4.)

It was in the Jerusalem Chamber that the Westminster Assembly of Divines met in 1643, and the Revisers of the Old and New Testaments in recent years.

PROGRAMME MUSIC.*

In this industriously compiled and absorbingly interesting volume of 548 pages, Professor Niecks lucidly surveys the history of one of the most important problems of musical æsthetics. The book appears at a most opportune time. Programme music of the most aggressive kind is now constantly challenging our understanding. At symphony concerts, listeners are perplexed and bewildered by the extraordinary demands made upon their powers to associate sounds—we forbear to use the word music—with definite mundane ideas, and they are often left dubious as to whether the art is drifting helplessly to chaos, or whether perchance it is being steered to new worlds of beauty by master minds whose methods are beyond the ken of the common folk. Professor Niecks does not pretend to solve this knotty problem, although he adopts a pessimistic view of the present situation. What he does do is to give an account of the aims and achievements in the direction of programme music of four centuries of composers. That music can associate itself with ideas and emotions, and is indeed born of ideas and emotions, is so much a matter of common experience as to call for no demonstration. Opera and vocal music are familiar instances of this marriage of feeling and musical expression. But the doubt begins when we consider how far in purely instrumental music it is possible and permissible to suggest a definite programme. The desire of composers of all schools and periods thus to find vent for their moods is unmistakable. The works with a programme basis of between three and four hundred composers are commented on by Professor Niecks. In his introductory chapter he says:

> The prejudices as to programmes are many. That absolute music—by which we are to understand pure music, music with none but æsthetical qualities, music unconnected with anything definite in thought or nature, according to some a mere formal play with tones—is the only legitimate instrumental music, was long the orthodox and all but universal doctrine, and even now has not become a wholly extinct belief. Then, we find people who approve of a title, but object to a poem or a prose narrative prefixed to a piece of music. And yet, a title may imply a great deal more than a poem or a prose narrative. What vast subjects, for instance, are indicated by single words such as Faust, Hamlet, Manfred, Hebrides, Eroica, Hungaria, &c.!

The author divides his history into six periods, beginning with vocal programme music of the 16th century. The sixth period is made to begin about the fourth decade of the 19th century, and therefore embraces the works of Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner. No account of programme music could omit reference to Kuhnau (1660-1722) and his Bible Sonatas, which Professor Niecks says 'are interesting and powerful attempts rather than altogether satisfactory achievements.'

---

* 'Programme Music in the last four Centuries, a Contribution to the history of Musical Expression,' by Frederick Niecks, Mus.D., Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh. London: Novello & Co., Ltd.

Of Handel in his purely instrumental music it is said that 'it would be difficult to discover one less open to suspicion of being a writer of programme music.' But in his accompaniments to vocal music he demonstrated power to paint tone-colour vividly. Haydn in 'The Creation,' 'The Seasons' and other works is claimed as a programmist, and it is stated that even in composing his sonatas and symphonies he was dominated by unrevealed romances and programmes. A curious case of what may be termed programitis is that of Dittersdorf (1739-1799), who in twelve symphonies endeavoured to illustrate subjects from Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.' Professor Niecks says that these symphonies 'are full of beauties and points of interest,' and that 'they well deserve to be read and played.' After dealing rather fully with the powerful efforts of Beethoven to express ideas and moods, the Professor concludes 'that the time cannot be far off when he will be regarded as the chief founder and the greatest cultivator of programme music.' Nineteen pages are devoted to Mendelssohn, whose remark that 'since Beethoven had taken the step he took in the Pastoral symphony, it was impossible for composers to keep clear of programme music,' is quoted. Testimony to Mendelssohn's genius as a descriptive composer is given from a quarter not supposed to be biassed in his favour. Wagner said to Dannreuther:

> 'Mendelssohn was a landscape painter of the first order, and The Hebrides overture is his masterpiece. Wonderful imagination and delicate feeling are here presented with consummate art. Note the extraordinary beauty of the passage where the oboes rise above the other instruments with a plaintive wail like sea winds over the sea. Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage also is beautiful; but I am fond of the first movement of the Scotch Symphony.'

The attitude of Schumann was ambiguous and suspicious, yet he seemed ultimately to give way. Professor Niecks is epigrammatic over Chopin:

> Subjectivity is the beginning and end of Chopin. Happily he not only subjectivates the objective, but also objectivates the subjective. With Chopin music was a passioscope. To fit the art for this function, its materials had to be subtilized and sensitized.

The tremendous influence of Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner is dealt with in 128 pages of masterly analysis. Full justice is done to the brilliant genius of Berlioz, but so far as definite programme music is concerned, Liszt is considered to be of greater importance. Our author says:

> His importance lies chiefly and mainly in the impulses he gave—in the vistas he opened, the new problems he proposed, the solutions of old problems he attempted, in short, in the new ideas, methods, procedures, and means he suggested. Unlike Berlioz, Liszt had a system, and set it forth in unequivocal language. While in the quantity of his programme music and in the scope and variety of his programmes Liszt surpasses Berlioz, the latter must, I think, be allowed the possession of a larger amount of originality and creativeness.

Wagner denounced programme music, and yet his music was inconsistent with his theoretical attitude. Professor Niecks aptly remarks:

> After examining his case as we have done, it is impossible to evade the conclusion that if Wagner is not one of the band of composers of programme music, he bears an extraordinary resemblance to them.

The French school as represented by David, Saint-Säens, César Franck, Debussy and others is dealt with briefly, and the English school as represented by Bennett, Macfarren, Parry, Mackenzie, Stanford, Cowen, Corder, Bantock and Elgar is discussed. Tchaikovsky naturally has considerable attention. Of Brahms, Professor Niecks observes that he > is generally put forward as the model of a composer of absolute music, in fact, as the most perfect representative of the antipodes of the composers of programme music. Well, I claim him as a composer of programme music. Of course so extraordinary a statement, which to many cannot fail to be shocking and seem absurd, ought not only to be proved by reasoning, but also to be supported by facts.

Then the arch-programmist Richard Strauss is examined. The Professor recognises two periods so far in his career, and says:

> We look upon him with hope and great expectations, and implore him not to throw away his pen, not to return to earlier methods, but to proceed onward in a soberer spirit and a more single-hearted manner, in short, to commence his third period, where will be manifested the natural Strauss, purified from the dross that still clung to the gold in the second period.

In the last chapter of his book, the Professor thus summarises his views:

> A thoughtful survey of music cannot fail to lead us to the conclusion that bad programme music is bad because it has too little of the qualities of good absolute music, and bad absolute music is bad because it has too little of the qualities of good programme music. A least this is what we mostly find. But programme music may also be bad because it meddles with matters uncongenial and even foreign to music. Programme and artistic form do not exclude each other. Rightly understood we may then say that programme music is the only high-class music.

As to modern music in general, it is stated that > we are getting poorer and poorer and are face to face with imminent bankruptcy. The road on which we are travelling offers no prospect—the increase of complexity and sensationalism cannot go on for ever. We must strike out in a different direction. There was a great revolution in music about 1600. We may therefore without unreasonableness expect another—the present age is ripe for it and longing for it. And what do we want? Simplicity, sanity, spontaneity, and, above all and including all, beauty—natural, gracious, persuasive beauty.

And so concludes a book that no earnest musical student can afford to neglect. The stream of tendency is examined from its source, but the mists ahead prevent our daring to say with confidence whither it is carrying us.

M.

AN INTERVIEW BETWEEN WAGNER AND ROSSINI.

When Wagner was in Paris in 1860, superintending the ill-fated production of 'Tannhäuser' at the Grand Opera, Rossini, who had done with the cares and vexations of opera thirty years before ('Guillaume Tell' was produced in 1829), was living in Paris, and, though his star had suffered some temporary eclipse from the Meyerbeerian comet, was regarded with due veneration as one of the past-masters in his art. He was a recognised wit, and suffered the usual penalty in having almost as many bon mots fathered upon him as Sydney Smith, or at a later time, von Bülow. Consequently many jests at the expense of what was styled 'the music of the future'—an expression, be it remembered, which was not Wagner's, but an invention of the enemy—were attributed to Rossini. There was the story of the dinner-party he was supposed to have given when the menu included 'Turbot à l'allemande,' which turned out to consist of sauce minus the fish—a supposed equivalent of Wagnerian music without the melody. Then there was the still better known anecdote of Rossini endeavouring to read the score of 'Tannhäuser' upside down, on the plea that in its normal position he could make nothing of it! These were jests at which we can afford to laugh nowadays, but Wagner, then a comparatively unknown composer, struggling hard to make his ideals understood by an indifferent world, naturally felt shy of the acknowledged master in his own sphere of art who was supposed to have fired off these witticisms at his expense, and he was therefore disinclined to pay the customary visit such as he had made on Auber, Halévy, Ambroise Thomas, and others.

Luckily, however, an intermediary came forward who was able to dispel the cloud of prejudice, to assure Wagner that these stories were apocryphal, and that he would be welcomed by Rossini as a brother musician, much as their methods and temperament might differ. This go-between was E. Michotte, who was an intimate friend of Rossini, and happened also to belong to the circle of Wagner's closer acquaintances — Gasperini, Roche, Villot, Gustave Doré, Stephen Heller, Champfleury, and others. Michotte it was, then, who planned a meeting between the two composers, the one the archetype of the Italian school of the past, the other of the German school that was on the verge of maturity, though in a sense it had already come to full ripeness, for Wagner had just completed 'Tristan,' although it was not to be heard till five years later. And not only did Michotte arrange for the meeting, and accompany Wagner to Rossini's house at the corner of the Chaussée-d'Antin and the Boulevard des Italiens, but he had a sufficient appreciation of the importance of the occasion to take copious notes of the conversation, and from these he has compiled, and at the space of nearly half a century has published, an account of this historic meeting, which affords some highly interesting reading.* Without being so mean as to pull all the plums out of Mr. Michotte's very tasty pie, I may venture to give some samples of its toothsome contents.

On receiving Wagner, Rossini at once assured him that he had not been so impolite to a brother musician as to say the unkind things gratuitously attributed to him. 'As for despising your music,' he went on, 'I ought in the first instance to know it, and to know it I ought to hear it at the theatre, for it is only in the theatre, and not simply by reading the score, that it is possible to render a just judgment of music intended for the stage.' The only thing of Wagner's he had heard was, he said, the 'Tannhäuser' March, which he had found very effective and beautiful. After thus clearing the ground, intercourse became easy and pleasant, and many interesting topics were broached and discussed during this short visit. On Wagner's expressing a fear—only too well justified in the event—lest the success of 'Tannhäuser' should be spoilt by a cabal, Rossini expressed his lively sympathy, and told how he had suffered in similar fashion, notably on the production of his masterwork, the 'Barber,' and even in later years in Paris and Vienna after his world-wide reputation had been made. In the latter case it was Weber who fulminated against Rossinian opera. Wagner admitted Weber's intolerance, but his admiration for the composer who, more than any other, may be said to have prepared the way for him, led him to excuse him on the ground of his patriotism, though this, by the way, could not have been cited as an apology for his attacks on Beethoven, for Weber's article ridiculing the fourth Symphony is a remarkable instance of how one composer may fail to appreciate another whose ideals are different from his own.

The mention of Weber led Rossini to describe how that composer paid him a complimentary visit when (in 1826) he was passing through Paris to produce 'Oberon' in London. The circumstances were in curious contrast to those of Wagner's visit, for while Wagner hesitated because he believed Rossini had ridiculed him, Weber hesitated because he knew he had severely criticized Rossini. However, Rossini's bonhomie soon put Weber at his ease, though his condition was at this time pitiable, the disease which was so soon to carry him off, showing its ravages in his livid complexion and extreme emaciation, as well as in a consumptive cough.

Then the conversation turned to another of Wagner's idols, Beethoven, of whom Rossini had some vivid recollections, having paid him a visit in 1822. What seems to have struck Rossini most was the exceeding sadness expressed in Beethoven's face. He was received kindly but with characteristic brusqueness, Beethoven opening the conversation by complimenting him on the 'Barber,' and telling him with delightful candour that he should stick to opera buffa, and not attempt anything serious!

Nor did he improve matters by roundly asserting that serious opera was not in the nature of Italians, that they had not the technique to deal with truly dramatic situations, and 'How was it possible for them to acquire it in Italy?' This recital led to Rossini's saying something of his own powers as a composer: he claimed for himself facility and a natural instinct in composition—a modest and very just claim—and avowed that his slight musicianship was chiefly derived from studying the scores of German masters. He named particularly 'Creation,' 'Figaro,' and 'The magic flute,' to which he might have added 'The Seasons' ('The impatient husbandman'), and Beethoven's eighth Symphony (Allegretto), to both of which he owed some definite suggestions. On his expressing his regret that he had not enjoyed a more thorough training on German lines, Wagner showed his appreciation of what Rossini had accomplished by citing the 'Scene of the darkness' in 'Moses in Egypt,' that of the conspiracy in 'Guillaume Tell,' and, in another order, the 'Quando Corpus,' as examples which he could hardly have bettered, and these the veteran admitted were among the 'happy moments' of his career.

For Bach, Rossini expressed a lively admiration, whereupon Wagner observed that it was Mendelssohn who made his Passion music known to the Germans, and this led Rossini to recount how he once, in Frankfurt, had got Mendelssohn to play to him Bach, Bach, and again Bach, till Mendelssohn, who not unnaturally found it rather difficult to reconcile the Forty-eight with 'Semiramide,' began to suspect that Rossini was simply poking fun at him in this unexpected enthusiasm for the ultra-German master, who was in all respects his exact antithesis.

So far Rossini seems to have had the say, and, as became the junior, Wagner was the listener, but his opportunity came when Rossini courteously turned the conversation to the younger composer's works and ideas. Wagner spoke of the trouble which the translation of 'Tannhäuser' was giving, whereupon Rossini suggested that he should compose an opera on a French libretto, a suggestion which, it is needless to add, did not meet with acceptance. Then Wagner spoke of his ideals, and his expressed desire to get rid of the formalism of opera, of the aria di bravura, the septuor, and other conventions. Though Rossini was the living embodiment of these conventions, he admitted the absurdity of the ensembles of grand opera, and said that when all the characters formed into line to take part in one, they always reminded him of a band of minstrels, singing to secure a few coppers, 'But,' as he added characteristically enough, 'que voulez-vous? It was the custom, a concession which we had to make to the public, who otherwise would have shied things at our heads!' In discussing the whims of vocalists, both composers found themselves in accord, Rossini saying laughingly that it was their demands which had made him so bald, and then Rossini made the very plausible criticism, which one hears even now, that it is useless to complain of convention when a drama that is sung must needs be a convention. To this Wagner made the obvious answer that, though convention is inevitable, it must be understood in such a fashion as to avoid the excess which leads to absurdities—all that one demands is that a convention, once admitted, should be artistic and consistent in itself.

Wagner, in recounting the abuses against which he waged war, repudiated with warmth the accusation that he despised his predecessors, pointing out that to regard the form of their operas as capable of improvement was a very different thing from finding fault with their music as such. He proceeded, sketching his ideas of music-drama, to lay down the axiom that the music and the poem should be so closely knit as to be like the different aspects of a single idea, and this provoked from Rossini the comment that it made it a necessity for the composer to be his own librettist, a condition which he deemed practically insurmountable, but of course Wagner would have none of this, and with great animation urged that the composer should study literature as well as counterpoint. Were there not many instances, he added, in which composers had shown a far keener insight into what the text suggested than did their librettists? And he pressed the point home by taking as an instance the scene of the conspiracy in 'Guillaume Tell,' and his critical discrimination was corroborated by Rossini's acknowledgment that the text of this particular scene had, in fact, been very materially modified so as to accord with his conception of what it should be.

The reforms which Wagner proposed seemed to Rossini, naturally enough, to be so far-reaching that he doubted if they would be accepted by either singers or public, and expressed a fear lest the method Wagner described would be the 'funeral oration of melody.' Wagner's answer was to the effect that he not only had no wish to dispense with melody, which he regarded as the flower of every musical organism, without which music was unthinkable, but that what he desired was that it should be free, and so supple as to be applicable to every possible situation. Again he adroitly adopted the argumentum ad hominem by pointing to a passage in 'Guillaume Tell,' sois immobile (Act III., finale), where Rossini himself had provided a precedent for such melody as Wagner desired, 'in which the free vocal melody, accentuating each word and sustained by the quick-breathing passages for the violoncellos, attains the highest summit of lyrical expression.' To which Rossini wittily replied: 'So that I have composed "music of the future" without knowing it?' And Wagner as readily retorted, 'You have made music for all time, maestro, which is better still!' Wagner expounded still further his principles, and particularly under what conditions he would permit several voices to be heard together in duets, choruses, and the like, and this memorable interview ended by Rossini expressing his interest in his visitor's aims, which he had so clearly expressed. For his own part he was too old—'being at the age when one is not so much inclined to compose as liable to decompose'—to turn his eyes to new horizons, but he was very willing to acknowledge that Wagner's ideas were of a nature worthy of the serious consideration of young composers. 'Of all the arts,' he concluded, 'music is that which is, by reason of its ideal character, most subject to transformations, and to these there can be no bounds. Who, after Mozart, could have foreseen Beethoven? Or, after Gluck, Weber? And, after these, why should there be an end to progress?'

As they came away Wagner acknowledged to Michotte that Rossini's simplicity and earnestness were not what he had expected, and that, impossible as it was for him to explain his ideas in the course of a short conversation (and in a strange tongue), Rossini's quick perception of all his points had delighted him. And he added a few words of appreciation of Rossini's genius as a composer, his gift of melodic invention, his instinct for the stage and for dramatic expression, adding: 'What would he not have produced had he received a thorough musical training; above all, if, less Italian and less sceptic, he had felt in him the sacred nature of his art? . . . I must say this: of all the musicians I have met in Paris he is the only one who is truly great.'

Wagner never saw Rossini again, but eight years later, on the death of the master, he wrote a brief 'Remembrance of Rossini,' which appeared in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung of December 17, 1868. It afterwards was incorporated in the 'Gesammelte Schriften,' and appears in English guise in Mr. Ashton Ellis's translation of the 'Prose Works,' vol. iv., p. 269. In it he refers briefly to this visit, the impression it left with him, and the calumnies to which mischief-makers gave currency regarding the relations between the two composers. As regards the impression which Wagner made upon Rossini, Mr. Michotte is able to afford us a glimpse, for soon after the interview he happened to be at a gathering in Rossini's house and heard the master say to Azevedo, one of the most violent anti-Wagnerians: 'I must admit that this Wagner seems to me endowed with faculties of the highest order. His whole appearance, his chin especially, reveals the character of an iron will. It is a great thing to be able to will. If he also possesses in the same degree, as I believe he does, the power of effecting that will, he will make himself heard of.'

CHINESE MUSIC.

In the first instalment of this article I dealt with the musical scales and systems of notation employed by the Chinese from the remotest antiquity and used with but little change to-day. What can we learn of the instruments on which the music was played, and from some of which it was perhaps derived? First there are a tub and a couching tiger—curious symbolic instruments of wood, used for beating time (to this day a most conspicuous feature in Chinese music), or to mark the beginning and end of a performance. Gongs, made, not as now of brass or bronze, but of sonorous stone, were well known and were used singly or in chimes of sixteen or more. Chimes of bells, too, were common; the usual bells being of a strange flattened shape with no clapper. Bells with wooden clappers were also in use, but they were hardly regarded as musical instruments. Of drums the commonest variety seems to have been barrel-shaped. Such drums attained to a great size, and were generally supported on an upright post which passed through the body of the instrument. A modification of this arrangement survives in the pedlar's common rattle drum. There was, too, a straight-sided drum called Po Fu, which, however, has disappeared.

The ancient wind and stringed instruments were very few. The most important of the former was the Yo, a vertical flute. This instrument, regarded by the Chinese as the origin of all music, was a simple open pipe with three finger-holes. The pipe measured 20 inches in length and half an inch in bore, and the finger-holes were three, five and seven inches respectively from the lower end. The scale of this flute begins D E F♯ G♯, and it is strange that Tsai Yü should give a special fingering to produce G♮, so substituting, as has already been mentioned, the Mongol or European for the ancient native scale. The Yo, which now appears in the form of the Hsiao with six holes, was improved in its embouchure and known as the Ti, but the present Chinese Ti is identical with the transverse flutes as used in Europe. There were also pan-pipes, and a very strange horizontal flute called Ch'ih, with closed or partially-closed ends.* Two more wind instruments, both interesting, complete the list: the Hsüan, a little resonator of baked clay, not three inches long, shaped like an egg, with a hole at the apex (across which the performer blows) and five finger-holes symmetrically arranged in the sides; and lastly, the well-known organ, Shêng. This organ consists of a small cup-shaped air-chamber into which are fitted little bamboo pipes with free reeds. At present it is made with only thirteen or fourteen sounding pipes, but some of the ancient varieties seem to have had as many as twenty-four or even thirty-six pipes. After a life of some three or four millenniums in the East, the free reed was at length introduced into Europe in the seventeenth century, though it was not turned to any practical use till a century later.* Two large psalteries, the Ch'in with seven strings and the Shê with twenty-five, are perhaps the only stringed instruments that belong to the really ancient epoch (see illustration). The strings of the Shê gave only one note each, but on the Ch'in thirteen inlaid studs of gold marked the points where the strings should be stopped. But the scale thus produced is unlike the theoretic Chinese scale, and the Ch'in with its thirteen studs and the little organ with its strangely tuned thirteen reeds both seem, in their present form, to suggest an unexplored region in the history of Chinese music. It is important to remember that, till near the end of the fourteenth century, China had free intercourse not only with the bordering tribes of Mongols, but also with more distant India, Arabia, and Persia, and sometimes even with Europe. Her ancient contact with America seems to have left little or no trace on her own music or on that of the Indians. Tsai Yü incidentally mentions the fact that the scale of the popular organ is different from that of the classical instrument, though he seems to have no suspicion that the studs of the Ch'in are anything but ancient.

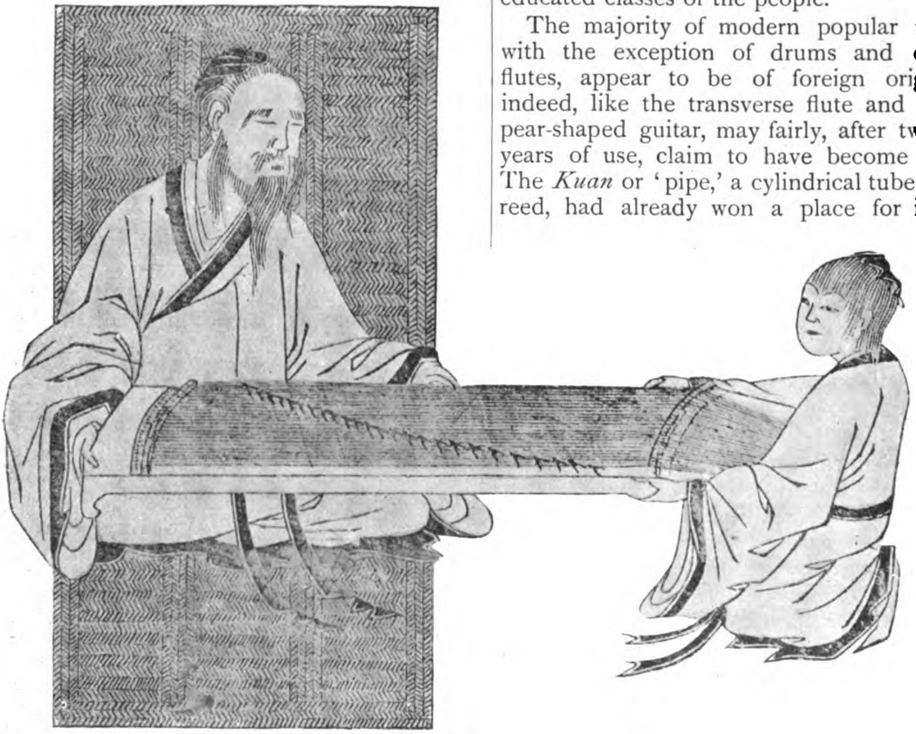
* All these wind instruments, on which only the diatonic scale could be played, were formerly made in the different keys required by the transposition of the classical music as described above. Now, they appear to be made only in the key of Huang Chung (D), and to sound the nearest note they can to the right one.



THE SHÊ PLAYER (16TH CENTURY).

Music in China has rarely been of a purely instrumental type; indeed, for centuries it seems to have been considered merely as an adjunct to the chanting of hymns and prayers and singing of secular songs. These hymns were not only accompanied by instruments, but were illustrated by a troupe of dancers with postures appropriate to each word, and this posture-dancing is still performed at the Confucian ceremonies with splendid and picturesque effect by thirty-six boys clad in gold and scarlet and blue. As a connecting link between these two classes of sacred and profane music has grown up gradually the music of the theatre, which now appears to be in popular estimation the most important music of all. Theatrical performances are, over a great part of China, connected with religious festivals and take place often in the forecourt of a temple; while, on the other hand, they seem to supply amateur musicians with much of their material. Music as a profession is not now regarded as wholly reputable, but it is common to hear men singing snatches of a song from the theatre as they go along the streets or country roads, and amateur instrumentalists are many, both among the poorer and the better-educated classes of the people.

The majority of modern popular instruments, with the exception of drums and one or two flutes, appear to be of foreign origin. Some indeed, like the transverse flute and perhaps the pear-shaped guitar, may fairly, after two thousand years of use, claim to have become naturalized. The Kuan or 'pipe,' a cylindrical tube with double reed, had already won a place for itself in the state ritual eight or nine centuries ago. The double reed with conical tube (So na, ? = zourna) is certainly a later introduction, and the single reed, still only found in various rudimentary toys, is later yet. The fiddle came probably from India. In a list of instruments published about A.D. 1300, we seem to catch it lately arrived in an early stage of development—a thing with two strings, between which was put a thin slip of bamboo for a bow. The instrument, though much improved, has practically never got beyond two strings, and the horse-hair with which the bow is now strung still passes between the strings. Though its introduction is thus comparatively recent, the fiddle has won great popularity, and no instrument is now more often heard in the hands of amateurs or on the stage.

* See Mahillon, 'Catalogue du Musée instrumental de Bruxelles,' and Hermann Smith, 'The World's earliest Music.'

Whether composition is taught or studied as a profession may be doubted. That there have been famous composers is certain, but they have been no less self-taught than the great poets. Certain instruments, especially the three-stringed guitar, are taught not so much now by blind men as to them. For the rest the art of playing seems to be privately taught, or learnt from books, or picked up and perfected by endless private, or sometimes painfully public, practising.

Of the result of all this study and practice, as we hear it, it is impossible to give an adequate idea in words. For anything like counterpoint we may look in vain. On certain instruments, notably the organ, dulcimer, and the ancient psalteries, two notes, generally with the interval of a fourth, fifth or octave, are played together or in rapid alternation and there harmony seems to end.* Chinese singing, it is said, cannot be imitated by Western throats, nor Chinese music written in Western notation or played on Western instruments. Celestial music has been described as written in a key which is neither májor nor minor; the Chinese voice is a kind of falsetto, hard to reproduce. At the temple services are heard slow, solemn, monotonous chants accompanied, very quietly for the most part, by a great variety of instruments. A theatre, whether in a building or in the open court of a temple, seems at first a very pandemonium—the hubbub of the audience, greetings shouted to a friend descried far off on the other side of the house, cries of the hawkers of refreshments, incessant chatter of everyone—all this is easily and frequently drowned by the clash of cymbals and clatter of drums on the stage. Yet if you manage to hear the singing—and there are actors who will make you hear them through everything—it will often repay the trouble. At its best it is a really wonderful exhibition of vocal power and skill. And then there is the fiddler with his futile-looking little instrument. Persuade a first-rate performer to play to you alone away from the uproar of the theatre, and you will find a fulness and strength and yet refinement of tone of which you would not think the fiddle capable, and in the player a dexterity and touch of which a Joachim might have no need to be ashamed, while the music is full of phrases of a fascinating beauty.

Music, like too many things in China, seems to have been going backward. Tsai Yü's great effort to revive the true music in the sixteenth century was a failure. A century later was published a book, which is still solemnly followed in the state services, compiled by a man who seems to have had the slightest possible claim to be called a musician. The instruments are no doubt rudimentary and clumsy. The popular music of to-day may make us smile if we think of it as the outcome of the eager and laborious study of four thousand years. But the supreme honour in which theoretic music was held of old has tended to reduce that to a purely academic study, and the living music which is played and sung may have no connection with the study of the scholar. We must not judge the East by our standards of the West. When all is said, China is in her own sense a musical nation. Music enters into almost all the concerns of her life, and her people find in simple musical sounds a meaning and joy which we may never know.

Veni, vidi, vici is a motto which the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society can surely claim after their recent visit to London. Not only was their concert on March 5—to which detailed reference is made on p. 248—honoured by the presence of the Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales, but the refined singing and poetic interpretations of the choir drew forth a chorus of unqualified praise from the musical critics and all who were fortunate enough to be present on that eventful occasion. * There is similar 'harmony' in the Confucian Hymn, the Hsiao, Hsūan and Ch'ih sounding the fifth above or the fourth below the melody, whilst the Ti and Shêng give the melody an octave higher, the whole effect being similar to that of the 'Organum' of mediæval times.

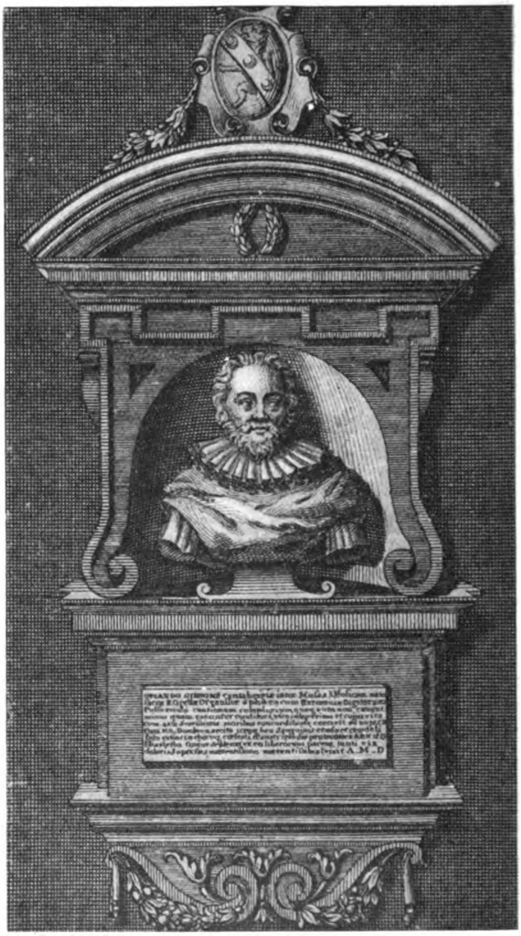
accompanying portrait of Mr. Herbert Whittaker, the able conductor, it may not be without interest to supply some particulars concerning the Society, its origin, organization, &c. The Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society is the outcome of a small choir of ladies founded by Mr. Whittaker about twenty years ago. It very soon afterwards became a mixed-voice choir, or 'Choral Class,' of about twenty-four voices. These Blackpool singers soon entered the competition field, and after having won the Morecambe Challenge Shield they adopted their present title. Including sight-singing competitions, the choir have won nearly forty 'first prizes.' Besides the conductor (Mr. Whittaker) there is only one other official, Mr. Frank Howard, the capable honorary secretary. The Society has no committee, no rules, no subscriptions, no fees. As during the last few years the conductor has taken all financial risk—cost of music, competing expenses, &c. —he naturally takes all the prize money, fees for singing at concerts, &c. 'Charity begins at home' is another motto which the Society might justly claim, as during the past twelve months they have raised nearly £100 on behalf of different churches in the district. The choir has won twenty-five first prizes at various festivals, including the National Eisteddfod of Wales.

In regard to the personnel of the choir, Mr. Whittaker tells us that 'Each member is an amateur vocalist, though several receive small fees for their services as soloists. A great number of the ladies are in business as assistants in shops, &c., one or two are teachers in elementary schools, and the remainder are occupied in household duties. The gentlemen of the choir include the Borough Treasurer, architects, tradesmen, &c. The sole test for membership (which is eagerly sought after) is musical merit. We have about eighty members on the books, but all are not equally active: the actual numbers are twenty sopranos, fifteen altos, sixteen tenors, and eighteen basses, total 69. One of the most interesting events in our short history was when we were invited to sing before the Schiller-Anstalt of Manchester, on account of our interpretations of Brahms's part-songs. We shall never forget how the Germans rose in a body from their seats and bowed to us after we had finished singing.'

Mr. Herbert Whittaker, the batonless conductor of the Society, was born at Manchester on August 31, 1868. He is a busy teacher of music at Blackpool, where he holds the post of organist of Warley Road Congregational Church at the north end of the town. He is also teacher of music at the secondary school and the Pupil Teachers' centre; moreover, he conducts a competition choir at Preston—the Vocal Union, which is only twelve months old—and the Lyric Amateur Operatic Society at Blackpool. He has conducted a large number of works—oratorio, opera, and comic opera—with conspicuous success, thereby giving proof of his versatility. His hobbies are chess, cycling, golf, and, 'favourite of all,' trout fishing. (How Samuel Sebastian Wesley would have enjoyed his company!) Mr. Whittaker and his choir are to be warmly congratulated on their success as exponents of the fine art of perfect choral singing.

One curious result of the recent London County Council Election seems to have escaped notice. In Battersea the successful candidates were Messrs. Benn and Davies, two names which can easily be rolled into one. May these Battersean councillors pursue the even tenor of their ways!

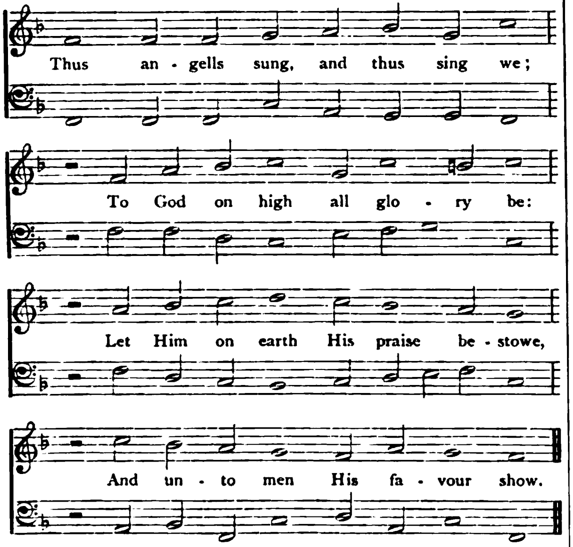


Orlando Gibbons, 'one of the rarest musicians of his time,' is, on June 5, the anniversary of his death, to be honoured by a festival service at Westminster Abbey, of which he was organist for the last two years of his life, 1623 to 1625. This proposed commemoration is due to the generosity of Mr. T. D. C. Crews, a member and a past-master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, who has not only offered to defray the expenses incurred, but to bear the cost of providing the Abbey with a bust of Orlando Gibbons. This bust is to be a replica of that at Canterbury Cathedral, in the nave of which the distinguished composer is buried. The accompanying view of Gibbons's monument is reproduced from Dart's 'The history and antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury' (1726); thus it represents the monument as it appeared on the north wall of the nave aisle two hundred years ago. Our readers may like to compare it with the photograph in The Musical Times of February, 1901, for which it was specially taken. Orlando Gibbons was also organist and composer of the Chapel Royal. In that Court capacity he had to compose suitable music on the occasion of the reception of Henrietta Maria of France, the bride of Charles I., at Canterbury, whither he went by command of the king. Gibbons never returned from Canterbury; he died there on June 5, 1625. In the burial register of the Cathedral his name appears as Orlando Gibbins.

'A real genius, and a composer who was in his own line nulli secundus, and of whom England has good reason to be proud,' is the opinion which Sir Frederick Ouseley—who edited a collection of his sacred compositions in 1873—formed of Orlando Gibbons. He went on to say: 'His grandeur of style and the excellence of his counterpoint have deservedly won for him the proud title of "The English Palestrina." Had Gibbons lived longer [he died at the age of forty-two] he would probably have achieved a European reputation; but his early death and insular position tended to narrow the field in which his genius could assert itself.' The fame of Gibbons as one of England's most illustrious creative musicians rests on a threefold basis—his church music, his madrigals, and his instrumental compositions (fancies for viols, and virginal pieces). His Service in F and his magnificent anthems endorse Ouseley's eulogy of their grandeur, and who can listen to the madrigals 'The silver swan' or 'O that the learned poets' without being impressed with the strength and beauty of these gems of vocal art? Some of his instrumental compositions bear quaint titles. A virginal piece, printed in full in Dannreuther's 'Musical Ornamentation' primer (Part I.), is entitled 'The Lord of Salisbury: his Pavin,' Other titles are 'The Queene's commande,' 'The woode soe wilde,' 'A fancy,' 'A toy,' &c. Although Gibbons's sacred compositions cannot be said to be in popular use, a number of his anthems are published in a cheap form, one of these, 'Almighty and everlasting God,' having appeared in The Musical Times as far back as August, 1854.

It must not be forgotten that Orlando Gibbons has furnished the church-song of the people with one of its time-honoured melodies in 'Angels' song,' or 'Angels' hymn.' This hymn-tune first appeared in 'The Hymnes and Songs of the Church,' of George Wither (1623) in this form, two parts and unbarred:

SONG 34.



Thus an - gells sung, and thus sing we;
To God on high all glo - ry be:
Let Him on earth His praise be - stowe,
And un - to men His fa - vour show.

It has been said that 'in his imagination, fancy, scientific knowledge, and in his power of concentration, Orlando Gibbons may be considered as the musical Shakespeare of his age.' To be called 'The English Palestrina' and 'the musical Shakespeare of his age,' is high praise indeed. A portrait of the composer, from the original painting in the Music School Collection, Oxford, appeared as one of the supplements to The Musical Times of June, 1906.

Any interesting news in regard to music in Greater Britain is always welcome, especially if it is of an unusual nature. After reading the article on 'Wagner's Music in England' which appeared in The Musical Times of September last, Mr. F. W. D. Moore, of Geelong, Victoria, offered to obtain copies of letters which passed between Mr. Emil Sander, of Melbourne, and Wagner, relative to the first performance of 'Lohengrin' in Australia, which, by the way, took place only two years after the work had first been given in England. Here is the correspondence, translated from the German, for which we are indebted to the kindness of Mr. Moore.

59, Swanston Street,
Melbourne.
4 Sept., 1877.

To Mr. Richard Wagner, Bayreuth.

Dear Sir,—You will no doubt be surprised to receive a letter in an unknown hand from Melbourne, Australia. I take this liberty, because I thought it would please you to hear that during last month one of your operas (Lohengrin) was performed for the first time in Australia.

Thereby begins a new epoch in the musical history of this land which to many in Europe is still a terra incognita.

William Saurin Lyster, whose portrait I enclose, is the gentleman who undertook to execute this great work, and he succeeded in pleasing the public of Melbourne, which is a very critical one, to such an extent that after each performance the attendance increased that the opera by desire had to be repeated, and it still draws overflowing houses.

Signora Antonietta Link appears as Elsa, Signor Palladini as Lohengrin, and Alberto Zelman is the conductor.

Melbourne, one of the prettiest cities in the world, though hardly over thirty years old, has about 250,000 inhabitants. It possesses three large and several smaller theatres, and a large handsome opera house. It is a wonderful city, and therefore it is perhaps no wonder that the music of the future found here such a brilliant reception.

I am sending herewith several views of Melbourne, and, if they should interest you, I will gladly send you more.

In case you should think it worth your while to reply to my letter, if only by a few words, I give my address, which is—

Mr. Emil Sander, 59, Swanston Street, Melbourne.

Trusting that these few lines will be kindly received and considered.

I remain, &c.,
Emil Sander.

To the above, Wagner replied in the following communication which we believe has not hitherto been published, at all events not on this side of the ocean:

Dear Sir,—Your letter and the news contained therein have given me much pleasure, and I cannot omit to thank you for it.

May you be enabled to have my works placed before you in 'English,' for only then can they be thoroughly understood by an English-speaking public. We hope to achieve this in London.

We, myself and family, were much interested in the views of Melbourne which you sent me. As you propose to let us have more, I assure you that you will thereby afford us great pleasure.

Kindly present my compliments to Mr. Lyster and retain in your far away world a kindly feeling for your

Much obliged,
Richard Wagner.

Bayreuth,

Sir August Manns died, we regret to record, at his residence, White Lodge, Beulah Hill, Norwood, on March 1, aged eighty years, less eleven days, and his remains were interred at West Norwood Cemetery. This event would seem to call for lengthy reference to his long and useful life were it not that a detailed biographical sketch of him appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1898. That account of his remarkable career was one in which he took much interest and for which he furnished particulars in respect to his early struggles which till then had not been publicly made known. To this biography there is only to add that in 1903 two honours were conferred upon him—the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, by the University of Oxford, and his knighthood by King Edward VII.; these honours which came to him in the eventide of his life were thoroughly well deserved, and why? Because of the warm encouragement he gave to English music during his long régime of half-a-century as musical director at the Crystal Palace. No conductor, either native or foreign born, could have done more for young and unknown British composers than August Friedrich Manns. One has only to recall the large number of works produced at those famous and enjoyable Saturday concerts for proof of his keen and practical interest in those who needed a helping hand by bringing their compositions to a hearing. To enumerate the works, both British and foreign, which he was the means of introducing into England would astonish by reason of their number and catholicity. For this pioneer zeal, no less than for his whole-hearted enthusiasm in the cause of music, the name of August Manns will long be held in grateful and honoured remembrance.

Two proposals have already been made in order to preserve the memory of Sir August Manns. One is from Miss Fanny Davies, who suggests that 'an exhibition (or scholarship if funds were sufficient) should be founded for the encouragement and training of students in the art of conducting—to be called the August Manns Scholarship—and that it should be competed for in alternate years, or perhaps triennially, by students of the Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music respectively.' This is an excellent idea—the training of native conductors. The other suggestion is set forth in the subjoined communication:

> SIR,—Seeing the great services to English music and the many kindnesses to English musicians rendered by the late Sir August Manns, during a period of over forty years, it seems only fitting that the Society of British Composers should take the initiative in endeavouring to raise some suitable memorial to his revered name. A committee is therefore being formed, including the names of Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Sir C. H. H. Parry, and Sir C. V. Stanford, and I am desired to intimate to all native artists and music-lovers that subscriptions may be addressed to the offices of the Society, 309, Oxford Street, W., and will be thankfully acknowledged by—Yours truly, F. CORDER, Chairman.

Chopin's pupil, Madame Dubois (née O'Meara), who had been a sufferer for many years, recently died at Paris. She studied with the composer for five years, and Prof. Niecks, in his 'Life of Chopin,' furnishes an interesting list, given to him by Madame Dubois herself, of the studies and pieces which she studied under Chopin's direction. After naming Bach, Clementi, Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn and Liszt, &c., she concluded: 'and of Schumann, nothing!'

The Cardiff Triennial Musical Festival is to be held on September 25, 26, 27 and 28, under Dr. Frederic Cowen's direction. An 'early sketch' of the programme gives the following works to be performed, those marked with an asterisk being 'new works':

CHORAL: Messiah, Handel. Phœbus and Pan, Bach. Hail! bright Cecilia (Chorus), Purcell. Spring, Haydn. Glory, honour, praise and power, Mozart. Mass in E flat, Schubert. Loreley (finale), Mendelssohn. Tannhäuser (Act III.) and Grail scene from Parsifal, Wagner. Psalm 150, Franck. The Golden Legend, Sullivan. The Kingdom, Elgar. 'He giveth his beloved sleep,' Cowen. * Omar Khayyam (Part II.), Bantock. * The coming of Arthur, David Evans. * Sir Patrick Spens, A. Herbert Brewer. * A work (title not yet fixed) by Sir Hubert Parry.

ORCHESTRAL: Symphony in C minor and Leonora overture (No. 3), Beethoven. Romeo and Juliet symphony, Berlioz. Symphony in E minor, Tchaikovsky. Don Juan, symphonic poem, Strauss. Overture, The butterfly's ball, Cowen. * Overture, 'Summer,' Hervey. * Two Norfolk Rhapsodies, No. 2 in D minor, No. 3, Alla marcia in G minor and G major, Vaughan Williams.

In olden times Protection reigned supreme as regards the practice of music in the City of London. That the Waits possessed great powers of determining who should or should not exercise their professional avocations is shown by the following extract from The Daily Post of July 7, 1724:

> The Trial between the City Waits and Mr. Green, Organist of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, for his exercising the science of Musick in this City without being Free thereof, is put off till next Tuesday.

The trial duly came off as is hereunder reported:

> Yesterday was try'd in the Lord Mayor's Court at Guildhall, the Cause between the Chamberlain of London Plaintiff, and Mr. Green, a blind Gentleman, Organist of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, Defendant, on account of the latter's practising Musick in the City for Gain without being a Freeman; the Prosecution was grounded on an Act of Common Council made in the 4th of King James the 1st, which lays a Penalty of 5*l* on any Person presuming to exercise any manual Occupation within the City, not being free thereof. It was insisted in his Defence, that Musick was a Liberal Science, and therefore not restrain'd by that Law, but a Distinction being made by the Plaintiff's Council (sic), between the scientifical Part, and the manual Part, a Verdict was given in Favour of the Plaintiff.—(The Daily Post, July 15, 1724.)

As Mr. Green was an organist, he most certainly followed a 'manual occupation.' He, however, got over the trying difficulty caused by the Waits by becoming a Leatherseller, the following extract from the same newspaper (July 23, 1724) furnishing proof thereof:

> On Tuesday last Mr. Green, Organist of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, was presented to the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen and yesterday was admitted a Member of the Company of Leathersellers, and made a Freeman of the City of London, which Freedom he has purchas'd, that he may continue his Business of Musick in the City, where he has practis'd these 21 years.

In 1708 the Vestry of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, ordered that 'Mr. Green, the organ-player for the time to come be paid yearly by the Parish the £10 which used to be paid him by the late Clerke,' his salary up to that time having filtered through the hands of the sexton or sextoness.

M. Pierre Gailhard, who on the last day of this year will cease to be director of the Paris Grand-Opéra, was at one time a successful vocalist at the Paris Opéra and Opéra-Comique; he also appeared at Covent Garden during every season from 1879 to 1883. He was appointed manager with M. Ritt of the Paris Opéra; in 1891 he was re-elected by M. Bertrand as partner, and on the death of the latter in 1899 became sole manager. M. André Charles Prosper Messager, who will succeed him on January 1, 1908, is favourably known as a composer. His first success was in 'La Béarnaise,' produced at Paris in 1885, and in London at the Prince of Wales Theatre in the same year. His best known works, however, are 'La Basoche,' 'Les petites Michus' and 'Véronique,' all three of which have been given in London, and with remarkable success. Since 1901 M. Messager has been Artistic Director at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden.

The Leeds Triennial Musical Festival is to be held on October 9, 10, 11 and 12, under the conductorship of Sir Charles V. Stanford. A preliminary programme thus outlines the scheme, the works prefixed with an asterisk having been composed expressly for the occasion, or to be performed for the first time:

Choral: Israel in Egypt (selection). Acis and Galatea, Handel. Mass in B minor, Bach. Requiem, Mozart. Choral Symphony, Beethoven. 'O death' (part-song), Cornelius. 'The love that casteth out fear,' Parry. The Kingdom, Elgar. * Stabat Mater, Stanford. * Pastorals, Brewer. * 'Toward the unknown region,' Vaughan Williams. * Folk-songs, Rutland Boughton. * Intimations of immortality, Somervell. * Sea wanderers, Granville Bantock.

Orchestral: Symphony in C, Haydn. Symphony in C, Schubert. Symphony in D, Brahms. Symphony, No. 8, Glazounov. Hebrides overture, Mendelssohn. Meistersinger overture and Walkurenritt, Wagner.

In addition to the above there will be performed a selection from the works of Grieg, including his 'Olav Trygvason,' for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. Dr. Grieg has promised to attend the festival and conduct his own compositions.

The article in another column on 'An interview between Rossini and Wagner' recalls two smart sayings of the composer of 'William Tell.' 'There are three kinds of music,' he once said to Gounod, 'there is good music, there is bad, and Ambroise Thomas.' On another occasion a drummer, desirous of securing a testimonial from Rossini, obtained permission to bring his drums to the residence of the master. 'Now, what do you intend to play to me?' asked Rossini. 'I propose to perform the maestro's overture to Semiramide,' replied the drummer. After he had played the long roll on D (thirty-seven bars) with which the overture opens, the drummer came to the nineteen bars' rest of the andantino movement. 'I will miss those,' said the drummer. 'No, no, count them, please,' said the maestro.

'Holz tells me that it is your intention to publish a larger size of the engraving representing Handel's monument in St. Peter's Church, London [Westminster Abbey]. This affords me extreme pleasure, independent of the fact that I was the person who suggested it. Accept my thanks in anticipation.—Beethoven.' (From a letter to Gottfried Weber, April 3, 1826.)

NOTES ON A PAYBOOK.

A sequel—not without interest perhaps—is furnished to the recent articles on St. Paul's by the first account-book of the building of the present cathedral. This disbursement folio volume (15 by 9½ inches), is one of several similarly vellum-bound tomes in the cathedral library. It is stamped in relief on the cover with the arms of the cathedral, and a written title reads 'A Paybook From Michs. 1675 to Michls. 1676.' Unlike account-books of the present day, this Paybook has no printed ruled lines. The money columns are ruled in ink, and the lines across the page in pencil by the clerk who kept the book.

Page 1 of the volume is headed:

> Charges of Work done for and towards y^{e} Rebuilding of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in London from the first day of October, 1675, to the last day of the same moneth.

The first name is that of Stephen Holt, 'a joyner employed in making moulds for the masons' at ij*s.* vi*d. p. diem.* (In estimating this and the other amounts given in these 'notes,' it should be remembered that the value of money is now about four times greater than it was in 1675.) The masons were paid at the same rate as the joyner, half-a-crown a day, as also were the carpenters, the work of the latter being set forth as:

> Employed in making of Travesses, mending and making of Treadways. In making of Centers and measuring rods. In taking down scaffolding, mending of Barrows and the like work.

Two sawyers, 'in cutting of Timber for Travesses & centers,' received 2*d.* a day less than the carpenters —namely, ij*s.* iv*d.* Labourers—the names of all the 124 men thus employed, and of all the other workmen 'on the job' are given in full detail—were paid xvi*d. per diem*, a wage raised in March, 1676, to xviii*d.* These hardy sons of toil were:

> employed in making of Mortar. In screening and sifting of ffine Rubbish. In wheeling Rubbish to several places. In wheeling drudging and carrying stones from the west end of the Church and other places to the masons work. In pumping and carrying water to the mortar heaps. In tallying the lime, sand and Rubbish carts. Keeping the dores and the like work.

The Watchmen, of whom there were fourteen, received 1*s.* a night.

Following the above payments is an entry of the monthly salary, at the rate of £200 a year, to Sir Christopher Wren, which we give in facsimile on page 238: from which it will be seen that his October salary was not paid till the following January. It will be noticed that the book serves the purpose of a receipt-book, as all payments are signed by the recipients against their respective amounts in the money column, and, moreover, they are witnessed in the column on the extreme left of the book; in regard to the labourers and others, the foremen signed on their behalf. The payment next to the great architect's is that to Edward Woodroof (and afterwards to John Oliver) of £8 6*s.* 8*d.* per month for his salary as assistant surveyor. The next entry reads:

> To John Tillison for his attendance in y^{e} work, in overseeing the workmen, provideing of materialls and utensills for y^{e} work. In receiving of moneys, and paying of y^{e} workmens wages, and in keeping and making up these Accounts, and double engrossing y^{e} same this moneth [October, 1675] . . . 08 06 08

FACSIMILE OF THE ENTRY IN THE FIRST PAYBOOK OF THE BUILDING OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, RECORDING THE PAYMENT OF SIR CHRISTOPHER WREN'S SALARY FOR THE MONTH OF OCTOBER, 1675, WITH THE GREAT ARCHITECT'S RECEIPT THEREFOR. ON THE LEFT OF THE ENTRY IS THE SIGNATURE OF THE WITNESS TO THAT OF SIR CHRISTOPHER WREN.

Here it should be remembered that Mr. John Tillison, who seems to have been a sort of factotum in the building operations, deserves full commendation for having so neatly kept this Paybook in a manner that would do credit to a 20th century accountant.

Immediately following the entries of wages and salaries is the heading

PROVISSIONS.

This heading does not refer to disbursements for the 'inner man,' but to materials (as we should now call them) for the building of the interior of the cathedral. Here are detailed entries for lime—602 cwt. at 6*s.* 9*d.* per cwt.—sand, wood, timber, plumbing, &c. Some of the accounts were partly set off in kind, as when George Drew, a smith, received 'Six tunns of old iron. Remainder to be paid in money,' the net amount being £22 01 0¾! This 'old iron' was doubtless a portion of the remains of the old cathedral saved from the fire. Under the head of 'Carriages' John Slyford was paid £37 13 00 'for cartage of 753 loads of Rubbish from St. Paul's Church at 12*d.* per load.' An entry under 'Task work' reads:

> For taking up one hundred and forty yards of a foundation wall, being the bottome of the south east pillar of the old tower steeple at 2*s.* per yard.

The name of Thomas Strong, the master mason who was engaged on the building of the cathedral throughout the time of its erection, first appears in a payment for 'raising the rubble wall in the Cross yard.' While the names of all those who supplied the 'Provissions' are given without any prefixes, an exception occurs in regard to Capt. Rich (or Peter Rich, Esqre.), who supplied 'Dramme Baulkes, small masts, and Handspikes.' Some of the entries are quaintly expressed, e.g.:

> John Langland for the use of his Tackle and rope about raiseing the Scaffold at the north Gable one and takeing the same down again 40 dayes; the same haveing sustained harm by hanging in the wett and part of it being cutt off and stolen away . . . 03 10 00

Law charges find a place in that John Houghton was paid £9 16 00 'for drawing 2 bills in Chancery, fees of Counsell, &c.' It would appear that some of the stone for building the cathedral was obtained from Portland without payment (except the freight to London), as an entry in January, 167⅚, reads:

> John Tillison for several Disbursmts made by him in solliciting and procureing his Mates Grant and licence for digging and raiseing stone in the Isle of Portland (Mr. Sec. Williamson remitting £15 for his own ffees) 49 10 10

The cost of the 'fraight' of 1100 tons of stone 'from Weymouth to the Port of London' was £477 17 9, exclusive of its cartage from St. Katherine's Docks to the cathedral.

In May, 1676, a gratuity payment of £50 was made to 'Sr. Thomas Player, Knt., Chamberlain of London':

> to be by him divided amongst his Clerks by order of the Commissioners for their paines taken in receiveing and paying the moneys brought into the Chamber of London for repairing and new building of ye Church, keeping the accompts &c.

AN ENTRY IN THE PAYBOOK CONCERNING MEAT FOR THE DOGGE AND HIS MUZZLE.

In June, 1676, is a payment:

> To Mr. Thomas Garfoot for the Privy Seal for Bp. Lanios £20 11*s.* 8*d.*, ffor the Privy Seal for the green wax money £20 11*s.* 8*d.*, ffor his horse hire and rideing charges to ffarnham £1. In all £42.03.04.

There is just a suspicion of extravagance in the payment (July, 1676) to William Paris of £14 04 05½, for what appears to be the furnishing of the office. For instance, there were '62 yards and 3 qtrs. of green printed stuff at 2*s.* a yard; 34 yards of gilt lether round the top of the roome at 3*d.* a yard; 4½ lbs. of curled hair at 15*d.* a pound, ffor tow and stuffing the seates, 10*s.* 6*d.*; ffor gilt leather, brass nailes and tacks for covering the desk.' 'A large purple chair' cost £1 3*s.*, and 'ffor a new carpet for the table in the office' the sum of £1 2*s.* 6*d.* was paid.

Under what we should now call 'petty cash' are some odd and amusing entries. '2 candlesticks for the office' cost 8*s.*; 'a pair of Snuffers, Safeall, and extinguisher, 2*s.* 6*d.*; 6 lbs. of candles at 5*d.* per lb.; for 2 half lanthorns for the door and stayres to the office 5*s.* 4*d.*; for one whole lanthorn 2*s.* 8*d.*' A 'pewter inkestandish' cost 5*s.* Dr. Murray, in his 'New English Dictionary,' gives c. 1730 as the date for the earliest use of this word—from which we doubtless obtain 'inkstand' as its contraction—but the above reference furnishes a date fifty years earlier; 'inkpot,' it should be noted, is found earlier still, by Dr. Murray, in 1553.

The dog frequently appears in these accounts of the first year of the building of St. Paul's Cathedral. One of these entries—for meat and a muzzle—we give in facsimile above; but we also find (in May, 1676) details of a disbursement of 4*s.* for food for these canine members of the staff in '12 livers for the dogs at 4*d.* a piece,' while two months later a 'new chollar for yr great dog' cost 3*s.* 6*d.*

This first Paybook, containing the accounts for the year 1675-76, was made up monthly, and as Sir Christopher Wren and his assistant signed their names against each monthly total, the great architect's signature (including the receipts for his 'salary') appears twenty-four times. The totals are given to the uttermost farthing, as will be seen from the subjoined summary:

October - - -	£561	13	4
November - - -	497	7	6
December - - -	362	18	7½
1676
January - - -	495	11	10
February - - -	428	17	4¾
March - - - -	1,428	10	5
(This amount includes two payments of £500 and £400 respectively, for contracts of work done at the east end of the Choir).
April - - - -	570	9	8¾
May - - - -	664	13	4
June - - - -	694	8	1
July - - - -	877	4	1½
August - - - -	773	5	2½
September - - -	2,091	9	4
Total for the year, October, 1675, to October, 1676 -	£9,446	8	11

It should be mentioned that the totals are duplicated by Roman figures placed against the ordinary numerals, doubtless as a check—thus the amount expended in October, 1675, is set forth

Church and Organ Music.

THE PARISH CLERK.

Sydney Smith described the parish clerk as 'a very sensible man, with great amenity of disposition.' The Rev. P. H. Ditchfield's recently issued book 'The Parish Clerk' (Methuen & Co.), tends to confirm the opinion of the witty canon. These interesting pages contain much entertaining information concerning a race of church officials that is rapidly becoming extinct. There can be no doubt about the antiquity of the office, as it dates back to the times of Augustine and King Ethelbert. In mediæval times he discharged the duties of choirmaster; thus the accounts of St. Giles's, Reading, contain the following entry in the year 1544-45:

> Pay^{d} to Whitbourne the clerk towards his wages and he to be bound to teach ij children for the choir - - - - - - - - - - xij*s.*

The Clerk not only sang the psalms and canticles and made responses, but read the lessons. For example, at Ludlow, in 1551, he received 3*s.* 4*d.* for reading the first lesson. Some amusing instances of clerkly misreadings of the psalms are given. An old clerk who had been a sailor read the 26th verse of Psalm 104 as 'There go the ships, and there is that lieutenant whom Thou hast made to take his pastime therein,' while a shoemaker clerk used to call it 'that great leatherthing,' a rendering which he adhered to till the last. One that had a shrewish wife, rolled out in stentorian tones 'Woe is me that I am constrained to dwell with Missis,' instead of 'Mesech'! Another quaint specimen of the fraternity regarded with such importance the capitals printed JAH that he would never read the word, but always spelt it—J-A-H.

Honest John Playford, clerk of the Temple Church in 1652—'one to whose memory all parish clerks owe a debt of gratitude for their furtherance in the knowledge of psalmody'—tells us that 'the ancient practice of singing the psalms in church was for the clerk to repeat each line, probably because, at the first introduction of psalms into our service great numbers of the common people were unable to read.' The vocal achievements of the parish clerk were not always above reproach. One Thomas Milborne, clerk of Eastham in Jacobean times, was guilty of several enormities which included 'that he singeth the psalms in church with such a jesticulous tone and altisonant voice, viz., squeaking like a gelded pig, which doth not only interrupt the other voices, but is altogether dissonant and disagreeing unto any musical harmony, and he hath been requested by the minister to leave it, but he doth obstinately persist and continue therein.' A Sussex rector remarks in the parish register upon the death of his clerk thus: 'whose melody warbled forth as if he had been thumped on the back with a stone.'

Considering that the parish clerk often discharged the duties of sexton, it is not surprising that he formed a good subject for the muse of the epitaphist. Of the various examples given by Mr. Ditchfield we select two:

Old Sternhold's lines or Vicar of Bray,
Which he tuned best 'twas hard to say.

The next records the musical and matrimonial accomplishments of one Peter Snell, thirty years clerk of Crayford, Kent, who 'lived respected as a pious and mirthful man, and died on his way to assist at a wedding.'

The life of this clerk was just threescore and ten,
Nearly half of which time he had sung Amen.
In his youth he had married like other young men,
But his wife died one day—so he chanted Amen.
A second he took—she departed—what then?
He married and buried a third with Amen.
Thus his joys and his sorrows were treble, but then
His voice was deep base, as he sung out Amen.
On the horn he could blow as well as most men,
So his horn was exalted to blowing Amen.
But he lost all his wind after threescore and ten,
And here with three wives he waits till again
The trumpet shall rouse him to sing out Amen.

Parish clerks themselves supplied epitaphs. Here is an advertisement of one John Hopkins, a most accomplished and versatile man, who officiated at one of the Salisbury churches at the end of the 18th century:

> John Hopkins, parish clerk and undertaker, sells epitaphs of all sorts and prices.
>
> Shaves neat, and plays the bassoon.
>
> Teeth drawn, and the Salisbury Journal read every Sunday morning at eight.
> A school for psalmody every Thursday evening, when my son, born blind, will play the fiddle.
> Specimen epitaph on my wife:
> My wife ten years not much to my ease,
> But now she is dead, in cœlo quies.
> Great variety to be seen within.
> Your humble servant,
> John Hopkins.

Not the least interesting section of Mr. Ditchfield's readable volume are the chapters devoted to the Worshipful Company of Parish Clerks, which, according to Stow, was incorporated and registered A.D. 1233, and still exists, as does their hall. In 1610 the master and wardens were an examining body as they 'had power granted to them to examine clerks as to whether they could sing the Psalms of David according to the usual tunes used in the parish churches.' The Parish Clerks' Company played an important part in the old city life of London. They held their services in the Guildhall Chapel, and were required to sing the Mass before the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and commoners previous to the election of the Chief Magistrate, as when the famous Richard Whittington succeeded to that office. To quote from Mr. Ditchfield:

> And when Mass was no longer sung in the chapel of the Guildhall, they still chanted the Psalms and anthems before and after divine service and sermon, sometimes with the help of 'two singing men of Paul's,' who received twelvepence a piece for their pains; and sometimes the singing was done by a convenient number of the Clerk's Company most skilful in singing, and deemed most fit by the master and wardens to perform that service.

It need scarcely be said that these pages of 'The Parish Clerk' teem with anecdotes concerning the subject of which it so ably treats. One old man, upon being asked his occupation, said: 'I hardly know what I be. First vicar he called me clerk; then another came, and he called me virgin; the last vicar said I was a christian [sacristan], and now I be a clerk again.' For unconscious humour the following would be hard to beat. A Lancashire rector, standing in the reading-desk of an old 'three-decker' pulpit, was about to publish the banns of marriage when he found that the book was not in its usual place.

However, he began: 'I publish the banns of marriage . . . I publish . . . the banns——' ''twixt th' cushion and th' desk, sur,' audibly added the clerk. Another good man, with a penchant for reading sermons, was greatly puzzled by the reference to the 'leg-end' of the story of the raising of Lazarus in a sermon preached by Bishop Tait. Mistaken zeal is illustrated by the following story. When Queen Victoria came to the throne the rector of a certain parish asked the clerk to make the necessary alterations in the Prayer Book necessitated by the sex of the new sovereign. Not only did he carefully carry out the parson's wish in regard to titles and pronouns, but he made similar changes throughout the whole of the Psalter! Therefore, on the fourth morning of the month the astonished rector found Psalm 21 rendered thus: 'The Queen shall rejoice in Thy strength, O Lord, exceeding glad shall She be of Thy salvation,' and so on, while in the prayer for the Church Militant the distracted clergyman found the words changed into 'Queen, Princesses,' &c.

A dog story is too good not to be told, even in a slightly different form from that given by Mr. Ditchfield. A clergyman was taking temporary duty for a neighbour. Just before starting for church his dog got hold of his sermon, and ate some of the leaves. There was no time to make good the dog-devoured dogma, and the parson proceeded on his way. After the service he said to the clerk, in a confidential tone of voice: 'Was my sermon all right this morning? Did it seem long enough?' 'A very nice sermon, sir,' replied the clerk, 'and just the right length.' 'I am very glad to hear you say that,' said the parson, 'because just before I started to come here my dog ate some of the leaves of my sermon, and I had no time to write them out afresh.' 'Couldn't you give our vicar a pup of that dog, sir?' gently asked the clerk.

The temptation to further quotation from Mr. Ditchfield's entertaining pages must be resisted. Enough has, however, been said to attract readers to a volume which is sure to prove a source of enjoyment. One story, not given in the book, may be told because it used greatly to amuse Mendelssohn during his visits to London. A parish clerk officiating at a funeral wore a red waistcoat. When the service was over the clergyman remonstrated with him as to the effect of the colour of his habiliment upon the feelings of the mourners. 'Never mind, sir,' he replied, 'what does it matter if the heart is black'!

A NEW CHANT BOOK FOR THE CHURCH OF IRELAND.

Thirty-three years ago the Association for Promoting Christian Knowledge (Dublin) issued a collection of 'Chants Ancient and Modern, Responses, &c.' as a companion volume to the 'Church Hymnal' which had been previously published. In 1883 a new and enlarged edition of the book appeared, edited by the late Sir Robert Stewart, and now an entirely new book of Chants and Responses, published by the above Association, is before us. Compiled by a small but competent committee (which included Mr. L. L. Dix), and with Dr. T. R. G. Jozé and the Rev. Dr. G. W. Torrance as editors, the volume does credit to all concerned.

The chief features of this excellent collection are fourfold. First, the contents are so comprehensive as to include chant settings for the Te Deum, suggested chants for Canticles, chants for the Psalms, in addition to single, double, triple and quadruple chants, and single and double chants for male voices—all these filling 171 pages. The remainder of the book consists of Responses to the Commandments, Doxologies, Amens, Sentences, Preces and Responses, making a volume of over 200 pages.

Secondly: Two settings of chants appropriate for each morning and evening division of the Psalter are given. To quote from the Preface: 'The "First Settings" have been prepared with special regard to the needs and capabilities of small choirs, and all difficult and ornate chants have been carefully avoided, as well as those with high reciting notes. In no case is the reciting note for the treble voice higher than D flat. The "Second Settings" may be used by larger or more experienced choirs. In both Settings care has been taken to use only such chants as are appropriate to the feeling and character of the Psalms to which they are assigned.' Here is a most commendable attempt to poetise, so to speak, by the aid of appropriate music, the manifold beauties of the Psalms, which are, alas! so often mechanically maltreated.

Thirdly: Special attention has been given to the 'key scheme,' whereby the key relationship of the chants has been carefully studied.

Fourthly: No fewer than seventy-five different single chants, all of them good, have been provided for the Venite.

Such are the main features of a compilation that deserves to be warmly welcomed, no less for its musical value than its practical nature. That it will conduce to the improvement of the services of the Church of Ireland is a foregone conclusion.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The new organ, built by Messrs. Norman & Beard, was inaugurated on February 26 at a function attended by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, when the latter performed the opening ceremony by touching an electric button. Various speeches were made of a congratulatory nature, and a short selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed, the programme of which, however, did not include any composition by Bach! The following is the specification of the instrument:

Great Organ (7 stops).

	Feet.		Feet.
Open diapason	8	Harmonic flute	4
Wald flute	8	Fifteenth	2
Dolce	8	Trumpet	8
Principal	4

Swell Organ (9 stops).

Contra gamba	16	Principal	4
Open diapason	8	Dulciana mixture (3 ranks)	—
Rohr flute	8	Horn	8
Echo gamba	8	Oboe	8
Voix celeste	8	Tremulant.

Choir Organ (6 stops).

Enclosed in a Swell Box.

Dulciana	8	Lieblich flute	4
Gamba	8	Piccolo	2
Lieblich gedackt	8	Corno di bassetto	8

Pedal Organ (4 stops).

Violone	16	Bourdon	16
Open diapason	16	Bass flute	8

Manual compass: CC to C. Pedal compass: CCC to G.

Couplers.

Swell octave.
Swell to Great.
Swell to Choir.
Choir sub-octave to Great.
Swell to pedal.
Great to pedal (double action poppet, with drawstop on both jambs).
Choir to pedal.

Accessories.

Three composition pedals to Great, acting also on suitable pedal combinations.
Three composition pedals to swell.
Two on and off pedals controlling Great to pedal coupler.
The wind for the organ is supplied by a patent Kinetic blower and an electric motor.

DR. S. S. WESLEY'S 'O GOD, WHOSE NATURE.'

The issue of this anthem in the music pages of The Musical Times calls for some comment in addition to the note which appears on the first page of the composition, a note which may be partly repeated here:

This edition of Dr. Wesley's anthem is reprinted from the only authorised version, as finally revised by the composer in the year 1870. The anthem was originally published in or about 1831, when the composer was twenty years of age; therefore, the music as here printed is the result of his forty years' matured experience.

The anthem, which is probably a more or less juvenile effort of Wesley's, made its first appearance in a collection thus entitled:

> No. 8.
>
> A Collection of Anthems and other Sacred Music as used at His Majesty's Chapels Royal, and the various cathedrals throughout the kingdom selected from antient and modern composers edited by W. Hawes, and by him inscribed to the Rev. Dr. Barrett.
> To be continued. Pr. 2/6.
> London: Published by W. Hawes, 355, Strand.
> Now publishing in numbers 2/6 each, a Collection of Chants, Sanctuses, and Commandments, to correspond with the above work.

No. 8 of this folio publication consists of the chorale 'God of our sires' by Méhul and the Wesley anthem. The latter was reviewed in the Harmonicon of September, 1831, in the following terms:

Anthem, 'O God, whose nature and property,' for four voices, sung at St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey, composed by S. S. Wesley. (Hawes, 355, Strand.)

This is a short, full anthem, written in the true cathedral style, even to the white notes, as the Germans call breves, semibreves, and minims—notes that always excite in our minds images of . . . . . The high embowed roof,

With antic pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light—with all the corresponding train of surplices, hoods, and square caps. It little departs from that simple counterpoint which is so well adapted to the words, and is a composition no less pleasing than devotional. We would point out to the notice of the author two double octaves in the seventh bar, which are not reckoned orthodox in ecclesiastical music, and, indeed, are quite out of place where the severe style is adopted. In the same bar also,. 'and' is made long instead of the previous word 'mercy.' It stands thus—but should have been written—

In the third bar of page 5, is a passage which, at first, we were inclined to believe an error of the engraver, but as the voice and organ parts agree, we can only conclude it to be intentional. It is objectionable in every way. Still, as the plates of this have been very carelessly corrected, it is just possible that the fault is not the author's. But these are trifles easily remedied, and we recommend the present anthem to the notice of our choirs, and to all who take an interest in sacred harmony.

May we not, at this distance of seventy-six years, fully endorse the last sentence of the above notice?

THE WELSH FESTIVAL AT ST. PAUL'S.

The annual National Welsh Festival was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening, February 28, in the presence of a large congregation. Previous to the commencement of the service the Grenadier Guards Band performed a selection of music, which included an effective Overture in C, composed by the Bandmaster, Lieut. A. Williams, who wore the full-dress robes of a Doctor of Music. Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts, choirmaster of the Festival and to whom so much of the success of these services is due, played Handel's first Organ concerto. The service—which was in Welsh throughout, except one verse of 'God save the King'—began with the Welsh National Anthem (verse 1) sung in procession, and accompanied by band and organ:

Mae hen wlad fy nhadau yn anwyl i mi—
Gwlad beirdd a chantorion, enwogion o fri;
Ei gwrol ryfelwyr, gwladgarwyr tra mad,
Dros ryddid gollasant eu gwaed.
Gwlad, gwlad, pleidiol wyf i'm gwlad;
Tra môr yn fur i'r bur hoff bau,
O bydded i'r hen iaith barhau.

This was followed by two processional hymns. The Psalms were sung to organ accompaniment only, but the band joined in at the Glorias with thrilling effect, a side-drum roll, crescendo, slightly anticipating the outburst (in vocal unison) of choir, organ, and band at 'Gogoniant i'r Tad ac i'r Mab: ac i'r Yspryd Glân,' &c. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (in F) were by Mr. David Thomas (who shared with Mr. Meyrick Roberts the duties of organist) and the Anthem, 'Cenwch i Dduw' was composed by Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, late organist of Bangor Cathedral. At the conclusion of the service an Epithalamium, in the form of a March, by Mr. Meyrick Roberts, was performed by band and organ. This festive piece, by the way, was composed by Mr. Roberts when he was a chorister at St. Asaph Cathedral.

This was the sixteenth National Welsh Festival held in St. Paul's; the first was in 1890, and since 1894 they have taken place annually. Two features mark the service as being specially impressive—the fine band of the Grenadiers and the wonderful singing of the Welsh hymns to well-known tunes by the vast congregation which filled the Cathedral from end to end.

AN EX-CATHEDRAL ORGANIST ON CHURCH MUSIC.

Mr. C. Lee Williams, late organist of Gloucester Cathedral, read a thoughtful paper at a ruri-decanal meeting held at the Chapter House, Gloucester, on March 5, when he took for his subject 'Music in village, town, and cathedral.' In regard to villages the lecturer advocated a mixed choir 'in places where boys' voices are a trouble,' and that the music should be 'of a simple and more congregational character,' its aim being 'to aid the congregation to sing with heartiness and good-will, instead of compelling them to take the part of rather bored and weary listeners.' As to town churches, he suggested that while choirs should be encouraged to sing anthems and oratorio selections, the congregation should have full opportunity of 'singing lustily and with good courage,' and to this end he asked his clerical audience, 'Why not try a congregational rehearsal at the end of a service?'

Referring to choirs Mr. Williams said: 'It is always most desirable to keep a voluntary choir working at something; there is no standing still or resting on your laurels in choir training; you must go forward or you will go back. The study of anthems and other selections is, of course, excellent practice. Here undoubtedly is the place for the choir to edify by their helpful rendering of some beautiful work.' No less practical were his remarks on unaccompanied singing. He said: 'I have always found that a choir makes more progress during their study of some unaccompanied anthem than anything else. The huge powerful organs of the present day are, perhaps, partly responsible for the eclipse (a partial one, I trust, but plainly visible in England) of the art of refined unaccompanied singing. Those in authority who have the courage to study with their choirs some simple unaccompanied music, will be amply repaid by the obvious progress to a higher standard of part-singing, whether it be sacred or secular.' These are wise words which should be carefully pondered over and put into practice.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

No one is more competent to lecture on 'Organ arrangements' than Dr. A. L. Peace, for is he not a masterful interpreter of all such transcriptions? If the organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, did not add anything to the history of 'arrangements for the organ' in his discourse delivered at the College on March 9, he thoroughly interested his audience, and his fine renderings of the 'Die Zauberflöte' overture, Schubert's Pianoforte duet in A, and Grieg's 'Huldigungsmarsch' met with unqualified approval. Dr. Peace wisely advised organ students to study classical organ music before taking up pieces arranged for the instrument; and he thought the time might come when 'arrangement' tests would form a subject in examination schemes, both in paper work and at the organ.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

A special musical service was held at Canterbury Cathedral on Thursday evening, February 28, when the second part of Handel's 'Messiah' and Mendelssohn's 'Forty-second Psalm' were performed, with orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of the organist, Dr. H. C. Perrin, with Mr. W. T. Harvey, assistant organist, at the organ.

The Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs held their nineteenth annual Service of Praise at Regent Square Presbyterian Church on March 12, under the direction of Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson, honorary conductor of the Association. The service music included Sullivan's anthem, 'I will sing of Thy power' and Gounod's motet 'Gallia,' Miss Josephine Ottley singing the soprano solo in the latter work. Mr. Arthur Godfrey accompanied, and the voluntaries were played by Messrs. H. C. J. Churchill and Mr. T. Ernest Murray. Natural expression and a clear enunciation of the words characterized the singing of the combined choirs, and the service was charged throughout with devotional feeling.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at Bath Abbey on March 13 by the Avon Vale Musical Society and the choir of the church, the band and chorus numbering 150 performers. Mr. J. S. Liddle conducted and Mr. Albert New, organist of the Abbey, was at the organ.

After Evensong on Sunday, March 17, Mendelssohn's unfinished oratorio 'Christus' was sung by the choir of Tewkesbury Abbey, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine.

The recent performance of Bach's Passion Music in Ely Cathedral is referred to on p. 257.

Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, acting under medical advice, is taking a three months' rest in order to recuperate after a breakdown due to overwork. On February 25, the day previous to his departure from Ripon, a deputation waited upon him and, on behalf of many friends and sympathisers, presented him with a handsome cheque sufficient to defray the expenses of his enforced holiday. May the change of scene and air which Malta, Sicily, and Egypt supply, and the rest from work, speedily restore the Ripon organist to his wonted activities.

The Rev. Arnold D. Culley has been appointed organist of Durham Cathedral in succession to Dr. Philip Armes, who has held that office with distinction for the long period of forty-five years. As Mr. Culley is also a minor canon and precentor of the Cathedral, there should be no differences of opinion between the organist and precentor! The Dean and Chapter of Durham have thus followed the example of Wells in appointing an ordained clergyman to a post which has long been held by laymen in English cathedrals.

Mr. Fountain Meen, one of the professors of the organ, gave an interesting recital on the new organ at the Guildhall School of Music on March 20, when his programme included Hatton's Toccata in F sharp minor and Smart's Grand Solemn March.

Mr. Charles H. Nutton, St. George's Congregational Church, West Hartlepool.

Mr. W. Whittle, Parish Church, Daventry.

At the Annual Meeting of the Christchurch (N.Z.) Musical Union, Mr. Thomas Garrard was presented with an illuminated address and a purse of 100 sovereigns on his retirement from the offices of hon. secretary and treasurer, which he had occupied for fourteen years. The address stated that 'the undoubted success of the Society has been largely due to the capable manner in which you have managed its affairs and to the personal esteem in which you are held by the members.' Mr. Garrard will still be associated with the Musical Union as one of the trustees.

Reviews.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland. Vol. iii. London: Macmillan & Co., Ltd. 1907.

Those of us who are old enough to recall the feelings of delight with which we hailed the somewhat fitful appearances of the quarterly instalments of the original edition of 'Grove,' will be glad to renew those feelings on receiving this new volume. It appears in the form of a tome of 860 pages, covering the letters M to P. In the original work these letters, including the supplement in the calculation, were comprised in 700 pages; there is therefore an addition of over one-fifth of new matter. We have been at the pains of making a careful comparison, and find that the number of fresh contributions or of material addition to old articles amounts to upwards of 350.

Our readers will at once ask in what these additions consist. Among the most noticeable is the article on Mendelssohn. This, it will be remembered, was by the late Sir George Grove. Perhaps it originally rather exceeded that due proportion which it is so difficult to maintain in a work of this nature, but it was written with such loving care that to curtail it was not to be thought of. On the other hand, in the lapse of seven and twenty years much new matter has come to light, and this has been judiciously supplied by Mr. F. G. Edwards, who has also made a few necessary corrections. We have specially to thank him for the excellent table which he has drawn up of Mendelssohn's compositions, showing the opus number, date, dedication, and both foreign and English publisher of each work.

Pohl's monograph on Mozart remains, with some additions from the pen of Mr. W. H. Hadow, the most important of which refers to Mozart's concertos for various instruments, and they include a very interesting catalogue of portraits of the master. The list of musicians who have attained to celebrity since the previous issue falling within the limits is not a large one. Probably the name that has been most before the public is that of Mascagni, of whom Mr. Streatfeild rightly says that his reputation rests almost entirely on 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' none of his later works having retained their hold of the public. Mr. Streatfeild also supplies the notice of Puccini. The article on Massenet has been rewritten by the editor, while those on Moussorgsky and Nápravnik of right fall to the lot of Mrs. Newmarch, who we need hardly add is appreciative. We notice that the date of the birth of the latter is given as August 12/26, 1839. This is probably a misprint for August 12/24, the difference between old and new style being twelve days only in the last century. Mr. Arkwright continues his useful work among early English musicians; of his articles, that on Thomas Morley will be found the most important. Sir George Martin is again credited with an Evening Communion Service!

Among Mr. Heron Allen's useful notices of violin makers will be found one on Pressenda, the comparatively modern maker whose violins, owing to increasing demand for Italian instruments, have of late come so strongly into notice and command such high prices. His name is not even mentioned in Vidal's great work, nor in that of Hart. We have again to thank Mr. Kidson for his contributions on 'English Music Publishers.'

The article on Mersenne, although added to, appears to us to be neither adequate nor even correct; in fact, it repeats the errors of the earlier edition. The 'Traité de l'Harmonie Universelle' (1627) is not his most important work, but a comparatively small octavo volume of less than 500 pages, covering a part only of the subject. The really important work is the folio 'Harmonie Universelle' of 1636, which, although containing much that is fanciful, is of the highest value both for the information it contains and for the many examples of works of contemporary musicians. The 'Traité de l'Orgue' has no existence as a separate work; it is simply part of the 'Harmonie Universelle.'

The original biography of Pergolesi is replaced by one from the pen of Mr. E. J. Dent, who is so well and so favourably known for his studies of the Italian musicians of that period. The opinion which has been generally held of this composer, who, it must be remembered, at his death had only just completed his twenty-sixth year, differs greatly from that formed by Mr. Dent. As a composer of sacred music, he looks on him as 'no more than a clever imitator of his master, Durante . . . . Sentimental charm is indeed the chief merit of all Pergolesi's work, sacred or secular.' This may be true, but surely charm is a gift rare enough not to be undervalued, and that quality he possessed in so large a measure that we are frequently and involuntarily reminded of Mozart. An excellent catalogue of his compositions is added—a work of great difficulty, as most of them exist in manuscript only, and scattered about in various European libraries. It is not, however, complete; a 'Laudate pueri' for canto solo, with quartet of voices, strings and wind in the Santini library has escaped Mr. Dent's notice. It must be a well-known work, as three manuscripts of it lie before us as we write. To the modern reprints the air 'Se cerca, se dice,' from 'L'Olimpiade' in Banck's 'Arien und gesänge älterer Tonmeister,' should be added.

Among the more important articles is that on Opera, the early history of which, by Mr. W. S. Rockstro, has been retained. The continuation on Modern Opera by Mr. Streatfeild is careful and judicious, as will be expected by those acquainted with his book on the subject. In no department of art does the decay of reputation show itself more than in opera. Meyerbeer, once so much admired for his dramatic power and skill in orchestration, has become the pet aversion of a large number of musicians since the time when Wagner dubbed him 'a miserable music-maker'—'a Jew banker to whom it occurred to write operas.'

The addition to 'Oratorio' raises a question of great interest—how far an editor is justified in trusting a subject to a writer who is wholly out of sympathy with it. On the first part of the article, the early history of oratorio, which is by Mr. Rockstro, we have nothing to say. It has stood the test of time. In the continuation on Modern Oratorio, which is by Dr. Ernest Walker, he proves himself a master of the art of 'damning with faint praise.' Although England is the home of oratorio, for the judgment of the English public he has an ill-concealed contempt, and for the works of its favourite composer, Handel, a very moderate respect. In the opinion of Dr. Walker, 'the strictly musical world has entirely freed itself from its shackling fetters,' but he graciously admits that 'if it was necessary for us blindly to bow the knee for all time to one single work, no doubt the "Messiah" was the wisest choice.'

One of the most useful contributions to this volume is that of 'Periodicals, Musical,' which embraces English, Continental and American, the last-named by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel; and here we may mention that American music and musicians receive considerable attention. Very handy too is a list of existing collections of musical instruments, compiled by the Rev. F. W. Galpin, himself the possessor of a large and interesting collection. Dr. E. J. Hopkins had so special a gift for the clear explanation of mechanism that his article on the organ has been rightly transferred to this volume; but since it was written the ingenuity of organ-builders has not been idle; activity has been chiefly in the direction of tubular pneumatic action, not only to the keyboards but also to stops and couplers, and in the application of electric power. This necessary addition has been well usspplied by Mr. Thomas Elliston. Sir Walter Parratt's sensible contribution on organ-playing stands as it did. The valuable information on wind instruments has had the advantage of Mr. D. J. Blaikley's skilled supervision.

An article by Mr. Abdy Williams replaces the original on 'Musical Notation.' It is really excellent, and the table of the development of neumes, with their equivalents in plain-song notation, is of great value. Early ritual music is authoritatively treated of by the Rev. W. H. Frere, who also contributes a most learned dissertation on the Greek division of the octave under the word 'Monochord.'

In the article 'Psalter' we must point out that it is the unique 1562 (not 1564) edition of Sternhold and Hopkins that is in the John Rylands (not Ryland) library at Manchester, and that the abbreviated title as given on p. 837 contains at least five errors of transcription.

We have not hesitated to refer to points which, in our judgment, call for revision, but the work as a whole is truly excellent, and should find a place in every musician's library.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Te Deum in D. By Josiah Booth.
Te Deum and Jubilate in D. By F. J. Read.
Benedictus in G. By Herbert W. Wareing.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat. By Healey Willan.
Behold, God is my Salvation. By John E. West.
Jesu, Thou sweetness. By Henry John King.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Booth's setting of the great Eastern hymn is well suited for the majority of choirs. The music is diatonic in character, direct in expression, and the voice parts are doubled by the organ. The sentiment of the verses has been carefully followed, and judicious variety introduced into the vocal writing.

The Te Deum and Jubilate, by Dr. F. J. Read is even more simple than the foregoing work. A considerable portion of the music is written for voices in unison, but this is effectively contrasted by sections harmonized in four parts, and by passages which could be sung by solo voices. The organ accompaniment possesses some independence, being particularly free in the Gloria to the Jubilate.

Dr. Wareing's setting of the Benedictus will present no difficulties to ordinary choirs, as the music is laid out with studied simplicity for the voices, which are appropriately supported by the organ accompaniment. An effective point is made by the choir being unaccompanied in the last verses, which, sung pianissimo, precede a jubilant setting of the Gloria.

The music allied to the evening Canticles by Mr. Willan is modern in character, and would be suitable for a festival service. It demands a well-trained choir, but presents no exceptional difficulties. The setting of the Gloria is extremely effective, and the organ accompaniment bold and free.

The chief characteristic of Mr. West's anthem 'Behold, God is my Salvation,' is the number of effective entrances of the voices in imitation, which are made to emphasize the principal ideas of the text. So judiciously are they planned that they will not be found difficult to take up. The final section brings the composition to a dignified conclusion.

Mr. King's anthem is more complex than any of the above and requires a well-trained choir to do it justice. A soprano solo of sixteen bars is immediately followed by a suave four-part chorus, presently supplemented by the soprano vocalist. The finale possesses strength and dignity, but the threefold Amen, the central one sung fortissimo and the others softly, is somewhat sensational.

Correspondence.

HANDEL'S 'BORROWINGS.'

Sir,—I have read Mr. Sedley Taylor's book, 'The Indebtedness of Handel to Works by other Composers,' with much interest; but I cannot help thinking that in one respect it fails in the matter of justice.

Mr. Taylor more than once points to Handel's 'borrowings' and to Buononcini's theft of a madrigal by Lotti as if they were precisely parallel cases. This, it seems clear to me, they are not.

On moral grounds it may be claimed that as to take what is another man's is dishonest, no question of degree is admissible; but from an artistic point of view such a question is to be allowed. For instance, I suppose that every composer of note has written movements of his own on subjects by other composers, generally without taking the trouble to state his sources. By a hard and fast law of morality this is dishonest; but, artistically, the matter, beyond being one of interest, is insignificant.

Handel not only did this: he often appropriated whole movements by other composers, setting them, with little or no alteration beyond what was necessary in adapting them to new words, in works of his own; and it is this kind of plagiarism which Mr. Taylor compares with Buononcini's treatment of Lotti. But surely there is a difference.

Buononcini took a madrigal written by Lotti, and brought it before the English public as his own, not one note of it being of his own composition.

Handel, on the other hand, in 'Israel in Egypt,' for instance, first planned the scheme of the whole oratorio, adapting his Funeral Anthem as the first part of it, then writing the remainder and introducing at intervals, as he went on, such subjects or movements of his own previous composition, or of the composition of other men, as he found suitable to the verse he happened to be concerned with at the moment; composing or adapting the music to the words of the oratorio and, generally, fitting in the extraneous matter with his own scheme in a manner which, as Mr. Taylor says, shows nothing less than genius.

Whatever may be the moral aspect of Handel's method of procedure, it is by no means the mere robbery which Buononcini perpetrated on Lotti. There was not only the admiration which Buononcini may be presumed to have felt for Lotti's madrigal; there was artistic selection, and there was successful adaptation to be accomplished before the stolen matter could be offered to the public; and there was always the fact that, though part was stolen, the greater and better part of the music, besides the general scheme of the work, was Handel's own.

To take an illustration from a sister art, let us suppose that a painter, A, copies in every detail a one-figure picture by some other painter, and exhibits it in his own name; another painter, B, composes a picture containing fifty figures, and paints it, introducing, say, fifteen or twenty figures from other pictures which he has seen, but introducing them in such a way that the whole is harmonious and in perfect taste—the remaining thirty or thirty-five figures, as well as the general scheme of the picture, being quite his own. Is the fraud of B the same in character or degree as that of A? Of course it is not; indeed, while that of A was necessarily unmitigated and intentional as fraud, it is open to question whether that of B is to be called by so hard a name at all. He had painted many a figure better than those he borrowed for his picture; but these happened to suit his purpose and he used them; in this very picture the principal figures were his own and finer than any he had borrowed; did not this almost give him a right to borrow for his background?

This brings us to the practical question of morality: Is Handel remembered by his own, or by his borrowed movements? Unquestionably by his own. If among a mass of respectable mediocrity we had found gems of which all or most proved to have been extracted from the works of other composers; if, in other words, Handel's reputation as a composer had been made, or even enhanced, by the use he made of other men's music, then we should have known him to be the impostor which some of his critics would have us think him.

The reverse is the truth: his strong situations are his own; the episodes which lead up to them are in some cases the work of other men. Of more than this no impartial critic can accuse him.

There is such a process, I am told, as making mountains of molehills; is not that process too often employed in writing on this subject?

Yours faithfully,
T. W. Bourne.

Sir,—Mr. Bourne thinks that I have 'failed in the matter of justice' by pointing to Handel's borrowings and Buononcini's theft of a madrigal by Lotti 'as if they were precisely parallel cases.' I have, however, nowhere asserted that Handel had reproduced any composition by another master without the alteration of a single note—which alone could constitute a 'precisely parallel case' to Buononcini's theft of Lotti's madrigal. Indeed, I guarded myself, as I thought, on this point by describing (p. 187) two extreme instances of appropriation as 'going to the very verge of the Buononcini procedure'—not as absolutely identical with it. I certainly maintain, however, that cases of appropriation where the changes made are insignificant compared with the matter taken over, ought to be regarded as substantially parallel to that of Buononcini.

In regard to Mr. Bourne's attempt to relieve Handel of all serious blame, I will only suggest that, when property has been unlawfully taken possession of, excellence in the use subsequently made of it is not usually accepted as atoning for the illegality of its acquisition. The charges of representing Handel as an 'impostor,' which Mr. Bourne hurls at 'certain critics,' and of 'making mountains of molehills,' which he fires into space, are too impersonal to call for disavowal or reply. There is, however, one point of fact raised by him on which I ought perhaps to express an opinion.

Mr. Bourne affirms that it is by Handel's own, not by his borrowed, movements that he will be remembered—that his strong situations are his own, and the episodes that lead up to them in some cases the work of other men. This statement is, I consider, made too generally. In the 'Messiah,' by which Handel is predominantly remembered, research has not, so far as I know, detected any non-Handelian materials. But in his other masterpiece, 'Israel in Egypt,' some of the numbers most indissolubly bound up with his memory, including some of their strongest situations, depend on music assigned to other composers. The evidence collected in my book proves this, I think, quite conclusively. I heartily wish that it did not.

Yours truly,
SEDLEY TAYLOR.

A COINCIDENCE.

SIR,—The coincidence I am about to mention must be my apology for addressing you. Last evening I was reading an old number of the Spectator (1712) when I came across a letter or proposal of Mr. Renatus Harris, organ builder, for erecting an organ over the west door of St. Paul's Cathedral. To-day in the Camberwell Library I picked up by chance THE MUSICAL TIMES, and read your interesting article on the organ of St. Paul's Cathedral. I do not think I have ever read THE MUSICAL TIMES before, hence the coincidence.

Although I do not know a note of music, I love it, and I have more than once thought, when I have stood near the west door of St. Paul's and heard the organ from the nave, what a splendid position that would be for an organ. After reading Renatus Harris's letter, and your article, my sympathies are with him.

Yours, &c.,
HENRY JOHNSON.

Obituary.

MR. OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT.

A familiar figure has been removed from the musical life of London by the death of MR. OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT, which event, we are sorry to place on record, occurred at his residence, 1, Moreton Gardens, South Kensington, on February 24, in his seventy-eighth year.

Like Mendelssohn and Brahms, Otto Goldschmidt was born at Hamburg, in which city he drew his first breath on August 29, 1829. His earliest teachers of pianoforte and harmony were two Hamburg musicians, F. W. Grund and Jakob Schmitt, the latter the composer of an opera on the subject of 'Alfred the Great.' At the age of fourteen Goldschmidt became one of the earliest students at the Leipzig Conservatorium, in the same year (1843) that it was founded by Mendelssohn. One of his fellow-students was an Englishman named W. S. Rackstraw, afterwards better known as W. S. Rockstro. At the Conservatoire he studied under Mendelssohn (pianoforte and composition), Plaidy and Schumann; he also took some private pianoforte lessons from Madame Schumann.

After spending two years playing and teaching in his native city, Mr. Goldschmidt went, in 1848, to Paris in order to study under Chopin, but the Revolution placed a barrier to that project; however, he was present at the last Paris concert given by the pianist-composer, of whose wonderful playing he always retained most vivid recollections. From Paris he came to London and made his first appearance in England at a concert given by Jenny Lind on July 31, 1848 (not in 1849, as stated in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'), in aid of the Brompton Hospital for Consumption—a concert which realized the handsome sum of £1,800 for that deserving charity. His solos on that occasion were Liszt's 'Reminiscences di Lucia' and two of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without words.' On March 27, 1849, he appeared at one of John Ella's Musical Union concerts. At Hamburg he gave an orchestral concert at which Jenny Lind sang. We read in the 'Memoir of Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt' that 'They did much music together. He played and she sang; the memory of Mendelssohn was a common bond between them. He began to persuade her to sing again those songs of Mendelssohn which, for two years (since his death in 1847) she had found it impossible for her to touch.' Thus a bond of union was formed between singer and pianist which ripened into life-long affection.

It was in May, 1851, that Jenny Lind invited him to America, where she was in the height of a triumphant tour, in order to fill the post of accompanist to her, vacated by Benedict, who had returned to England. On February 5, 1852, at Boston, Otto Goldschmidt and Jenny Lind were married. They afterwards settled at Dresden, and during the next few years they sang and played at many concerts in Europe, including the British Isles. From 1858 they lived permanently in England. About that time Mr. Goldschmidt was organist of two churches in the neighbourhood of Wimbledon, where he resided, one of these being St. John's Church, Putney. A more permanent result of his interest in church music is furnished by 'The Chorale Book for England' (Preface dated November, 1862), a useful collection of hymn-tunes which he and Sterndale Bennett jointly edited.

In 1863 and 1866 Mr. Goldschmidt conducted the Lower Rhine Musical Festival; in 1863 he became a professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music, and he was Vice-Principal of that institution from 1866 to 1868. Between 1864 and 1869 he had much to do with organizing the music at Rugby School, then under Dr. Temple's headmastership. The Royal order of Wasa Vasa of Sweden (Madame Goldschmidt's native country) was conferred upon him, also the rare honour of the great medal for Art and Literature, with 'Commander Ribbon of the Polar Star,' and he was a member of the Swedish Royal Academy of Music. In England he held several official appointments: Member of the Council of the Royal College of Music from the commencement; honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music; honorary member of the Royal College of Organists; member (and formerly Director) of the Philharmonic Society; vice-president of the Madrigal Society; vice-president of the Musical Association; member of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. His last appearance in public was at a court dinner of the company on July 10, 1906, when, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of Schumann's death, he played, at the age of seventy-seven, the composer's beautiful Andante Variations in B flat for two pianofortes, with remarkable verve and artistic insight, his colleague being Mrs. Cooper, wife of the Master of that year. As chairman of the Mendelssohn Scholarship Committee, Mr. Goldschmidt held a rightful place, as his illustrious wife laid the foundation of that much-coveted prize by a performance of 'Elijah' which she gave in Exeter Hall on December 15, 1848, a year after the composer's death.

He composed the oratorio of 'Ruth,' produced at the Hereford Musical Festival of 1867, and subsequently performed in London (Exeter Hall, November 17, 1869), and at Hamburg and Düsseldorf. His other works include 'Music,' a choral song for soprano solo and female voices (Leeds Festival, 1898); a Pianoforte trio; 'Zwölf grosse Etuden' for pianoforte; two duets for two pianofortes; songs, part-songs, &c.

One of the most important events of Mr. Goldschmidt's artistic life was his conductorship of the Bach Choir for nine years, 1876 to 1885. It was in 1875 that Mr. Arthur Duke Coleridge got together a number of amateurs with a view of performing Bach's B minor Mass, with the result that it was given complete for the first time in England, at St. James's Hall, on April 26, 1876, and under Mr. Goldschmidt's direction. Into the preparation of this colossal work he threw his whole heart and soul, not a little stimulated by the artistic fervour of his gifted wife, who herself sang in the chorus on that eventful occasion and at subsequent concerts of the Society. In spite of a certain reserve of manner, Mr. Goldschmidt was a man of kindly nature and an accomplished musician, one whose death severs a link with the past and all its interesting associations. His remains were laid to rest in the same grave at Malvern with those of his wife, who died November 2, 1887.

Mr. William Henry Strickland died, we regret to record, at Reading, on February 19, aged sixty-nine. Born in the year 1837, he began his musical career as a chorister of Peterborough Cathedral, where he became a pupil of the organist, John Speechley, for whom, at the age of sixteen, he acted as assistant. After having held organ appointments at St. Mary Magdalene, Munster Square, and at Berkhampstead, Mr. Strickland removed to Reading on becoming organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Parish Church (The Minster) in that town; this post he held, till his death, for forty-five years. He was for forty years conductor of the Reading Philharmonic Society, and for some time he officiated as private organist to the late Dowager Duchess of Wellington at Strathfieldsaye. A brilliant performer and an excellent teacher, Mr. Strickland was beloved by all who knew him.

On February 27, at Hamburg, Otto Hegner, aged thirty. Born at Basle, November 18, 1876, Hegner made his first appearance there as a ten-year-old prodigy. Two years later (in 1888) he came to London and created a great sensation by his extraordinary talent. He toured with great success in the United States and subsequently settled down to the vocation of a teacher, first at Frankfort and afterwards at the Hamburg Conservatoire, an appointment he held at the time of his death.

On February 28, at Southend-on-Sea, Rosina Butcher (Rosina Brandram), widow of Champneys Charles Butcher, aged sixty-one. As one of the brightest stars in the Savoy constellation, Miss Rosina Brandram will long be remembered. Her beautiful contralto voice, her fine and refined sense of humour, and her delightful acting, made her one of the most gifted artists in the long series of Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

On March 6, at 39, Edith Road, Selhurst, John Henry Maycock, aged eighty-nine. An excellent clarinettist and formerly a member of the Royal Italian Opera band, it was for Mr. Maycock that Balfe wrote the Corno di bassetto introduction to 'The heart bowed down' ('Bohemian Girl'), and the bass clarinet solo in 'The daughter of St. Mark.'

On March 7, at Paris, Victor Alphonse Duvernoy, aged sixty-five, professor of the pianoforte at the Paris Conservatoire. As a pianist M. Duvernoy had a high reputation. He also achieved fame as a composer. To the credit of his account in this respect can be placed 'La Tempête,' for soli, chorus and orchestra, which obtained the prize of the City of Paris in 1880; two operas, 'Sardanapale' and 'Hellé'; a two-act ballet 'Bacchus'; an overture 'Hernani'; in addition to other orchestral works, some chamber music, and many pianoforte pieces with or without orchestra. M. Duvernoy made his first appearance in England at the Musical Union Matinée of May 14, 1872.

On March 13, at Paris, Maurice Grau, the well-known opera impresario, aged fifty-eight.

The death of Sir August Manns is referred to on p. 236.

The third Triennial Dover Musical Festival is to take place on April 30 and May 1. At the first concert Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' will be performed, and on the second evening Sir Frederick Bridge will conduct his 'The forging of the anchor.' New works specially written for the occasion by the following Kentish musicians will be produced under the direction of their respective composers—Dr. H. C. Perrin, Dr. Bellerby, Mr. Percy Godfrey, Dr. Hathaway and Mr. H. J. Taylor.

THE EMOTIONAL APPEAL IN INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

Dr. Yorke Trotter read an interesting paper on the above subject before the Musical Association on March 19. The following is a digest of his discourse:

Music is the most emotional of the arts. While the other arts awaken ideas, which in their turn act on the feelings, music acts inversely. It affects in the first instance the emotions, creating dispositions which we translate by the vague terms, joy, sadness, serenity, &c. The position of music in this respect had been recognized even when the art was in a rudimentary condition.

An emotion is a tendency to feel, just as an instinct is a tendency to act, characteristically, when in the presence of a certain object in the environment. There are rudimentary emotions which appear at an early stage of our existence which can easily be recognized and labelled, but these in an adult only form an infinitesimal part of his emotional system. There is no limit to the number of possible emotions which may exist, and the emotions of different individuals vary indefinitely. Our emotional nature is ever changing; it is made up of enormously complex aggregates of elements that are never twice alike. There are also noble and ignoble emotions: the one directly connected with sensation, the other more remote from it. It is difficult, if not impossible, to express in words what our emotions really are; we have no adequate means in language of expressing the subtle and complex flow of the feelings. It is to this vague and vast emotional field that music makes its chief appeal.

The two elements of music are rhythm and tone. Rhythmic movement was the earliest mode for the expression of the feelings. The sensuous delight in tone is inherent in our nature. Music is pre-eminently fitted to appeal to our emotional nature, for it is vague and indefinite, ever-changing, exhibiting the principle of variety in unity, and so satisfying our craving for change. And just as there is a higher and a lower order of emotion, so we recognize a higher and lower order of composition, not necessarily because of any technical differences, but because the mode of expression is different. Music does not so much produce emotions as an emotional state; not a definite feeling which can be labelled and analysed, but an indefinite mood of which we are conscious but which is difficult, if not impossible, to label, and which is incapable of analysis.

Instrumental music may be divided into two branches. The first, 'absolute' music—that is, music which proceeds directly from the mind of the composer, and is not dependent on any external stimulus; the second, 'programme music, which owes its origin to some external object or some other art work acting on the mind of the composer, and which cannot be understood without the knowledge of the basis on which it rests. There is a decided difference between the two genera as seen in their extremes, but this difference tends more and more to disappear as the two methods approach each other, so that at times it is difficult to say to which kind some music must be apportioned.

The history of music shows a steady and continuous progress towards more passionate emotional expression. In the work of the older composers there are subtle emotional effects which are difficult to label. The effect produced on the hearer is akin to the emotions which a grand landscape excites and suggests. We are conscious of feelings of a deep and noble kind, but we cannot easily give them verbal expression. The emotional appeal became in course of time more and more pronounced, until in some of the works of Beethoven we find joined to extreme beauty of subject and form, a passionate emotion. It is by no means necessary for the hearer to be placed in possession of the stimulating causes, if any, of this appeal. A composer of a strong emotional nature will produce works that reflect his personality irrespective of external circumstances; the inspiration of the moment will set up the emotional state. The listener will be able to assimilate the emotional utterance of such works, provided his own nature has some affinity to that of the composer. The complexity of the emotional appeal will make the works more difficult to understand at first, but the effects will be lasting.

Programme music of the extreme kind is based on different methods from those that underlie absolute music, for the one is intended to illustrate some story or piece of poetry, while the other proceeds directly from the mind of the composer. When there is a story to illustrate the form of the work need not be so strict as where there is no external help; the story itself will to a certain extent provide the proper form for the work. And unusual harmonic progressions intended to illustrate a situation may be condoned if they produce the picture desired. On the other hand, the vagueness of musical utterance makes it difficult to convey the impression wished for without the aid of realism, and realism is recognized by earnest musicians as the debasing of the art, unless it is used with great care and reticence.

While absolute music appeals directly to the emotional nature, with programme music in its extreme forms the appeal is made through the medium of some story. And while absolute music affects more or less the vast and vague strata of our emotions, programme music appeals to certain defined feelings, and therefore incurs the risk of becoming wearisome.

Much music that is called programme is really indistinguishable from absolute music. Where there is no attempt at a definite picture, but only an expression of an emotional state, the programme may be absolutely unnecessary. Indeed, with many persons there is a tendency to discard even the interpretation of the composer, and to listen to what was written from an objective standpoint, as if it was absolute music pure and simple.

At the present time the tendency of composers seems to be more towards what is called 'atmosphere' than realism. But if music is to advance in the future, the two main essentials of the highest order of the art must be observed. The one is perfect expression, that is to say, the mode of presentation of the composer's thought must be cast in the best mould. The other is that the appeal must be made to man's highest and noblest emotional nature.

After the lecture there was a discussion in which the chairman (Mr. T. L. Southgate), Mr. Gilbert Webb, Mr. W. H. Thelwall, Mr. Macdonald Smith and the lecturer took part.

THE BLACKPOOL GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

So far as we are aware, this enterprise of a provincial choir was unique. Choirs from the north are now and then imported to London for special purposes, but these organizations do not undertake to give concerts here on their own account, and no one acquainted with the habits of Londoners would recommend them to encounter the risk. But Blackpool is a word that connotes energy and optimism. Mr. Whittaker and his Society, fortified by the enthusiastic praise bestowed on their achievements by some leading London musicians who had heard their performances in the north, made the venture, and although the audience attracted on the very miserable wet night of March 5 only half filled the hall, it was certainly one of the most distinguished and representative that has attended recently at a London concert. Her Majesty the Queen, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and suite came, and the reception given to the choir by the Royal party and the audience must have amply rewarded the conductor and his choralists for all their arduous labour.

The singing of the Blackpool Choir and the music they presented on this memorable occasion represent the best products of the musical competition festival movement. It may be said that the same results could and should be attained by diligent practice without the stimulus of competitions. But this view ignores the enormous educative value of the best organized festivals, which are not only schools of training for conductors and performers, but inspiring arenas for the display and recognition of ability that cannot be provided elsewhere. The programme book stated that 'competitions are the incidents, a disciplinary force, a means to an end, not the objective of the choir's existence,' and that 'Mr. Whittaker and his choir have applied the lessons of defeat and victory to the pursuit of the highest ideals for their own sake.' This we know to be the case with many of the choirs that derive their inspiration at competition festivals.

The following is the choral programme that was performed at the Queen's Hall concert on March 5:

Set I.

Part-Song—'Awake, awake'	Granville Bantock.
Hymn (Six parts)—'Angel spirits ever blessed' .. (Cherubic Hymn, No. 3.)	Tchaikovsky.
Part-Song—'O lovely May' ('O Süsser Mai') ..	Brahms.
Part-Songs { 'Night Watch' .. .. }	Brahms. (Op 104.)
'Autumn' ('Im Herbst') .. .. }

Set II.

Part-Song—'Weary wind of the West' ..	Edward Elgar.
Hymn—'Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling' .. }	Berlioz.
Two-part Song (Female voices)—'Ophelia' .. .. }
Part-Song (Female voices, five parts)—'The Mermaid'	Schumann.
Madrigal (Six parts)—'The Lady Oriana'	Wilbye.

Set III.

Madrigal (Four parts)—'April is in my mistress' face'	Morley.
Madrigal (Six parts, s.s.a.t.t.b.)—'As Vesta was from Latmos hill descending'	Thomas Weelkes.
Part-Song—'Evening Scene'	Edward Elgar.
Chorus (Eight parts)—'O death, thou art the tranquil night'	Cornelius.
Chorus (Eight parts)—'The surrender of the soul to the everlasting Love'	Cornelius.

Set IV.

Part-Song (accompanied)—'Spanish Serenade'	Edward Elgar.
Madrigal—'Arise, awake'	Thomas Morley.
Part-Song (Female voices)—'A love-song' (Minnelied)	Brahms.
Part-Songs { 'Dim-lit Woods' (Waldesnacht), Op. 62 }	Brahms.
'Farewell' .. .. }

Set V.

Part-Song—'Phœbe' (Op. 49)	C. Villiers Stanford.
Part-Song (Female voices)—'Sound sleep'	R. Vaughan Williams.
Part-Song—'Sweet love for me' ..	C. Villiers Stanford.

Every one of the pieces had been a competition test at Morecambe or Blackpool, and every one was a gem in its class. The performance of the choir was distinguished by beauty of tone and fine blend, clean unity of attack, charm of rhythm, clear enunciation and a sympathetic interpretation of the most subtle ideas. The Brahms part-songs were particularly well done; and if the rendering of the extremely difficult Cornelius part-song 'O death, thou art the tranquil night' was not so deeply touching as other performances by this and other choirs we have heard in the north, it served at least to indicate some of the wonderful beauty of the piece.

Mr. Gervase Elwes and Miss Clara Butterworth, a young student who gained her first distinction at a Blackpool Festival, sang some solos between the sets of part-songs.

A portrait of Mr. Herbert Whittaker, the conductor, and some notes on the history of the choir, are given on p. 233.

THE 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

On Tuesday, March 19, the Tunbridge Wells Vocal Association gave its thirty-sixth annual oratorio concert in the Great Hall. The work performed was Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' of which an excellent rendering was given. The chorus and orchestra numbered 200 performers. The solo parts were interpreted by Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Frederick Ranalow. The orchestra, consisting principally of members of the Queen's Hall and London Symphony Orchestras, under the leadership of Mr. W. A. Easton, deserve praise for their excellent playing of the accompaniments. The choir triumphed over the difficulties of the work, and reflected great credit on the careful training bestowed upon them by their conductor, Mr. W. W. Starmer. This old-established Society has during its existence produced over thirty-three works. Of these fourteen are compositions of the English School by Sullivan, Cowen, Parry, Stanford and Elgar, thirteen having been given here for the first time. The Tunbridge Wells Vocal Association deserves hearty commendation for its enterprise, and all concerned are to be congratulated on their most recent success.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: The Goldberg Prize (sopranos and mezzo-sopranos) to Mary Fielding (of Batley, Yorkshire); the Sterndale Bennett Prize (female pianists) to Dorothy Grinstead (of Caterham, Surrey).

This edition of Dr. Wesley's anthem is reprinted from the only authorised version, as finally revised by the composer in the year 1870. The anthem was originally published in or about 1831, when the composer was twenty years of age; therefore, the music as here printed is the result of his forty years' matured experience. Some marks of expression have been added by way of suggestion.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first performance by this Society of Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom' took place at the Albert Hall on March 14, when a large audience attentively followed the unfolding of the work. A feature of the interpretation was the manifest thorough acquaintance with the music shown by the choristers, and it is doubtful if any new work has been given with such smoothness by this Society. It is true that the music is simpler and more direct in expression than that of 'The Apostles,' but Elgar always expects much from choristers, and it was remarkable with what completeness the majority of these requirements were met. Only in two particulars was the choir lacking, namely the attainment of a real pianissimo and the suggestion of mysticism sometimes demanded by the composer. This, however, leaves something for achievement at subsequent performances by the Royal Choral Society. The more massive choruses came out with superb effect, the rich volume of tone intensifying their impressiveness and grandeur, this being particularly noticeable in the fine chorus 'O ye priests.' The intense solemnity of the concluding section was also finely realized, and the choir is to be congratulated on the success it achieved. The soloists also sustained their respective rôles with great earnestness. Miss Gleeson-White sang the soprano solos with chastened warmth of emotion, and, with Miss Edith J. Miller as her colleague, the duet of the two Marys 'At the beautiful gate' was rendered in a memorable manner. Miss Miller was no less happy in her rendering of the contralto solos, and Mr. Ben Davies, in excellent voice, gave devotional expression to the sympathetic music assigned to St. John. The part of St. Peter was sung by Mr. Dalton Baker, who gave a fine interpretation of the noble music allied to Peter's address to the men of Judæa. The orchestral portion was particularly effective in the vivid scoring of the Pentecost scene, perhaps one of the most imaginative and thrilling portions of this loftily conceived and majestic oratorio. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with watchful care and ability, and valuable assistance was given at the organ by Mr. H. L. Balfour.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The centre of attraction at the concert on February 28 was M. Vladimir de Pachmann, the exponent par excellence of Chopin, and how superbly he played the F minor Pianoforte concerto—a performance characterized by exquisite tenderness, flawless technique, and poetic charm. No less enjoyable were his solos later in the evening, which included Mendelssohn's seldom-heard (in the concert room) 'Andante and Rondo Capriccioso,' most delicately interpreted. Georges Enesco's Symphony in E flat, performed for the first time in London, is one of those up-to-date compositions which need to be heard more than once before their merits can be fully realized, not to say understood. Judging from this first hearing, the work recalled the curate's egg, part of which was good. For the present it may suffice to say that while we cannot yoke M. Enesco with other symphonic composers that could be mentioned, we must acknowledge the cleverness with which he obtains his effects, even though they do not always seem to be invested with beauty. The concert began with Sir Charles Stanford's melodious 'Irish Rhapsody No. 1,' and ended with Cherubini's 'Les Abencérages' overture. Miss Marie Brema, the vocalist of the evening, was more successful in the songs by Weingartner than in those by Purcell.

The concert given on March 13 had special interest, if only because it incidentally demonstrated that new British music could be favourably pitted against new foreign music. The first item was the prelude to the as yet unperformed opera 'Ione' by Mr. Arthur Hervey. This was conducted by the composer and was well received. The opera has a tragic plot in which love, jealousy and revenge are motives, and the prelude epitomises the drama. The themes have character and they are often effectively orchestrated. The 'brown' and brooding sections seemed proportionately too long to maintain interest, but the poetry of the treatment was unmistakable. Another novelty in the programme was the Violin concerto in A (Op. 45) composed and conducted by Christian Sinding, who appeared for the first time in England. The concerto did not make a very favourable impression. It lacked charm and often seemed laboured. The end, however, was brilliant and effective. Mr. Johannes Wolff, the solo violinist, displayed some of the high qualities associated with his name, but for some unfortunate reason his intonation on this occasion was unsatisfactory. Still another first appearance was that of Mr. Percy Grainger, who played the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte concerto. Mr. Grainger exhibited considerable technical powers and a broad, virile style. Perhaps he was less successful in bringing out the delicate beauties of the work than he was in the more imposing passages. But he is a fine player and has youth on his side. The vocalist was Madame Blanche Marchesi. Brahms's second symphony concluded the evening's music. Dr. Frederic Cowen vigilantly conducted both concerts.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Auber's humorous and melodious opera 'Fra Diavolo' is an excellent work for embryo operatic artists, and the students of the Guildhall School of Music who were engaged in its presentation on March 7, 8 and 9 seemed to enjoy the work quite as much as the audiences. Detailed criticism on such occasions is out of place, but it may be said that Miss Maude Willby's impersonation of the heroine Zerlina was full of promise for greater achievements, that Mr. Frederick Blamey made excellent use of his opportunities as the courteous robber, and that Mr. Stanley Goldstein showed a lively sense of humour as Lord Allcash. It was pleasurable to listen to the fresh tone of the voices in the choruses, and the dances were executed with great spirit. For all the good results praise is chiefly due to Mr. Richard H. Walthew, and Mr. B. Soutten, who respectively officiated as conductor and stage manager.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The series of Saturday afternoon Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood concluded on March 2, when remarkably fine performances were given of Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony and Rubinstein's Pianoforte concerto in D minor, Madame Carreño being the soloist in the latter work. The series of concerts had proved so successful, however, that two extra performances were announced, the first of which took place on March 16. On this occasion a remarkably varied programme was presented, a special feature of which was the performance of Mozart's Symphony in G minor (K. 183). To the score of this is affixed a note stating that the work was composed at Salzburg in 1773, at which time Mozart was only seventeen years of age, and had just returned from a tour in Italy. The symphony is serious in mood, and is an extraordinarily mature piece considering the age of its composer. It consists of the usual four movements in which brightness comes only as gleams of sunshine on an April day, but the music is thoroughly Mozartian in idiom. Mr. Wood is greatly to be praised for reviving this interesting work, which it is to be hoped will be heard again during the Promenade Concert Season. Beethoven's Rondino in E flat for wind instruments, dating from when he was about twenty years old, also figured in the programme, which included the barbaric intermezzo 'The battle of Poltava' from Tchaikovsky's 'Mazeppa,' the love scene from Strauss's opera 'Feuersnot' and Beethoven's E flat Concerto, the pianoforte part of the last-named being beautifully played by Mr. Richard Buhlig.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

At the ninth concert given at Queen's Hall on March 11, interest centred chiefly in the performance of Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben.' Probably no finer interpretation has been given of this remarkable work. No attempt was made to mitigate the realism of the Battle section. If we must feed on Strauss, there is no doubt it is well to have him served hot. Mr. Arthur Payne played the violin solo with telling beauty of tone and execution. Mr. Harold Bauer gave highly effective performances of the B flat minor Pianoforte concerto by Tchaikovsky and the 'Todtentanz' by Liszt. The concert opened with Mozart's beautiful symphony in E flat, and closed with one of the most brilliant performances of Beethoven's 'Leonora' No. 3 overture that we have had the good fortune to hear. Dr. Richter conducted and seemed throughout at his best.

ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

A most interesting selection of madrigals and vocal part-music was sung by the Oriana Madrigal Society, under the direction of Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott, on February 26, at Portman Rooms, when the choral singing attested to careful training and the sincere desire of the conductor to do justice to the music presented. The madrigals included 'Long live fair Oriana' (Ellis Gibbons); 'Lullaby' (Byrd); 'Sweet honey-sucking bee' (Wilbye); 'Lightly she tripp'd' (Munday); and 'The Nightingale' (Weelkes); several 'Ayres' were charmingly sung by Mr. V. Hands, also an interesting carol 'Remember God's Goodnesse,' by Thomas Ravenscroft. Some pianoforte solos by old masters were attractively played by Mrs. Norman O'Neill.

BACH CHOIR.

For some time past the Bach Choir, under the conductorship of Dr. H. Walford Davies, has been making steady and satisfactory progress in the higher qualities of choral singing, and the advance was made particularly manifest at the performance of Bach's great Mass in B minor on March 19, at Queen's Hall. It may unhesitatingly be pronounced to be one of the best interpretations given by the Choir since the introduction of the work into this country in 1876 under the direction of the late Mr. Otto Goldschmidt. This is high praise, but it is deserved, and the care bestowed at rehearsal, and the intelligence and earnestness of the choristers, merit warm encouragement. The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Frederic Austin. The audience was large and appreciative. Why was there no tribute to the memory of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, the pioneer conductor of the Bach Choir?

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

At their concert given in the Queen's Hall on March 18 this Society performed Brahms's 'Requiem,' and for the first time in London a setting of D. G. Rossetti's poem 'The Blessed Damozel,' for soprano and tenor soli and chorus, by Dalhousie Young. The latter work displayed fanciful and sometimes elevated treatment of a rather difficult subject. The composer too often permits himself to write strangely and angularly for the solo voices. Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Gregory Hast did their best, and the chorus sang with excellent tone and precision. But the musical interest was mainly in the orchestral part. The 'Requiem' was performed with care and often with impressive effect. The mournful tenderness of the beautiful opening, 'Behold all flesh is as the grass,' was hardly realized. The choir excelled more in vigorous movements and climaxes than in the passages calling for delicacy and emotional expression. Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies sang the solos. The funeral march from Elgar's 'Grania and Diarmid'—one of the composer's best works, although seldom heard—was played in memory of the German opera singers who were lost in the S.S. Berlin, and the proceeds of the concert are to be given to their dependent relatives. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted with his usual zeal.

MR. GERVASE ELWES'S RECITAL OF SONGS BY BRAHMS.

The Bechstein Hall was well filled on this occasion (March 16). The steady artistic progress made by Mr. Elwes has been a great satisfaction to his numerous friends and the public who care for the highest art in the form of song. Nineteen of the choicest of Brahms's songs were presented with only two short breaks. No other music was performed, but yet Mr. Elwes contrived to rivet the attention of his audience from the beginning to the end of the recital. A beautiful performance of 'Bei dir sind meine Gedanken' (Op. 95, No. 2) earned one of the encores. Here, as in several other songs, Mr. Elwes displayed a singularly attractive power of imparting subtle temperamental expression in pianissimo. Among a set of five folk-songs 'Trennung' (Op. 97, No. 6), 'Es steht ein' Lind'' and 'In stiller Nacht' were especially charming. To our thinking the deeply-impressive 'Auf dem Kirchhofe' (Op. 105, No. 4) and the delicate 'Der Kuss' (Op. 19, No. 1) were two of the singer's finest efforts. Mr. Victor Beigel, under whom Mr. Elwes has been recently studying, was a highly sympathetic accompanist.

MR. ONDRICEK'S CONCERT.

Mr. Floris Ondricek, who made his first appearance in London last summer under the cognomen of 'Floris,' gave a concert at Queen's Hall on March 5, when he played Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor. The chief features of the afternoon, however, were a remarkably good performance of Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E minor, No. 5, and the production of an orchestral work entitled 'Macbeth: Impressions from Shakespeare,' by Mr. W. H. Thorley, who conducted the Symphonic Orchestra. This proved a well-constructed and scholarly-written work, showing considerable imaginative ability, and with which it would be pleasant to make further acquaintance.

KREUZ ORCHESTRA.

Notable advance was shown in the ensemble of Mr. Emil Kreuz's orchestra at the concert which took place on February 28 at Bechstein Hall. The programme, especially praiseworthy for its unhackneyed character, included Bizet's charming suite 'Yeux d'Enfants' (Op. 22); Glinka's 'Fantasie sur deux airs Russes'; and Johann Strauss's 'Kaiser-walzer.' The selection of the last-named was particularly commendable, and the example might be followed elsewhere, for the waltz-king's strains are most delightful.

MR. FRANK BRIDGE'S 'THREE IDYLLS.'

The concert given by the Grimson Quartet on March 8, at Bechstein Hall, was distinguished by the first performance of 'Three Idylls' for string quartet, composed by Mr. Frank Bridge. The composer took part in this programme, his colleagues being Miss Jessie Grimson, Mr. Ernest Tomlinson and Mr. Edward Mason. The three little pieces are admirably contrasted and pleasantly permeated by manly spirit and healthy sentiment, and should find favour with those who practise chamber music in the home.

A NEW SEXTET BY MR. JOSEPH HOLBROOKE.

A cricket club concert does not usually attract musical folk. A notable exception, however, was the concert provided by the Finchley Cricket Club at Woodside Park Hall on February 28, of which the chief musical interest centred in the performance of Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's third Sextet for pianoforte and strings or wood-wind (Op. 33). This work is in three fully-elaborated movements and contains, to our thinking, some of the sanest and most attractive music we have heard by this industrious composer. On this occasion a party of string players, admirably led by Mr. John Saunders, with Mr. Holbrooke at the pianoforte, gave an excellent performance of the work.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Record is due of the recent advent of some young pianists. Mr. Nathan Fryer, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, now in his twenty-first year, gave his first recital at Bechstein Hall on February 26, after five years' study with Leschetitzky. That the new-comer should have a masterly technique was naturally expected, but in addition to this there was shown a refined feeling, good taste and avoidance of exaggeration that augur well for his future artistic career. Mr. Percy Waller, who made his appearance at Bechstein Hall on March 13, is also a promising young pianist with a powerful touch and great executive facility. Miss Shakespeare made a very favourable impression on March 18 at Æolian Hall, by reason of a singularly strong and firm style. She has yet to acquire greater insight into deep emotion, but technically she would seem to have nothing more to learn.

The first performance in London of Max Reger's String quartet in D minor (Op. 74) was a prominent feature of the chamber concert given by Miss Norah Clench on March 5 at Bechstein Hall. In common with other works by this composer, the music shows consummate command of resource, but it is excessively complex and permeated by a spirit of restless complaining and discontent which is anything but exhilarating to listen to. The absence of melodic beauty is also very marked, and the ceaseless storm and stress and want of contrasting sentiment between the movements engenders a feeling of monotony.

Miss Theodora Macalaster, assisted by Mr. Henry Beauchamp (tenor) and Mr. Robert Buchan (violin), gave a very successful concert at Steinway Hall on March 6. This lady has a soprano voice of musical quality, and her interpretation of an admirable selection of songs by British and continental composers attested to considerable dramatic intelligence and sensitive feeling. Her singing was much appreciated by a large audience.

The choir and orchestra of the City of London College performed, on March 7, Schubert's 'The song of Miriam,' and Gade's 'Spring's message.' The chorus sang throughout with excellent attack and much attention to details of expression. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Williams, Miss Annie McBride, Mr. W. H. Walter and Mr. George Stubbs. The orchestra was ably led by Miss Maude Swepstone, and the pianoforte accompaniments were in the hands of Miss Gertrude Smith and Mr. Russell Bonner. Mr. W. G. Rothery conducted.

The South London Choral Association performed Hamish MacCunn's too rarely-heard work 'The lay of the last minstrel' on March 20, and gave an adequate rendering of the dramatic and declamatory passages with which the work abounds. A capable orchestra did justice to the picturesque accompaniments, and the vocal solos were ably sustained by Miss Mabel Manson, Madame Cecile Vicars, Messrs. Bernard Turner and Herbert Tracey. Cowen's choral ballad, 'John Gilpin,' and Faning's 'Vagabonds' were included in the second part of the concert, which was ably conducted by Mr. Leonard C. Venables.

An enjoyable concert was given by the Hampstead Conservatoire Orchestra on March 21, under the able direction of Mr. René Ortmans. Excellent performances were given of Beethoven's eighth symphony, the overture to 'Die Meistersinger,' the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor—the solo part in which was played by Miss Ada Petherick—and Arthur Hervey's clever and effective concert overture 'Youth.' The vocalists were Madame Windsor Loche and Miss Gertrude Walton.

Musical Competition Festivals.

STRATFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This old-established festival has this year celebrated its silver jubilee. Special and very successful efforts had been made to give the event due importance. Fourteen adult choirs and eighteen junior choirs appeared. There were about 400 solo instrumentalists and 173 solo vocalists. Altogether it was estimated that upwards of 2,000 performers took part in the festival. The results in the chief choral classes were as follows: First-prize winners—Ladies' choirs, Madame Hands's choir; men's choirs (two classes), St. Columba's (first in both); girls' choirs, Stratford Co-operative Junior (Mr. Alfred Sears); boys' choirs, St. Saviour's, Walthamstow, choir-boys; elementary school choirs (boys), Godwin Road, Forest Gate, Council School; (girls), Farmer Road, Leyton, Council School; choral Societies, Mr. G. Day Winter's choir. The adjudicators were Dr. Percy Buck, Mr. George Oakey, Mr. James Bates, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. G. H. Betjemann, Mr. Ernest Fowles, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. A. L. Cowley. The competitions took place on March 9, 11, 13, 14, 15 and 21. Mr. J. Graham is the indefatigable secretary.

The concert given by the prize-winners in Stratford Town Hall on the afternoon of March 21 was honoured by the presence of the Duchess of Albany. In addition to distributing the prizes and certificates gained by the successful candidates, Her Royal Highness presented, on behalf of the subscribers, a silver salver and a photographic album to Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, the founder and president of the festival.

SOUTH LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The second annual festival, held in the Town Hall, Battersea, on March 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 14 was a great success. There were nearly 400 entries, and 1,350 performers. The standard was generally satisfactory. The 'Lady Palmer' Competition for choral Societies was won by the Essendine (Paddington) choir (Mr. Wm. Kendall). Church choirs' (men and boys) prize, St. Paul's, Wimbledon Park (Mr. G. H. Dean). Church choirs' (mixed) prize, Clapham High Street Wesleyan Church (Mr. Wesley Hammet). Men's choirs prize, Wren male choir, Camberwell (Mr. F. C. French). 'The Gentlewoman' Competition for ladies' choirs, first prize, Mrs. Mary Layton's choir; second prize, Aristotle Road E.C.S. choir (Mr. A. G. Gibbs). Elementary school choirs, first prize, Aristotle Road school choir, Clapham (Mr. A. G. Gibbs): this choir also gained the first prize for sight-singing. Second prize, Bolingbroke Road L.C.C. school, Old Battersea (Mr. T. Maskell Hardy). Two concerts were given by prize-winners. Sir Walter Palmer distributed the prizes to the juniors.

The adult competition attracted a large audience, and, without depreciating any of the performances, all of which were excellent, it is only fair to make special mention of Mr. Arthur Holford (bass), the Hampstead Prize Silver Band, and Mr. Percy W. Lawton (tenor), the gold medallist of the festival. The Hon. Mrs. Talbot, supported by the Bishop of Southwark, presented the prizes, and Lord Alverstone proposed the vote of thanks to Mrs. Talbot. The massed choirs of ladies sang charmingly under the conductorship of Dr. Madeley Richardson. The adjudicators were Dr. F. N. Abernethy, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. J. T. Field, Dr. C. J. Frost, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Dr. W. G. McNaught, Mr. Dan Price, Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, and Mr. Fred E. Weatherly. The secretary of the festival is Mr. T. Lester Jones.

OAKHAM (RUTLAND).

This was the second year of this typically countryside festival. The Hon. Mrs. Charles Fitzwilliam is the chief promoter of the scheme which is doing great good to the district. The juniors competed on the first day. Eleven schools had entered, but two did not attend. Seventeen villages were represented by adult choirs. There was a part-song class ('O happy eyes,' Elgar), a madrigal class ('When flow'ry meadows,' Palestrina), an anthem class ('What are these?' Stainer), a men's-voice class ('Lovely night,' Chwatal), a female-voice class ('The shepherd,' H. Walford Davies), a mixed quartet class ('When hands meet,' Pinsuti), and classes for sight-singing and voice production. First places were secured by Wing, Exton, Ridlington, Burley (two), Oakham (three), and Uppingham. The choirs combined to sing two glees at the evening concert which was successfully given on the second evening of the festival, March 7.

KENSINGTON COMPETITIONS.

Formerly this organization appealed only to ladies' choirs. It is now open to orchestras and mixed-voice choirs in addition. The test-piece for the orchestras was Tchaikovsky's 'Elegie' and a short sight-test. The Church Orchestral Society (Dr. Huntley), the London Diocesan Orchestra (Margaret Haweis), and the Linnet String Orchestra (Miss Ida Hyett) competed, and the challenge banner, offered as a prize, was won by the Diocesan Orchestra. In a sight-test competition (adjudicator, Mr. Joseph Ivimey) the Church Orchestral Society gained full marks.

In the choral sections nine choirs competed in seven sections. Miss Lisa Gibson's choir, which is a highly trained one, gained first-prize in three sections. Mrs. Mary Layton was successful in two sections. The Essendine Choir (Mr. W. Kendall) was first in the female-voice choir sight-test, and was only two marks below the winning choir in the mixed-choir section. The singing generally was of a high standard. Dr. McNaught adjudicated in all the choral sections. The competition was held on March 14.

The Morley (Yorks) Vocal Union held a competition in the Town Hall on February 23. Seventeen choirs competed. Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon Cathedral, adjudicated. The Baptist Tabernacle Choir, Crosland Row Wesleyan, and the Nelson Arion male-voice choir were prize-winners in various sections.

On March 15, at a meeting of the Concert Goers' Clubs held in Langham Hotel, Miss Wakefield gave an address on the Competition Festival Movement. Mr. W. H. Leslie presided. Dr. McNaught and Mr. A. Kalisch spoke.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15.

Complaint is often made that the music of the present day is detrimental to the reputation and influence of old music; yet whenever good, genuinely enthusiastic performances of old masterpieces are presented, audiences receive them gratefully. The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde recently gave a brilliant performance of Handel's powerful oratorio 'Hercules,' thus offering a rich feast to all lovers of music. The eternal freshness of this music came as a revelation. It was difficult to know what most deserved admiration: the earnest, impressive choruses, or the chorus of gladness which in its classical gaiety proved most refreshing; the characteristic, almost dramatic, arias, or the energy and nobility of the whole work, which were felt by everyone present. The Chrysander version was used, in which to Handel's orchestration was added a thoroughly developed harpsichord part, and in which there are considerable cuts so as to draw closer together the dramatic moments. The performance was under the able direction of Franz Schalk; the soloists were Dr. Felix von Kraus, Felix Senius, Baroness Bach and Madame Drill-Oridge. Through his recent masterly rendering of some of Schubert's important songs, Dr. Felix von Kraus, who most ably took the part of Hercules, has won special favour, and there is a prospect of his being permanently engaged at the Hofoper.

The Beethoven quartets offer instances of the powerful effect of old music. They have long been familiar, yet when recently all sixteen were performed at five recitals given by Joachim and his colleagues, the effect they produced was, as it were, new. The hall was filled each time to overflowing; the audience, who paid rapt attention to the fine renderings, displayed hearty enthusiasm.

A new 'Romantic' overture by Engelbrech, a beautiful composition written in refined style, was produced at a Philharmonic concert. The composer is a member of that Society's orchestra, which indeed includes many excellent artists capable of contributing works to the programmes.

The Wagner Society, always helpful in the cause of modern music, arranged a 'Hugo Wolf' evening, the programme including a number of the less-known songs and two movements for string quartet of this highly-gifted but ill-fated composer. Of the latter, interpreted by the Prill Quartet, one is an early work which, though altogether unripe, gives evidence of talent. The personal friends of Hugo Wolf have paid due respect to his memory in not allowing it to be published.

Löwe conducted the Bruckner Festival of the Academical Vocal Society, at which he gave a fine performance of the Te Deum, his gifted wife singing the soprano solo.

Auber's 'La muette de Portici,' not heard here for about twenty years, has been performed at the Hofoper. But in spite of careful preparation it created no impression: a new generation has sprung up altogether different from the one which formerly for many nights greeted the opera with enthusiasm.

A festival concert was given at the Conservatorium to celebrate the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Prof. J. M. Grün who, his age notwithstanding, is still one of the most able and active teachers of the violin at the institution. Only the best pupils were chosen on this occasion to display the art which they had acquired from him. Rebner, from Frankfort, played the Mendelssohn concerto; Rosa Hochmann, from Prague, Spohr's 'Gesangsscene; Wessely, from London, the Brahms, and Flesch from Amsterdam, the Beethoven concerto. The accompaniments were rendered by the Conservatorium orchestra—in which there were also many of Grün's pupils—under the direction of Richard von Perger. And the public took part with heartfelt sympathy in this grand old man's festival.

Mandyczewski.

Lieutenant E. C. Stretton, late director of the Royal Naval School of Music, Eastney, has been appointed Bandmaster of the Royal Artillery Band, in succession to Cavaliere Zaverthal.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The seventh Queen's College chamber concert on March 12 had as vocalist Madame Gertrude Drinkwater and an excellent list of instrumentalists, including two leading local violinists, Miss W. Burnett and Mr. George Vincent, with Messrs. Warburton (violoncello) and Stott (double-bass) from the Hallé Orchestra. Dr. Walker was in his accustomed place as pianist. The programme included songs by Schumann, Liszt and Landon Ronald; Romance and finale by Wieniawski (Op. 22); several pieces by Chopin; and the following concerted pieces—a Trio by Haydn, and Schubert's Quintet (Op. 114).

The fourth and last of the Philharmonic Society's subscription concerts took place on March 15, when the programme included Brahms's 'Requiem'—probably never before performed in Ireland, and certainly not in Belfast—and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The artists—a very capable quartet—were the Misses Ethel Cadman and Dilys Jones, and Messrs. Webster Millar and Charles Tree. Dr. F. Koeller conducted. The whole concert was very successful, and the audience seemed greatly pleased. It would of course be possible to pick holes in the performance, but this is not the place for that invidious task, and there are plenty of critics on the spot who think they can discover blemishes, although themselves incapable either of taking part in such a performance or even of pointing out exactly what 'mare's nest' they think they have found.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Choral Union, so ably conducted by Mr. Thomas Facer, for once departed from its customary programme, and instead of devoting its energies to a performance of a complete choral work, gave in the Town Hall on February 19 excerpts from Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'The flying Dutchman,' and 'Rienzi,' which occupied the whole of the first part of the programme. With a mixed orchestra of amateurs and professional players one hardly expected a complete realization of the composer's difficult orchestral scores. The best work done by the chorus was in some unaccompanied part-songs, which were delightfully given. The principal artists included Miss Beatrice Vernon, Miss Grace Ivell, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. James Coleman. The same Society also gave an excellent concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' in the Town Hall on March 9, for which some well-known operatic artists had been secured, including Miss Kate Anderson, Miss Marie Stiven, Mr. Wilson Pembroke and Mr. John Ridding. The attendance was so great that hundreds of people were unable to gain admission.

An interesting popular concert was given by the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association in the Town Hall on February 23, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's able conductorship. For special mention I may point out the graphic rendering of Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and Gaul's part-song 'The shipwreck,' in which the choir quite distinguished themselves. Among the orchestral items prominence was given to German's spirited and splendidly orchestrated 'Welsh Rhapsody,' which received a much finer interpretation than it did on a previous occasion. The talented English pianist, Mr. Arthur Cooke, introduced for the first time here Liszt's 'Todtentanz' for pianoforte and orchestra. His performance was in every way masterly. The principal vocalist was the Australian high-voiced soprano, Miss Bertha Bird. This Association had also secured the Town Hall on March 20 for a concert performance of Balfe's 'Bohemian Girl,' at which the following principal artists took part: Miss Ethel Locker, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Alfred Wootton, Mr. Thomas Howell and Mr. William Evans.

The Birmingham City Choral Society is at present undergoing some novel experience in the way of conductors, no definite engagements having as yet been made in the appointment of a permanent conductor, since Mr. Fred W. Beard's departure for the Antipodes, where for the present he is settled. A concert was given by this Society in the Town Hall on February 21, under Mr. Rutland Boughton, who set himself a severe task in conducting such exacting works as the Grail scene from the first act of 'Parsifal,' the great love duet from the second act of 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Humperdinck's 'The pilgrimage to Kevlaar,' written for mezzo-soprano and tenor soli, mixed chorus and orchestra, and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.' The chorus was decidedly best in the last-named work, which they sang admirably and with the proper tone-colour. The same cannot be said of the Grail scene, and in the love duet from 'Tristan' the orchestra completely overweighted Miss Susan Strong (Isolde) and Mr. Wilson Pembroke (Tristan). The principal artists also included Miss Norah Newport, Mr. Lewys James and Mr. William Evans. I hear that Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, is to conduct Elgar's 'The Kingdom' at the Society's next concert on April 18.

The West Bromwich Choral Society's second concert, given in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on February 27, showed a distinct advance on the previous and initial efforts of this new organization. The chorus in the first instance sang with more spirit and dramatic effect, and the orchestra appeared better represented in the strings and more efficient in technical skill. The choral works comprised Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.' Mr. Frank Mullings gave an excellent and sympathetic rendering of 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' and a flattering début was also made by Miss Nelly Cooke, a new soprano. The principal instrumental work performed was Spohr's 'Dramatic concerto' for violin and orchestra, the soloist being Mr. William Henley, who was in excellent form and never played better. A novelty was a new Ballade for strings by the talented young composer Mr. Julius Harrison, which was enthusiastically received. Mr. Arthur Cooke conducted with ability and care.

Only passing reference can be made to the many other concerts that have taken place lately, which were excellent of their kind, notably the splendid orchestral concert by the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, given under the conductorship of Mr. George Halford, in the Town Hall on March 2, before a large and popular audience. The solo violinist on that occasion was Miss Margaret Holloway, who gave an artistic exposition of Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor. M. Paderewski, after an absence of four years, gave a pianoforte recital in the Town Hall on March 11, on the occasion of Messrs. Harrison's last concert of the season. At Mr. Willy Lehmann's third and last chamber concert of the season, held in the Masonic Hall on February 28, a performance was given of Schumann's Pianoforte quintet in E flat and Dvorák's in A (Op. 81). A pleasing interlude was the excellent singing of Mr. Frank C. Mullings, who introduced three new and artistic songs by Julius Harrison. Mr. Max Mossel's last drawing-room concert of the season, given in the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on March 7, was a fitting conclusion to an excellent series of music-makings.

The magnificent series of concerts organized by the Festival Choral Society for the current season, was brought to a brilliant close in the Town Hall, on March 21, with a singularly impressive rendering of Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' first heard at our triennial musical festival in October last, under the composer's direction. That Dr. Sinclair is in thorough sympathy with Elgar's music was again fully demonstrated by his careful and thoughtful preparation, and his masterly conductorship of 'The Kingdom.' The rare originality and beauty of the choral portion of the work were brought out even under more advantageous conditions than at the festival, and the orchestral portion was most ably interpreted, the nuances of light and shade being admirably observed. The principal vocalists were Miss C. Gleeson-White, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Charles Knowles, and Mr. C. W. Perkins rendered valuable help at the organ. Bach's double motet 'Sing ye to the Lord,' which followed 'The Kingdom,' was a glorious achievement in every way.

The death of Mr. Walter Brooks on March 14, within a few days of his seventy-fifth birthday, has to be recorded with regret. He began his musical career as a chorister of Gloucester Cathedral and became an articled pupil of, and assistant to the then organist, John Amott. He was successively organist at Upton St. Leonard's; Christ Church, Hampstead; St. Mary's, Atherstone; and St. Martin's, Birmingham. The last-named appointment he held for nearly forty-four years. Mr. Walter Brooks was held in the highest esteem as a man and as a musician.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Society of Instrumentalists brought their season to a close on March 2 by a concert at the Victoria Rooms, where, aided by some local professional players (Mr. Harold Bernard being leader), they gratified a large audience. Mr. George Riseley conducted with his accustomed ability. Several favourite compositions were executed, and in Weber's Concertstück, Miss Mildred Pritchard, who was at the pianoforte, was greatly applauded. The vocalists were Miss Madeline Applegate (Trowbridge) and Mr. William Thomas (a former lay clerk at Bristol Cathedral), whose efforts were much appreciated.

In order to augment the Lord Mayor of Bristol's fund for the sufferers in Jamaica, a concert organized by Mr. Riseley was on March 4 held in Colston Hall. The principal feature of the performance was the singing by the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society, who gave a large number of their most popular pieces, having the co-operation of Mr. E. J. Way as soloist. Hegar's powerfully written 'Phantom host' was repeated by the choir with great effect, and two compositions by Mr. C. Lee-Williams, 'Peace' and 'The pedlar's song,' were received with special favour. Mr. Riseley played Lemmens's 'The storm' upon the organ.

At a special service in St. Mary Redcliffe Church, on March 7, there was an excellent rendering of Sullivan's 'Prodigal Son,' under the direction of Mr. Morgan, the organist.

The Bristol Choral Society on March 9 had an 'Elgar' night at Colston Hall. 'King Olaf' was admirably performed by the large body of choralists (470 in number), and an efficient orchestra of 60. Mr. Arthur W. Payne led the orchestra, and the soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Knowles, all of whom were highly satisfactory. Afterwards the 'Coronation Ode' was given with the same principals and Miss Bessie Grant. Mr. Riseley conducted throughout with judgment.

On March 14 the Clifton Quintet gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, the players being Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violin), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Fine interpretations were given of Claude Debussy's String quartet in G minor (Op. 10), and Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet in A minor (Op. 81). The vocalist was Mr. Walter Ivimey.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE AND ELY.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Cambridge University Musical Society gave an excellent concert on February 1, the programme of which included Bach's Magnificat, motets by Lassus and Cornelius, and the 'Jupiter' symphony. The performance of the splendid Magnificat was particularly good. A special word of praise is due to the soprano and alto vocalists, Miss Edith McCullagh and Miss Nellie Anderton, pupils of Miss Fillunger. Dr. Alan Gray conducted.

The second Symphony Concert of the season took place on February 7. The programme was of a popular character and included the 'Pathetic' symphony, the 'Walkürenritt,' and the Prelude to 'Tristan.' Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist, and Dr. Charles Wood conducted.

The Wednesday concerts of the Cambridge University Musical Society have included a song recital by Mr. Francis Harford and Miss Jessie Rayne; a visit from the Kruse Quartet, when Stanford's fine new Quartet was performed; and an orchestral concert, when Mr. Leonard Borwick played three concertos—Mozart's (in C minor), Schumann's, and Beethoven's Choral fantasia. The orchestra of the Society acquitted themselves very creditably. Dr. Gray conducted.

A welcome revival of the 'St. Matthew' Passion music took place at Ely Cathedral on March 5. The chorus, drawn from Ely, Cambridge, and Bury St. Edmunds, numbered about 160 voices: all the solo soprano numbers were sung by the cathedral choristers. The performance was a highly creditable one, and Dr. Archibald W. Wilson, organist of the Cathedral, and conductor, is to be congratulated on the result of his hard work. Dr. Alan Gray was at the organ, Mr. G. Minns at the pianoforte, and Mr. Haydn Inwards led the band. The congregation was large and slightly more generous than usual.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its first concert of the current season on February 27. The programme was as follows: Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave'; Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony; Saint-Saëns's 'Le Rouet d'Omphale'; and the Vorspiel and Liebestod from 'Tristan and Isolde' (Wagner). There was a good attendance, and the band, under Dr. Esposito, played exceedingly well.

On February 28 the Amateur Operatic and Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barton McGuckin, gave a performance, with orchestra, of Gounod's 'Redemption.' The solos were all sung by members of the Society.

On March 1 the Lord Lieutenant distributed the prizes to the students of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. There was as usual an enormous audience, the Great Hall of the Royal University being quite filled. The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Jozé, played Flotow's 'Martha' and Weber's 'Preciosa' overtures and the Polonaise from Glinka's 'Life for the Czar.' Miss Eileen Forbes, Mr. J. C. Browner and Mr. Douglas Leech were among the most successful of the singers. Miss Muriel Porter played a movement from a Violin concerto by David, and Mr. Solomon Rosenberg the Violoncello variations by Böellmann.

Miss Nora Thompson, assisted by Miss Madeleine Moore, Mr. Octave Grisard and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, gave two string quartet concerts on March 10 and 18. On the latter occasion she played, with Miss Sophie Allen, Brahms's Violin sonata in D minor.

I have to record, with much regret, the death after a very short illness of Herr Henri Bast, who for so many years past has been the principal violoncellist in Dublin. For many years he played at the Royal Dublin Society's chamber music recitals, and at all concerts at which an orchestra appeared his presence was almost indispensable. He will be much missed by his many pupils, both at the Royal Irish Academy of Music and elsewhere. In Herr Bast's death, chamber music, which he did so much to foster in Dublin, has lost a staunch champion.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The University Musical Society (conductor Mr. J. A. Moonie) gave its annual concert before a very large audience in the McEwan Hall on March 1. Notwithstanding its constantly changing material this Society does good educative work, and continues to make steady improvement year by year. The works performed were 'Dixit Dominus' (Leo), 'The Procession of the Ark' (Mackenzie), and 'Phaudrig Crohoore' (Stanford). The principal soloists were Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Nelly Kirkpatrick and Miss Evangeline Florence, and the accompaniments were beautifully played by Mr. Amer's orchestra from Newcastle.

The eleventh annual concert of Mr. Moonie's Choir drew a large audience to the Music Hall on March 6. The Choir, which again had the strong support of Mr. Amer's orchestra, was in fine form, and its renderings of Max Bruch's 'Schön Ellen,' Moonie's 'Killiecrankie' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were most enjoyable. Miss Catherine Locke, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. George Campbell were the soloists, and their work was received with great favour.

The Music Hall was again well filled on the evening of March 12 for the second concert of Mr. Kirkhope's Choir, when the audience had a great treat, the choral numbers being finely rendered under Mr. Kirkhope's able direction. Mendelssohn's '98th Psalm,' Gade's 'Spring's message,' the 'Preislied' from the 'Meistersinger' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' furnished a rich feast, and gave much opportunity for a variety of choral effects. Perhaps the gem of the concert was the Ode, which went with great swing and gusto. The orchestra was led by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, and Mr. William Green was the soloist.

The Choral Union is always happy in 'Israel in Egypt,' and its large vocal forces enable it to give all the necessary dignity and massiveness of tone to Handel's magnificent mountain-chain of choruses. Its performance on March 18, under the safe guidance of Mr. T. H. Collinson, fully maintained all the honourable traditions associated with the Society's renderings of the work. The soloists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Alice Lakin and Mr. Charles Saunders, and the band was under the careful leadership of Mr. Henry Dambmann. At the close of the concert a presentation of silver plate and music books was made to Mr. James Dowie, who has been connected with the Union for twenty-five years.

The Northern Choral Society gave a most creditable performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Goring Thomas's 'Sun-worshippers' on February 23, ably conducted by Mr. James A. Crichton; and Miss Marion Dalziel, Mr. J. F. S. Adams and Mr. Robert Burnett contributed solos which were much appreciated.

On March 13 the East End Choral Society (conductor Mr. D. Blair) gave its fifth annual concert, the chief work being 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' 'Onaway, awake, beloved!' was charmingly sung by Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and the Edinburgh String Quartet contributed Haydn's 'Emperor's Hymn' movement.

A very pleasant concert was that of the Southern Choral Association, which took place in the Livingstone Hall on March 15. In both the 'Erl King's Daughter' and 'Blest pair of Sirens' the Society did credit to its conductor Mr. Winning. There was a capital little band, and the soloists, Mrs. Christie, Miss Macdiarmid and Mr. George Campbell, were excellent, Mr. Campbell especially giving great distinction to the part of Olaf.

The series of orchestral concerts was brilliantly rounded off by that which took place on February 20. Dr. Cowen and the Messrs. Paterson deserve unstinted praise and congratulations on the success of the season. The programme was a plebiscite one, and included the 'Pathetic' symphony, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture and the 'Ride of the Valkyries'—all beautifully played. Miss Marie Hall made quite a sensation by her violin playing.

A charming concert, which was worthy of much better support than it received, was that given by the Verbrugghen Quartet on March 7, and the third concert (February 26) of the Edinburgh String Quartet was equally interesting, including as it did works by Beethoven, Dvorák and Haydn. The sixth classical concert (March 16) brought the Brussels Quartet, assisted in one number (the Pianoforte quintet of César Franck) by Mr. Denhof. Quartets by Glazounow and Beethoven were rendered with perfect finish and ensemble.

Miss Agnes Stewart Wood and Mr. John Coates gave a very interesting recital of violin and vocal music on February 21, and Miss Marion Richards in conjunction with Mr. Charles Tree, and with Miss Mabel Barrons at the pianoforte, a vocal duet recital on February 22. Mrs. Kennedy Fraser's fourth lecture-recital had for subject Schubert's song-cycle 'A Winter's Journey'; and pianoforte recitals were given by Mr. Ernst Denhof (March 4) and Madame Carreño (March 9).

A special word may be given to the violin and pianoforte recital given by Miss Helen and Mr. Peter Macgregor on March 15. The sister and brother showed unanimity of feeling and a capital ensemble in César Franck's Sonata in A, and each showed talent and technical accomplishment in their respective solos—notably in Tartini's G minor Sonata and Bach's chromatic fantasia and fugue.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The close of the Choral and Orchestral Union's season marked, as usual, the beginning of quite a flood of miscellaneous music-makings. The excellent concert given by Mr. Hutton Malcolm's Male-voice Choir took place just too late to be recorded last month. A noteworthy feature of the programme was the inclusion of no fewer than seven vocal pieces given for the first time in Glasgow.

The first appearance of what is practically a newly-formed University Choral Society took place on March 5. The choir, a fairly well-balanced body of about fifty voices, were heard to best advantage in the well-known madrigal 'Hard by a fountain' and in Smart's 'Waken, lords and ladies gay.' Instrumental solos were contributed by Miss Bessie Spence (violin), Prof. Bower (violoncello), and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianoforte), and the three performers gave, in addition, a delightful rendering of Haydn's Pianoforte trio No. 1, in G. Mr. A. M. Henderson, the recently-appointed organist to the University, officiated as conductor. The concert of the Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society on March 9 showed that Mr. B. W. Hartley and his choristers still maintain their reputation for refined part-singing.

The third of the chamber concerts given under the auspices of the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society was given on March 11, when a capital programme of concerted music was rendered by the Verbrugghen Quartet, with Mr. Philip Halstead as pianist. Miss Annie M'Caa contributed some vocal solos.

Langside Choral Society, a recently-formed suburban choir, gave its inaugural concert on March 14. Haydn's 'Creation' was performed, and nothing but praise can be bestowed on the performance. The choir consists of about 80 voices—the soprano, tenor, and bass sections being unusually good—and under the able and experienced guidance of the conductor, Dr. A. Davidson Arnott, it is capable of doing excellent work.

Govan Choral Union, under Dr. D. F. Wilson's baton, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on March 20. The singing of the choir was notable chiefly for its vigour, the members entering into their part with great enthusiasm. The soloists were Mrs. Baxter, Miss Marion Urie, and Messrs. Brockett and Lewis, and Mr. Daly led a small string band, whose accompaniments were ably supplemented by Dr. Frew at the organ.

Opera has been much in evidence during the month. The Royal Carl Rosa and the Moody-Manners companies each gave a fortnight's performances. A feature of the Carl Rosa season was the fine presentation of Beethoven's 'Fidelio.' Amateur performances have been given by the Orpheus Club ('Merrie England') and the Glasgow College of Music Opera Class (Offenbach's 'Grand Duchess'). In the latter work the distinguished appearance of Miss Jenny Young, a very promising Glasgow vocalist, merits special mention.

Successful pianoforte recitals have been given by Madame Carreño, Mr. Frederic Lamond (a Beethoven programme) and Mr. August Hyllested. Among other performances have been Spohr's 'Last Judgment' by the Sunday School Union Choir (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor); Costa's 'Eli' by the Clydebank Choral Union; and the 'Creation' by the Coatbridge Choral Union, the last two Societies being conducted by Mr. W. J. Clapperton.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted the Symphony Orchestra's performance, on February 25, of his symphonic variations on an African theme and the Entr'acte from 'Herod.' The orchestra, under Mr. Akeroyd, also gave fine performances of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony and Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture.

Dr. Richter's last Philharmonic concert on February 26 was largely attended. The programme included Tchaikovsky's Fifth symphony and Dvorák's 'In der Natur' symphony.

The programme of the last 'Gentlemen's' concert, given under the auspices of the Orchestral Society, included Beethoven's Eighth symphony, Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Aulis' overture, the introduction to Act V. of Reinecke's 'King Manfred,' Tchaikovsky's Andante cantabile for strings and a Serenade by Jensen, in addition to Bach's 'Brandenburg' concerto for strings.

The final Schiever concert found the famous Quartet at its best in performances of Dvorák's Quartet in E and Schumann's Pianoforte quartet in E flat. Mr. Howard Hadley, the solo pianist, made an excellent impression.

The final Armonica Society concert in the small concert room, St. George's Hall, on March 13, was of particular interest. There was then played the seldom-heard Goetz Symphony in F and Godard's 'Scènes Poétique.' Heartiest congratulations were showered upon Mr. E. A. Garrod, who gave a really admirable rendering of the solo part in Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and Miss Mary Longdon sang several songs with her accustomed success.

At the penultimate Symphony Orchestra concert on March 11, Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, Tchaikovsky's ballet suite 'La Belle au Bois dormant' and Saint-Saëns's 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' were played. Miss Ethel Lister, the vocalist of the evening, sang Mendelssohn's aria 'Infelice,' Ambroise Thomas's 'Je suis Titania' and Weber's 'Softly sighs.'

The Welsh Choral Union gave an excellent rendering of Bach's 'Passion' music at the Philharmonic Hall on March 16. The interpretation was extremely reverent and devotional and showed that the choir and their conductor, Mr. Harry Evans, were thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the work. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. R. Wynne Jones and Mr. Frederic Austin. Mr. Branscombe rendered excellent service at the organ. Much credit is due to this excellent organization for its enterprise in performing this great work

The Philharmonic final concert brought a successful season to a satisfactory conclusion with the first part of Verdi's 'Requiem,' the principals being Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Beethoven opened this season's series of Hallé concerts; Bach closed it, with the performance of the Mass in B minor on March 14. This third effort of the choir in this work was the best it has made. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. William Green and Mr. Hjalmar Arlberg. At the concert of February 21 there was one more repetition of the 'Pathetic' symphony, and Dr. Brodsky played Beethoven's Violin concerto. Bruckner's Symphony No. 3, in D minor, made little impression at the following concert, but Madame Carreño scored a great success in a fine performance of Beethoven's E flat concerto. The 'Eroica' symphony was gloriously played at the concert of March 7. Miss Nervil, the brilliant Australian soprano, was the vocalist, and Mr. Albert Spalding, the young American artist, played the Violin concerto of Saint-Saëns with good tone and with not a little nervous skill.

At the Gentlemen's Concert of February 25 there was some pleasant singing by ladies of the Hallé Choir in part-songs by Brahms and Elgar; and Dr. Richter secured a delightful performance of Mozart's 'Prague' symphony in D. Mr. Dalton Baker was the solo vocalist.

The programme of the Brodsky Quartet concert of February 27 included Mozart's Quartet No. 1, in G, Beethoven's Quartet in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2) and César Franck's Pianoforte quintet in F minor. Mr. R. J. Forbes was at the pianoforte in the quintet. At the Promenade Concert of February 23 Mr. Egon Petri played his new Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra in C minor, and Mr. Rawdon Briggs gave a good rendering of the solo work in Spohr's so-called 'dramatic' Violin concerto. Mr. Hamilton Harris was the vocalist. The last of the ten concerts, on March 9, opened with the overture 'Leonora,' No. 3, and closed with the 'Ride of the Valkyries.' Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Speelman (conductor of the concerts) played the first movement of a double concerto by Mozart for violin and viola, introducing an interesting cadenza by Hellmesberger. Madame Effie Thomas and Mr. Herbert Brown were the vocalists, the latter breaking new ground with the late Heinrich Hofmann's setting of Felix Dahn's 'Die Lieder des Troubadours Raoul' (Op. 89).

Mr. Brand Lane brought his season of Subscription Concerts to a close on March 2. Such talent and such fame as Lady Hallé, Madame Albani, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Leonard Borwick bring with them, served to pack the Free Trade Hall, with nothing great or new to aid the allurement. The reception with which Lady Hallé met was remarkable, even from a Manchester audience. Miss Olga Neruda was her sister's accompanist. The Philharmonic Choir, that has sung so wonderfully well this season, fully sustained its reputation in interleaving the vocal and instrumental solos.

Messrs. Franz Schörg, Hans Daucher, Paul Miry and J. Gaillard, the cultured and skilful Brussels String Quartet, provided the programme of the last of the Schiller-Anstalt concerts. It comprised the first of the three Schumann Quartets (Op. 41, in A minor), Schubert's Quintet (Op. 163, in C)—Mr. Carl Fuchs taking the second violoncello—and Debussy's Quartet in G minor (Op. 10).

Mr. J. H. Foulds, of the Hallé and Promenade concerts, adds a string quartet to the list of his compositions. Three movements from it were played here on February 24. Mr. Cross's twenty-sixth season of popular concerts closed on March 16 with musical compliments to St. Patrick.

The programme of the last concert of the season of the Manchester Vocal Society, given on March 20, consisted entirely of old English music, in ballad, dialogue, madrigal, duet and chorus, selected by the director Dr. Henry Watson. A chest of genuine viols, together with the harpsichord, were employed for the instrumental accompaniments, and Dr. Watson played on the harpsichord a Toccata by Henry Purcell. The illustrated programme was most daintily got up.

(From our own Correspondent.)

One of the best chamber concerts we have had for some time was that of the Classical Concert Society on February 21, when Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Carl Wendling gave a pianoforte and violin recital, which included sonatas by Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms. The pianoforte playing of Mr. Borwick was fascinating to a high degree. Pianoforte quartets by Mendelssohn and Schumann were performed by local artists at the Newcastle Musical Society's concert on February 27, under the able leadership of Mr. Alfred Wall; and on March 7 the Brussels Quartet appeared at the Chamber Music Society's last concert. In addition to Grieg's string quartet and one of Beethoven's, they performed, in conjunction with Herr Ernst Denhof, César Franck's beautiful Pianoforte quintet in F minor, a novelty here.

The South Shields Orchestral Society gave a most creditable rendering of an ambitious programme on February 27, which included Mozart's E flat Symphony, the first movement of Schumann's first Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave' overture and Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' suite. Mr. A. Adams conducted. The Choral Society of the same town gave, with orchestral accompaniment, the first performance there of Elgar's 'King Olaf,' on March 13, under the direction of Mr. M. Fairs. On the same evening the Students' Choral Society at the Armstrong College, Newcastle, sang Mozart's 'Requiem' and Walford Davies' 'The three jovial huntsmen,' under Mr. W. G. Whittaker's conductorship. The programme also included Granville Bantock's part-song 'The silken thread' and Joseph Holbrooke's 'Spring is cheery.'

Two of our Newcastle Choral Societies, the Amateur Vocal and the Philharmonic, are arranging to unite under the leadership of Mr. J. E. Jeffries, the conductor of the former, and the latter body gave its last concert as a separate organization on March 14, under the skilful guidance of Mr. George Dodds, when Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' was performed. It is a pity that Mr. Dodds is retiring from the conductorship, because he has done much good and careful work.

On March 26 the Postal Telegraph Choral Society performed Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' under the able conductorship of Mr. Edgar L. Bainton. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Albert Garcia, the latter singing exceedingly well.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The great attraction at the Nottingham Orchestral Concert on March 7 was the performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, and, considering the large amateur element of which the orchestra is composed, Mr. Allen Gill and all concerned are to be congratulated on the success of the concert. The other items of the programme were Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, Grieg's 'Holberg' suite and some Wagner selections from 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Lohengrin.' Mr. Charles Knowles was accorded an enthusiastic reception for his solos—Henschel's 'Young Dietrich' and Sullivan's 'Thou art passing hence.' The concert as a whole, both artistically and financially, is one of the very best the Society has given.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society concluded its fifty-first season with a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on March 22. The artists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. William Green and Mr. Lane Wilson, with Miss Jennie Bentley representing local talent. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, Mr. Lyell Tayler led the orchestra and Mr. F. Wyatt officiated at the organ.

On March 12 Miss Cantelo terminated her season of chamber concerts at Nottingham, when the programme included Tchaikovsky's quartet (Op. 11), beautifully rendered by the Brodsky Quartet. Miss Cantelo gave a charming performance of Chopin's Nocturne in C minor and Ballade in G minor, and also accompanied Mr. Brodsky in Bach's Violin concerto in A minor. This was the only opportunity the audience had throughout the season of hearing Mr. Brodsky as a soloist, and his magnificent breadth of tone in Bach's polyphonic music was thoroughly appreciated. The concert concluded with a fine rendering of Brahms's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 34).

At the concert of the Leicester Symphony Orchestra on February 28, the programme included Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in C (No. 21), Beethoven's Symphony in D and a new Festival March by Mr. F. Marshall Ward, of Nottingham, conducted by the composer. Miss Jessie Adcock was the solo pianist and Mr. J. Addison Adcock conducted.

The Leicester Philharmonic Society's performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' on March 21 is, despite some shortcomings, one upon which the Society and its conductor are to be warmly congratulated. The choir were heard to great advantage in the opening chorus 'O ye priests,' and 'In the name of Jesus,' and specially in the Lord's Prayer. The soloists were Madame Siviter, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Dalton Baker, each of whom did splendidly. Special mention may be made of the soprano solo 'The sun goeth down,' the 'Arrest' scene for the alto, and the tenor solo 'Unto you that fear.' Mr. Ellis, who ably conducted, deserves credit for his enterprise in having introduced Elgar's latest oratorio to a Leicester audience.

A new choral society has been formed at Loughborough, and judging from the works selected for its first concert, this fresh organization promises to do excellent work. The programme of the first performance on March 5 contained two choral works, Goring Thomas's 'Sun-worshippers' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise.' The chorus was supported by an orchestra led by Mr. Burrows, which played the first movement of Schubert's fifth Symphony and a piece for strings by Tchaikovsky. The soloists were Miss Edith Locke (Leicester), Miss May Beeby (Loughborough), and Mr. Frank Mullings (Birmingham). Mr. Frank Storer conducted and Mr. Hambleton accompanied.

The Long Eaton Choral Society performed 'Elijah' at its concert on March 12. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss May Peters, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Dan Price. The choral and orchestral forces, under the direction of Mr. J. S. Derbyshire, gave an excellent rendering of the familiar work.

On March 14 the Gedling Choral Society sang Gaul's 'Holy City' with care and precision. The solos were ably interpreted by Miss Lilian Adams, Miss Dora Moore, Mr. Hallam and Mr. Marks.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

We made an excellent start this term with a performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' given on January 24 by the vocal society under its able conductor Mr. Wilsdon. This was its first performance in the University city, and as the Society had devoted nearly two years to its preparation great interest was aroused, the Town Hall being crowded. The principal vocalists were Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Garcia, all of them excellent. The choir sang in such a manner as to place on record a magnificent asset to the good for all time.

On January 31 in the same building, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, a chamber concert was given, its chief features being Brahms's Serenade for small orchestra in A (Op. 16), Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G—Mr. Donald Tovey playing the pianoforte part in the latter work—and Bach's Concerto for flute, oboe, violin, trumpet and strings, in F, under the conductorship of Dr. Allen. The concert was very enjoyable.

The Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, gave on February 20 his terminal lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre on 'Musical texture,' the subject being handled in the most interesting manner and keenly appreciated. The illustrations, drawn exclusively from Sebastian Bach, were ably rendered by Miss Honey, Miss Jones, Mr. Barton and Mr. James Friskin.

The following day in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, Miss Fanny Davies, Herr Kreisler and Mr. Whitehouse gave a delightful concert, the programme including Brahms's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Op. 78) and Beethoven's Pianoforte trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1), in addition to four short solos very charmingly played by Miss Fanny Davies.

On March 4 in the Examination Schools the Schiever Quartet, under the auspices of the Musical Union, gave an interesting concert, the principal pieces being Beethoven's Quartet in F minor (Op. 95), Mozart's Divertimento for violin, viola and violoncello in E flat and Dvorák's beautiful quartet ('Aus der neuen Welt') in F (Op. 96). Songs from Scarlatti and Legrenzi were contributed by Mr. T. C. Gibson.

Last, though by no means least, the united efforts of the Philharmonic and Choral Society and Bach Choir were, on March 14, concentrated upon the performance, in the Town Hall, of Beethoven's Mass in D, under the able and enthusiastic baton of Dr. Allen, for the first time in Oxford. To comment upon its vocal difficulties at this time of day is needless; suffice it to say that they were on this occasion for the most part successfully surmounted. The principal vocalists were Miss Taggart, Miss Lett, Mr. Jackson and Mr. Francis Harford. The second part of the programme was occupied by the 'Eroica' Symphony, Oxford supplying the strings and London the wind portions of the orchestra.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Rotherham Choral Society has achieved some notable exploits in the past, and probably no choral body in the country working under similar conditions can show a more honourable record. As financial difficulties have this season somewhat limited its doings, which generally include the performance of an unfamiliar work, 'Elijah' on March 7 was relied upon to augment the treasury. The choir sang with all its customary spirit and grip. There was a competent orchestra, and Mr. T. L. Brameld conducted with inspiring zest. The soloists were Madame Wilson Moulds, Miss May Peters, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. R. Charlesworth.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society performed Verdi's 'Requiem,' under the direction of Dr. Coward, on March 20. The master's picturesque music taxed the chorus severely, the inadequate balance of parts adding to their difficulties; but they rose to the occasion and sang with power and expression. The fugal choruses suffered most from the disparity in balance; the 'Dies Iræ' sections were dramatically sung. The principals were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Herbert Brown. The orchestra played the 'Tannhäuser' overture and Meyerbeer's Coronation march, and the choir gave a charming performance of Pinsuti's 'In this hour of softened splendour.'

The Burngreave Choral Society has taken a fresh lease of life and enthusiasm. A performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' under Mr. H. C. Jackson, proved the fact to the full. The chorus sang with steadiness and good tone.

In the month's record must be included a competent rendering by the Tankersley Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Soar) of Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day'; and a successful and very praiseworthy concert by the Chapeltown Sacred Harmonic Society, at which Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, Bach's church cantata 'Bide with us' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment' constituted the programme.

At the last concert of the Sheffield Chamber Music Society, Stanford's quartet (Op. 64) in D minor, Beethoven's quartet (Op. 18, No. 3) and Max Reger's Pianoforte trio in B minor (Op. 2) were performed by Messrs. James and J. W. Sharpe's quartet party.

Among other interesting events announced to be given in the closing days of the month were concerts by the Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra (conductor, Mr. J. H. Parkes) and the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society (conductor, Mr. J. Duffell), also performances of 'Acis and Galatea' by the Hillsbro' Choral Society; of Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm,' at St. Mary's Church; Tozer's 'Way of the Cross,' at Zion Congregational Church, and Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' at St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Church.

The performance on March 21 of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' by the Sheffield Musical Union, following close upon the rendering of 'The Apostles' by the Amateur Musical Society, created much interest. Dr. Coward conducted an intelligent and well-prepared interpretation of the oratorio in which the fine choir and a competent orchestra divided the honours. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Herbert Brown. The choir concluded an exacting night's work with an heroic and perfectly tuneful performance of Bach's motet for double choir, 'Sing ye to the Lord.' The orchestra played with neatness and expression the overture and ballet-music from Schubert's 'Rosamunde.'

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

We have had three choral concerts at Leeds during the past month that were of exceptional interest; on March 13 and 14 the Leeds Choral Union gave Elgar's 'The Apostles' and 'The Kingdom,'—the latter for the first time in Yorkshire—and on March 20 the Leeds Philharmonic Society followed with Berlioz's 'Requiem.' The Choral Union had bad luck as regards the cast of soloists originally selected, for out of the six who were to take part in 'The Apostles' half were ill and unable to appear. However, though at the eleventh hour, a most efficient cast was secured. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. John Coates assumed their original parts, and sang them with their habitual mastery. Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. John Browning (a dignified St. Peter) and Mr. Charles Knowles (an incisive if not very subtle Judas) completed the cast. In 'The Kingdom,' on the following evening, Miss Esta D'Argo sang the music allotted to the Blessed Virgin, and especially the important solo, very artistically, Mr. Knowles gave force to St. Peter's utterances, and Miss Lonsdale and Mr. Coates resumed their respective parts. The chorus sang finely on both nights, though, singularly enough, seeing that this is the third time they have sung 'The Apostles,' with greater confidence in the work that was new to them. The Queen's Hall Orchestra, though its fine quality was plainly manifested, cannot be said to have appeared to advantage, and seemed to find some difficulty in accustoming themselves to the beat of Dr. Coward, who conducted with unsparing energy. What kind of general impression was produced by 'The Kingdom' I cannot say, but so far as my own personal impression goes, it confirmed my opinion of its wonderful devotional feeling, its directness of expression, its power of realising character and creating an atmosphere, together with a certain structural weakness which makes it seem lacking in proportion and leaves one without a sense of finality.

Berlioz's monumental 'Requiem,' though very seldom heard, was not quite new to Yorkshire, having been given on two occasions at Bradford in 1887; but the Leeds Philharmonic Society's performance was enough of a novelty to attract musical people from far and wide. The Hallé Orchestra was greatly augmented for the occasion, and the small brass orchestras at the four quarters of the compass, together with the array of ten kettledrums, were fully represented. The chorus, trained by Mr. Fricker, were note-perfect in their very exacting task, and I never heard the 'Rex, tremendæ' more brilliantly sung. Sir Charles Stanford conducted, and deserves credit for having emphasised the 'architectural' character which Berlioz claimed for his music, without any unnecessary stress on its sensational side, and the result was a highly impressive performance. The tenor solo was sung by Mr. T. Middleton, a member of the chorus. At the same concert Dr. Cowen conducted his fine ode, 'The Passions,' the revival of which was most welcome. An interesting innovation was a public full rehearsal of the 'Requiem' on the Saturday night before, the orchestra being brought to Leeds for the purpose. It is a plan which deserves imitation.

The Municipal Concerts have been even more interesting than usual. That on February 23 introduced some of Sir Charles Stanford's compositions, two movements from the 'Watts' symphony, two from the Violin concerto—the solo most artistically played by Miss Alice Simpkin, a member of the orchestra—and the first 'Irish Rhapsody,' all of which were very ably played under the composer's direction. Dr. Bairstow, who as organist of the Parish Church has already done much to enhance the artistic and devotional character of its music, conducted an overture of his composition, 'By the waters of Babylon,' a well-written work quite in keeping with its subject and possessing genuine poetic feeling. The final concert of the series was on March 7, when the popularity of Wagner was evidenced by the most crowded house of the season for a 'Wagner programme,' which included examples covering the whole of his career, from 'Rienzi,' 'Flying Dutchman,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' up to 'Meistersinger' and the 'Siegfried Idyll.' The orchestra, under Mr. Fricker's guidance, showed its thorough efficiency by its finished playing of an exacting programme, and in one or two choral extracts the Morley Choral Society lent their aid with good effect. The Leeds Bohemian Chamber Concert on March 6 included Brahms's Clarinet quintet, with Mr. M. Fawcett, an able local artist, as clarinettist, and Borodin's beautiful string Quartet in A. These concerts are doing for earnest lovers of music what the Municipal Concerts are doing for the greater public, and the importance of both for the music of Leeds cannot easily be overrated. Mr. Edgar Haddock and Mr. F. Sant-Angelo completed their course of Beethoven's violin sonatas on March 5, and on the 19th the last of Messrs. Haddock's musical evenings took place, the violinist Kochanski being the chief attraction. On March 18 the Musical Union gave a concert, male-voice part-songs by Strauss and MacDowell, and Brahms's version for two pianofortes of his F minor Quintet being the special features of the programme. In the latter the conductor, Mr. Noel Bell, and Mr. H. P. Richardson were the pianists.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra brought a generally successful season to a close on March 2 with a plebiscite programme, which almost as a matter of course included the 'Tannhäuser' and '1812' Overtures, the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and the 'Unfinished' Symphony. The most delightful thing in the concert was the admirable interpretation of the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto by Mr. Arthur Catterall, the young Manchester violinist. It was delicate yet manly, warm in feeling yet reticent, and presented the work to the utmost advantage. Mr. Allen Gill conducted with great spirit and good taste. On March 8 Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed at the last of the subscription concerts, under the direction of Dr. Cowen, who gave a fine, dignified reading of the oratorio. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, the last of whom gave a noble and convincing interpretation of the chief rôle. On March 12 Mr. S. Midgley gave the second of his chamber concerts, the programme including two pianoforte trios—those of Brahms (in C minor) and Saint-Saëns—in which the concert-giver as pianist was associated with Miss Edith Robinson (violin) and Mr. Walter Hatton (violoncello). Miss Nellie Judson and Miss Nellie Bennett proved promising vocalists in duets by Brahms and in other pieces.

OTHER TOWNS.

It is rather significant that I have to record three performances of 'The Dream of Gerontius' that have taken place during the past month in Yorkshire towns. It was given on March 1 by the very powerful Huddersfield Society, a fine and impressive performance under Dr. Coward, with Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Francis Braun as principals. The chorus singing was of course superb—never have I heard the choral portions of the work so forcibly and impressively sung. On March 15, Mr. C. L. Naylor conducted a performance by the Harrogate Choral Society, with Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Herbert Brown as the soloists. Mr. Naylor gave a reading that was full of life, his tempi being on the quick side; but if it lost a little where dignity was required, it was always musicianly, and did not neglect the poetry of the music. Mr. Summerscales, who conducted the Keighley Musical Union's performance on March 19, leaned in just the opposite direction, aiming at steadiness till the effect was occasionally almost lethargic. The chorus sang exceedingly well, however, and the principal parts were ably sustained by Madame Dewhurst, Mr. H. Brearley, and Mr. Herbert Brown. The Keighley Orchestral Society's concert on March 6 was distinguished by the visit of Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto, Miss Edith Robinson being the soloist. Mrs. Henry J. Wood was the vocalist, and Mr. Summerscales the conductor.

At Halifax the Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Van Dyk is conductor, gave a concert on March 7, at which Haydn's symphony 'Mit dem Paukenschlag' (No. 8 of the Salomon set) was played with great spirit by the orchestra, which is largely amateur in its constitution. Mr. F. Holt's artistic playing of the Cor anglais solo in the introduction to Act III. of 'Tristan' was another interesting feature, though here, unfortunately, the orchestra was not quite equal to its responsibilities. Mr. John Needham, a young Halifax tenor, gave evidence of his progress, as well of an exceptionally beautiful tenor voice, by his singing at this concert. On March 14 the Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. F. de G. English, gave a good all-round performance of Dr. Walford-Davies's 'Everyman,' which made a strong impression, the solo parts being well sustained by Miss Esmé Atherden, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Frederic Austin.

At Hull there has been a good deal of interesting music lately. The Symphony Orchestra gave its last two concerts on February 28 and March 14, with an amount of public favour that has steadily increased during the season and has encouraged the Orchestra to announce a series of ten concerts for next season. On the earlier date a Mozart symphony in C (Köchel No. 425) was heard. At the last concert Schubert's sixth Symphony was the central feature, and both were played with a refinement of ensemble testifying to the great advance in discipline made by the Orchestra under Mr. Wallerstein's training. On February 27 Mr. John Dunn gave an orchestral concert at which he played Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, a work singularly suited to his vigorous, exuberant style. The orchestra was of the 'scratch' order, being recruited from far and near, but Mr. T. Tertius Noble, who conducted, managed to secure a very effective performance of Beethoven's seventh Symphony. On March 8 the Philharmonic Society, of which Mr. J. W. Hudson is conductor, gave a concert the principal feature of which was Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, and on March 19 the Vocal Society gave 'St. Paul,' under the direction of Dr. G. H. Smith. Miss Ethel Lister, Miss May Peters, Mr. W. Maxwell and Mr. Charles Tree were the principals in a generally successful performance.

The very enterprising Doncaster Musical Society chose Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith' for its concert on March 14, when a satisfactory performance was given under Mr. Thomas Brameld's inspiring direction, the principals being Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Albert Garcia. Another society which is both efficient and plucky, that of Morley, gave a programme of Wagner's music on March 11, selections from 'The Flying Dutchman,' 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' being very well done under Mr. Fricker and with the assistance of Madame Verrinder and Mr. Dan Price, who sang the great duet from the 'Dutchman' with good effect. 'Elijah,' which is seldom long absent from choral programmes, was given by the Scarborough Philharmonic Society on March 11, conducted by Dr. Ely, and by the York Musical Society on March 20 under Mr. T. Tertius Noble.

Foreign Notes.

BARCELONA.

Siegfried Wagner recently gave two concerts at the Liceo. At the first he conducted his maternal grandfather's symphonic poem 'Tasso' (Liszt), his father's 'Siegfried-Idyll,' and the 'Flying Dutchman' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures; also excerpts from his own first three operas.

BERLIN.

Richard Strauss was invited to become a member of the Paris Société des Auteurs dramatiques, but he declined, as Article 5 of the statutes would, as he pointed out in a letter to a Berlin paper, give the Society power even to forbid a performance of 'Salome' under his direction in this city. M. Alfred Capus, president of the Société, having informed him by telegram that his adhesion to the statutes would only bind him so far as concerns France, Belgium, French Switzerland, and the principality of Monaco, the German composer has declared his intention to become a member as soon as he has received a letter from the president.

EISENACH.

The inauguration of Bach's birth-house as a museum will shortly take place, and at the same time will be held the third German Bach festival. The directors of the Bach House are Prof. Dr. Joachim, Generalmusikdirector Steinbach, Dr. von Hase (of Leipzig), Dr. Bornemann (of Eisenach) and Prof. Georg Schumann. Autographs, pictures, documents, instruments, &c., connected with Bach, his family and his contemporaries, are to be exhibited. Most of the autographs are in the Berlin Library, and it is not known whether the many instruments which belonged to Bach and his sons are still in existence. Every effort will, however, be made to gather together as many relics as possible, and all lovers of Bach, i.e., all true musicians, are requested to help in so praiseworthy an undertaking.

HEIDELBERG.

Lina Ramann, in her 'Franz Liszt,' remarks that 'after many Good Friday sufferings through adverse criticism and the prejudices to which it has given birth, "Christus" awaits its Easter morn.' The work has recently been given several times in Germany and apparently created a deep impression. The latest performance was in this city by the Bach Society, under the direction of Prof. Wolfrum. It lasted three hours and a-half, but the eagerly attentive audience followed the music to the close.

LEIPZIG.

A full report of the Second Congress of the International Music Society, held at Basle, September 25-27, 1906, has just been published by Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel. Among the papers read were two by well-known British musicians: Dr. Charles Maclean, on 'The Musical Institutions of Great Britain and Ireland,' and by Dr. McNaught, entitled 'Regarding Welsh Eisteddfodau.'

LISBON.

An opera entitled 'Amore e Perdizione,' by Jean Arroyo, a former minister of foreign affairs, has been produced here with marked success. The royal family honoured the performance with their presence.

MUNICH.

The programmes for the festival performances have been issued. The dates of the Mozart operas at the Residenz are as follows: 'Don Juan,' August 1 and 7; 'Figaro,' August 3 and 9; 'Così fan tutte,' August 5 and 11. The Wagner performances will commence on August 12 with 'Tristan,' which will be repeated on the 21st, 26th, and on September 7. Three 'Ring' cycles are announced for August 14, 15, 17, and 19; August 28, 29, 31, and September 2; and September 9, 10, 12, and 14. 'Tannhäuser' will be given on August 23 and September 4, and 'Die Meistersinger' on August 24 and September 5.

ST. PETERSBURG.

A new opera by Rimski-Korsakov, entitled 'The Legend of the invisible city of Kilej and of the Maiden Fevronia,' was successfully produced at the end of February at the Mary Theatre. W. J. Bielsky is the author of the libretto.

WIESBADEN.

Mozart's 'Don Juan,' Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba,' and Adolphe Adam's 'Le Postillon de Longjumeau,' have been selected for the festival performances in May, at which the Kaiser will be present.

WÜRZBURG.

In memory of the recently-deceased composer, Cyril Kistler, the Royal School of Music performed at one of its concerts the Prelude to the fourth act of his 'Faust' music.

Country News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—The cantata 'King Harold,' by F. Cunningham Woods, was performed on March 19 by the choir of Belmont Congregational Church, Mr. A. Forbes Milne conducting. The feature of the performance was the singing of the duet between Edith (Miss M. Laird) and Harold (Mr. J. G. Anderson), viz., 'Dear, holy maid,' the entry of the chorus of monks being particularly effective. A miscellaneous second part followed the cantata, during which the orchestra, led by Mr. A. R. Findlay, played Coleridge-Taylor's 'Valse Bohémienne' and Schubert's 'Military march' (Op. 51, No. 1), both arranged for pianoforte and strings.

BASINGSTOKE.—J. H. Maunder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was given on March 19 by the choir of the Parish Church, assisted by a string band and a choir of some 100 extra voices, the wind parts being played on the organ by Mr. Liddle. The Rev. R. Spurrell sang the bass solos, the solo boy of the Parish Church choir and the leading tenor taking the other solos. Mr. E. Jones, of Southampton, led the orchestra and the vicar, the Rev. H. W. Boustead, conducted.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society performed Verdi's 'Requiem' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' at the concert of March 14. The choir gave a vivid and inspirited rendering of the choral music under the able direction of Mr. Robert Taylor, and the orchestra did excellent service, not only in the works named, but also in the March from 'Eli,' and Guilmant's 'Sonata symphonique' for organ and orchestra, the solo part being played by Mr. Percy Taylor. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Kate Holbrook, Mr. W. Maxwell and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

BROMLEY (KENT).—The Musical Society gave its third concert in the Drill Hall on February 23, under the direction of Mr. F. Lewis Thomas. The programme included Weber's 'Oberon' and Grieg's 'In Autumn' overtures, the Angelus and March from Massenet's 'Scènes pittoresques' and three movements from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music. Two movements from Grieg's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in F were played by Messrs. G. E. Cathie, who led the orchestra, and Mr. F. Lewis Thomas, and the vocalists were Miss Edith Miller and Mr. Julien Henry.

BURTON-ON-TRENT.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on March 11, when the programme consisted of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' and Beethoven's C minor Symphony. The choir and orchestra, numbering 170, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Lowe, gave an artistic rendering of the first two works, and the orchestra was heard to great advantage in the symphony. Mr. John Harrison was the solo vocalist and Mr. Charles Collier played the solo part in Gabriel Pierné's Concertstück for harp and orchestra.

CATFORD.—The Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. C. W. Wilkes, performed Gounod's 'Redemption,' at St. Dunstan's College, on February 28. The oratorio was effectively rendered by a choir and orchestra numbering nearly 160 performers. The singing of the choir reflected great credit upon the members themselves and upon the conductor, the music of the 'Celestial choir' being rendered by a selected body of boys and men belonging to St. Lawrence's Church, Catford, of which Mr. Wilkes is organist and choirmaster. The soloists were Madame Carlotta Ide, Miss Carrie James, Miss Edith Upham, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Charles Bennett.

Chatburn (Lancs.).—The Chatburn and Downham Choral Society completed its second season on March 18 with a successful concert, which included Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The latter work especially was sung with great enthusiasm. The programme also included one of the 'Oriana' madrigals by John Benet, Elgar's 'Spanish serenade' and a part-song 'O little birds,' composed by the conductor. Miss R. Wheeler was the accompanist, and Mr. F. H. Wood conducted.

Chelmsford.—The Musical Society gave the closing concert of its twenty-fifth season on March 19, when an excellent performance of Dvorák's 'At the foot of the Cross' ('Stabat Mater') was given, the chorus-singing being especially refined and good. The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Christa, Miss Eleanor Druce, Mr. Abel Starkey and Mr. Thomas Abel. Mr. G. H. Wilby led the orchestra, and Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

Coatbridge.—The Monklands Philharmonic Society, organized some few months since, gave its first concert in the Town Hall, on March 7, with a no less ambitious programme than Handel's 'Jephtha.' The high aim of the Society was, however, justified, the choir being well balanced and singing with excellent tone and much enthusiasm. The orchestra, led by Mr. W. S. Cole, was also efficient, and the solo vocalists were Madame Ellen Verrinder, Madame Marian Christie, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Herbert Brown. The inaugural performance of the Society was altogether successful and, under the enthusiastic conductorship of Mr. T. Dixon, promises well for the future.

Craigydon, Llandudno.—The newly-formed Choral Society gave its first concert in St. Paul's Church House on March 6, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Jones, organist of St. Paul's Church. The part-music by the choir included Stainer's 'God so loved the world,' Gounod's 'There is a green hill' (solo and chorus), Festa's madrigal 'Down in a flow'ry vale,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hunter's farewell' and 'Departure.'

Dronfield.—The new Choral Society recently organized and conducted by Miss Bickerstaffe gave a good performance of Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' in the Parish Church Schoolroom on March 7. There was a small string band, and the solo vocalists were Miss H. Johnson, Mr. Gregory Taylor and Mr. J. Coleman.

Elgin.—The annual concert of the Choral and Orchestral Society was held in the Town Hall on March 15, when a very successful performance of Smart's 'The bride of Dunkerron' was given under the direction of Mr. Frederick Boothroyd, organist of the parish church, the solos being sung by Madame Annie Walker, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Harry Dearth. The accompaniments to the cantata, as well as Bach's 'Sarabande and Bourrée' and two 'Novelletten' for strings by Coleridge-Taylor, were well played by the orchestra.

Gosport.—The Gosport and Alverstoke Choral Society gave a very successful performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' conducted by Mr. Ernest Douglass, at the Thorngate Hall, on March 19. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Minnie Lendrume, Mr. Malcolm Boyle and Mr. Eaton Cooter.

Guernsey.—The annual concerts of the Guille-Allès Choral and Orchestral Associations took place on March 12 and 13. Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were the works chosen for this year's concerts. All were creditably given by the band and chorus of about 200 performers, under the direction of Mr. John David. The 'Dream of Jubal' was very well received by the crowded audience attracted by the novelty of the work. The recitations were finely declaimed by Miss Kathleen Rind. The soloists were Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Ethel Dyer, Mr. Wilfred Virgo and Mr. Herbert Parker.

Hadley (Salop).—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given by the Philharmonic Society on March 8. The band, under the leadership of Mr. T. E. Clarke, acquitted themselves with much credit, while the choir sang with refinement and excellent tone. Mr. J. Clark conducted.

Kendal.—The annual concert of the Choral Society took place on March 7 at St. George's Hall, when Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride' was the chief feature of the programme. The solo vocalists were Miss Lillie Wormald, Mr. H. Brearley and Mr. A. Garcia. The choir displayed excellent tone and variety of expression, and the orchestra played the accompaniments with much refinement, the whole performance reflecting much credit on the conductor, Mr. J. S. Winder. Palmer's part-song 'Boreas,' Glinka's 'Noble chief, thee we hail,' and Weber's 'Oberon' overture were included in the second part.

Kirriemuir.—Sullivan's popular opera 'The Mikadc' was successfully performed at the Public Hall, during the week ending March 9, by the Amateur Opera Company, under the conductorship of Mr. H. E. Peacock.

Loughborough.—The Falcon Choral and Orchestral Society (established in connection with the Falcon Works of the Brush Electric Engineering Co.) gave a concert in the Theatre Royal on March 13, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' was the chief feature of the programme, the tenor solo being sung by Mr. Ernest E. Neale. The miscellaneous second part included Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music' and the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' Dr. W. H. Paltridge conducted.

Loughton.—'St. John's Eve' (Cowen), a Petite Suite for orchestra (E. C. Nunn) and Dr. Markham Lee's 'Ode to St. Cecilia,' &c., were performed before a large and appreciative audience in the Topping Hall on March 4. Mr. Henry Riding conducted, and Dr. Markham Lee and Mr. Nunn directed their own compositions. The principals included Lady Sybil Smith, Miss Alice Chartres, Mr. Herbert Clinch, Mr. Claude Dyer, Miss Agnes Comerford (harp), Miss Ethel Mercer (pianoforte), Mr. H. W. Norton (organ) and Mr. W. B. Carter (violin).

Middleton.—The Choral Union gave an excellent performance of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' at the Co-operative Hall, on March 4, under the direction of Mr. F. R. Jones. The solo vocalists were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Mr. Wilfred Hudson and Mr. Herbert Parker.

Peterborough.—The Cecilian Choir, organized in the early part of the winter by Mr. Alfred Winterbotham, made a highly successful first appearance in the Grand Assembly Rooms on March 18, giving ample evidence of their excellent training by the conductor, clear enunciation being a noticeable feature. The programme included such well-known part-songs as Hatton's 'When evening's twilight,' Pearsall's 'O who will o'er the downs,' Hullah's 'Three fishers,' also a selection from 'The Bohemian Girl.' The solo vocalists were Miss Sara Spence, Mr. H. Hartley and Mr. James Coleman.——On the 19th the Choral Union gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria,' which was successfully rendered under the conductorship of Dr. Haydn Keeton. The miscellaneous second part included Faning's 'Song of the Vikings,' Sullivan's 'Watchman, what of the night' and Frederick Löhr's 'Slumber song,' conducted by Mr. E. Armstrong. The solo vocalists were Miss Mary Lund, Miss Isa Frood, Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst and Mr. F. Percival Driver.

Pontypool (Mon.).—The first concert of the Griffiths Town and District Harmonic Society was held on February 21, Leoni's 'Gate of Life' being the main feature of the programme. The singing of the choir, under the baton of Mr. Gwilym Mordecai, was excellent. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Grimes, Mr. Furness Williams and Mr. David Hughes.

Pontypridd.—The Tabernacle Choir gave a very satisfactory performance of Handel's 'Samson' at the Town Hall, on February 25, under the direction of Mr. D. Thomas, both choir and orchestra doing excellent service and testifying to the ability of their conductor. The solo vocalists were Miss Amy Evans, Miss S. G. Jones, Mr. Richard Thomas and Mr. David Davies.

Portsmouth.—The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'At the foot of the cross' (Stabat Mater) and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' in the Town Hall on March 14. Both choir and orchestra worked with enthusiasm and responded with alacrity to the able conductor, Mr. Monk Gould. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. F. Ranalow. At the conclusion of the performance Mr. Monk Gould was presented by the Mayor, on behalf of the members of the Society, with a gold watch and chain, on his retirement from the conductorship of the Society, a post which he has held with distinction.

Southport.—The third concert of the season by the Choral Society was given on March 15 in the Cambridge Hall, when the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' Wagner's 'Rienzi' overture and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor. The choruses throughout were well given, and a fine performance of the symphony was the result of careful rehearsal on the part of the conductor, Mr. J. C. Clarke. Mr. Gwilym Richards was the vocalist.

Southsea.—The Choral Society recently formed in connection with Christ Church gave its first concert on February 27. The part-songs and madrigals included 'If doughty deeds' (Lee Williams), 'I saw lovely Phillis' (Pearsall), 'Three fishers' (G. A. Macfarren), 'O happy eyes' (Elgar) and 'Good-night, beloved' (Pinsuti), which were well sung. Mr. E. Stanley Jones, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

Swadlincote.—The Harmonic Society gave a successful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing' and Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' in the Town Hall on March 20. The attack, light and shade, quality of tone, and finish of the chorus was very commendable. The soloists were Miss Lillie Wormald (soprano) and Mr. John Bardsley (tenor). There was an efficient orchestra led by Mr. William Henley, and Mr. Walter Tones conducted.

Swindon.—The Choral and Orchestral Union gave a concert at the Mechanics' Institute on March 13. The programme included Stanford's 'Revenge,' Faning's 'Song of the Vikings,' Mackenzie's 'Benedictus,' and the overtures 'Merry Wives of Windsor' and 'Mirella.' These works were satisfactorily rendered under the direction of Mr. H. T. Sims, of Bath.

Tonbridge.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Public Hall on March 13, when Parry's 'Pied Piper' and a miscellaneous selection were performed, the latter including Gaul's 'Daybreak,' Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' and Brahms's 'Vineta' by the choir, and the orchestra played Kalliwoda's Concert Overture in F, the overture to 'Figaro' and the Entr'acte from Schubert's 'Rosamunde.' The solo vocalists were Miss Marie Gwynn, Mr. Charles Hubble and Mr. Graham Smart, the two last named representing the Pied Piper and the Mayor in Parry's cantata. Mr. H. C. Stewart conducted the orchestral pieces and Mr. C. J. Kimmins the choral works.

Woolston.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Choral Society at its sixth concert in the Victoria Hall on March 5. The oratorio was conducted by Mr. W. A. Thompson, and the principal vocalists were Madame Hilda Sands, Madame Madge Atkinson, Mr. G. Conlan and Mr. T. Faulkner. The performance was altogether successful.

An interesting feature of the Symphonic Orchestra Society, organized some few months since by Mr. W. Handel Thorley, is the fact that an excellent opening is afforded to young composers, who may on payment of a small fee conduct their own compositions at the Society's rehearsals, and thus may be given an opportunity to enable agents and publishers to hear their works. The Orchestra, it should be mentioned, is comprised of instrumentalists of acknowledged ability and repute, drawn from various well-known orchestras.

Errata.—March issue, p. 156, col. 2, 14 lines from the bottom, the sentence should read 'up to that time the naturals were black and the sharps were white'; p. 158, col. 2, line 31 from the bottom, the words '(In the Chancel)' should follow 'Clarion' in the list of Tuba organ stops; p. 162, col. 1, line 11 from the bottom, delete the words after 'conditions' to the end of the paragraph.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' for violin was recently performed by Mr. Arthur Hartmann at the First Congregational Church, Salt Lake City, Utah.

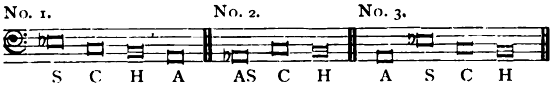
Mr. G. H. Betjemann delivered a lecture on 'Beethoven,' with musical illustrations, in the school-room of Union Chapel, Islington, on March 19.

Answers to Correspondents.

M. S.—The history of Handel's 'Water Music' is told by W. S. Rockstro in his 'Life of Handel.' The composer had exceeded the period of his leave of absence from England, whereby he had incurred the displeasure of King George I. The reconciliation was brought about by the 'Water Music.' To quote from Rockstro: 'On the 22nd of August, 1715, the Royal Family, accompanied by a numerous suite, proceeded by water from Whitehall to Limehouse. When they returned in the evening both sides of the river were illuminated; cannons were fired; and an immense number of boats, filled with well-dressed spectators, followed the procession. While the preparations for this brilliant water-party were in progress, Handel's old and faithful friend, Baron Kielmannsegge, concocted, with the aid of Lord Burlington, an ingenious plan for the purpose of bringing the composer once more into favour. By advice of these two prudent counsellors, Handel wrote a series of Instrumental Movements for two solo violins, flute, piccolo, two hautboys, one bassoon, two horns and two trumpets, supported by the full stringed band; engaged an efficient orchestra for the performance of his music; and caused it to be played under his own direction upon a boat, in which he followed the Royal Barge closely enough to allow his delightful entertainment to be heard distinctly by all on board. King George was an enthusiastic lover of music. The beauty of the performance at once attracted his attention, and, after listening to it with delight, he inquired the name of the composer.' The result was that Handel was restored to Court favour through the medium of the tuneful strains of his 'Water Music.'

Carnaval.—The 'Sphinxes,' or 'Lettres dansantes,' inserted between Nos. 8 and 9 of Schumann's 'Carneval (to adopt the spelling of the original edition), Scènes Mignonnes sur 4 notes,' form the mystical basis of the work:

SPHINXES.



Lettres dansantes.

No. 1 is to be read as S (Es), C, H, A, the musical letters in the composer's name; Nos. 2 and 3, as As, C, H, and A, S, C, H, the letters forming the name of a town in Bohemia, the residence of a Baron von Fricken, to whose daughter Ernestine Schumann was actually engaged at the time of the composition of the work (1834). The 'Sphinxes' were seldom or never played by Madame Schumann.

C. R. H.—(1) The Venerable Archdeacon Charles Burney, who died on New Year's day, was a great-grandson of Dr. Charles Burney, the historian of music. The pedigree is: Dr. Charles Burney (1726-1814); his son Charles Burney, the classical scholar (1757-1817); his son Charles Parr Burney, Archdeacon of Colchester; his son Archdeacon Charles Burney (1815-1907). The deceased clergyman was, as you surmise, a great-nephew of Fanny Burney (Madame D'Arblay). Five members of the Burney family, the historian of music and four of his children, have found a place in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' (2) There seem to be several organs upon which Handel is said to have played. In regard to the organ at Whitchurch, near Edgware, see the article 'Handel Myths,' by Dr. W. H. Cummings, in The Musical Times of January and February, 1885.

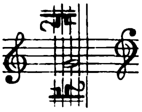
C. W. W.—The Oriana Madrigal Society is a London organization of the kind you name: the honorary secretary is Mr. H. J. L. J. Massé, Leighton House, 2, Holland Park Road, Kensington. There is plenty of good material in London whereby societies like that of Blackpool could be formed. The difficulty is that Londoners have so many interests to absorb their time. It seems impossible to get the members of a balanced choir of, say, seventy voices to attend regularly even one rehearsal a week. But perfection can only be obtained by two or three rehearsals a week, and whole-hearted enthusiasm. Ay, there's the rub!

J. H. E.—The following choral works, suitable for a choir of sixteen to twenty voices, have accompaniments arranged for pianoforte and harmonium: 'May Queen' (Bennett), 'May Day' (Macfarren), 'Crusaders' (Gade), 'Gallia' (Gounod), and 'First Mass' (Mozart). Those with accompaniments for small orchestra are 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar) and 'St. John's Eve' (Cowen). Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' has a pianoforte duet accompaniment.

E. C. D.—Illustrated articles on King's College, Cambridge, and Magdalen College, Oxford, appeared in The Musical Times of April, 1902, and December, 1905, respectively. The following public schools have been similarly treated (in chronological order): Harrow, August, 1901; Winchester, June, 1904; Clifton, April, 1905; Rugby, June, 1905; Christ's Hospital, September, 1905; Uppingham, July, 1906.

Cymru.—It is quite possible that Mr. Franklin Taylor's 'Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte' are just what you want. The collection is published in two forms: (1) Fifty-three books (at 1*s.* each), and (2) 'Selected Pianoforte Studies' in two sets of four books each (price 1*s.* each book). Either of the two sets of the latter covers the ground of pianoforte technique, one of the sets being more difficult than the other.

Solo Boy.—Mr. J. A. Bellamy, of Sidmouth, sends for your edification the following musical monogram of Gade:



J. T. (St. Louis).—Yes, Leschetitzky wrote an earlier opera than 'Die erste Falte,' that entitled 'Die Bruder von San Marco,' but it was never completed.

Deputy Organist.—Is it desirable to get into any groove? Easier to get in than to get out. But in order to obtain work as a non-groove accompanist, we can only suggest that you should make the acquaintance of vocalists who sing at concerts, &c., and thus gain an opening for the exercise of your accompaniment abilities.

P. R.—The opus number of Mendelssohn's Six preludes and fugues for the pianoforte is '35.' Prelude No. 3 of the set should be played staccato throughout, except where otherwise indicated. Mr. Franklin Taylor, in his book 'Technique and expression in pianoforte playing,' has some remarks on the performance of the piece.

Oswald.—Yes, the consecutive fifths are there, but they are doubtless intended by the composer. After all, the music as a whole is the thing. A composition may be pedantically correct, and yet be worthless; not so the part-song to which you refer, even though the fifths be following.

Vi.—We cannot trace the name of the maker of your 'grand concert violin.' As that description appears on the 'ticket' of the instrument, followed by 'Fabricante Saxony Anno,' you should submit the violin to some experts in the trade like Messrs. W. E. Hill & Son, New Bond Street.

G.—We do not know of any work published on the writing of musical libretti. A portly tome could be written on the failures of librettists to produce satisfactory results and the wrecks they have caused to musical works.

E. S. H.—Messrs. W. E. Hill & Son (see answer to 'Vi') will tell you if your 'Strad' is genuine and perhaps give an approximate estimate of its value.

Enquirer.—As before stated in this column, we cannot attempt to differentiate between the certificates granted by the various examining institutions.

G. N.—We can only say that the system is favourably spoken of by those who have tested it.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W., NOT LATER than Monday, April 22.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

WILLEM COENEN.

Price Three Shillings.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. Three numbers are to hand. No. 1, a beautiful Allegretto Pastorale; No. 2, comprising two movements, Communion and Allegretto; and No. 3, comprising six Andante movements, all written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the slow movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches were an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year is obvious.

Book 1.

Advent	O King and Desire of all Nations	Stainer.
Christmas	Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Elvey.
Lent	Lord, for thy tender mercies' sake	Farrant.
,,	Enter not into judgment	Attwood.
,,	O ye that love the Lord	Coleridge-Taylor.
Easter	O give thanks	Goss.
Whitsun	Come, Holy Ghost	Attwood.
Harvest	The Lord is loving unto every man	Garrett.
General	O love the Lord	Sullivan.
,,	The day Thou gavest, Lord	Woodward.

Easter	Christ is risen	Elvey.
Harvest	Great is the Lord	Steane.
General	What are these?	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable	West.
,,	O taste and see	Sullivan.
,,	The Lord is my Shepherd	Macfarren.
,,	God that madest earth and heaven	Fisher.

Book 3.

Advent	Far from their home	Woodward.
Christmas	Four Christmas Carols	Various.
Lent	Turn Thy face from my sins	Sullivan.
,,	O Lord, my God	Wesley.

ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

Verse by JETTY VOGEL

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

(Op. 43.)

THE TONIC SOL-FA FESTIVAL.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

"Mr. Gaul's work is another proof of his practical wisdom as well as of his ability as a composer. Mr. Gaul evidently does not feel disposed, though we think he is well able, to write a magnum opus which may have to wait a generation to be understood; he appeals successfully to the tens of thousands of people who take an interest in sacred stories set to singable music which can be at once appreciated. We do not say that Mr. Gaul's cantatas will not receive the approbation of posterity; we think they will, but it is certain that they do meet with deserved recognition as fast as they appear. We welcome 'Israel in the Wilderness' as one of those works which foster the love and induce the practice of music amongst the people."

MUSICAL NEWS.

"The chief point of interest was the production of Mr. A. R. Gaul's Cantata 'Israel in the Wilderness.' . . . The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra, with Mr. A. J. Eyre as organist. . . . The various solo and choral movements display Mr. Gaul's facility for the composition of genuine, effective music; clear in purpose, melodious, vigorous, and expressive by turns, and constructed by an experienced thinker and worker. Such music will indeed ever be welcome, and Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."

STANDARD.

"The best portion is a number entitled 'The Plagues of Egypt,' written in a sort of free chant form, in which Mr. Gaul has introduced some very clever orchestral effects. The Cantata contains all the elements of popularity, and it was excellently performed under the composer's direction, and very warmly received."

DAILY NEWS.

"Mr. Gaul's music is exactly what is required for large choral gatherings, for it is effective, without presenting any overwhelming difficulties. The part-writing is excellent. . . . Melodious throughout. There is sufficient variety to prevent any feeling of monotony. . . . At its close the composer was heartily cheered."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Without being unduly difficult, it is indisputably effective."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"The afternoon was particularly interesting owing to the first performance of Mr. Alfred R. Gaul's Cantata 'Israel in the Wilderness,' which had been composed expressly for the event. . . . Like the majority of Mr. Gaul's productions it is bright and engaging. . . . The most pleasing of the twenty-three numbers are No. 3, 'So He brought forth His people with joy,' a telling chorus; No. 9, the chorus, 'Declare His honour unto the heathen'; No. 15, the pretty duet between the soprano and tenor voices, 'As the manna falling from the morning skies' (encored on Saturday); and the concluding march, 'Onward moves the guiding pillar,' a chorus full of spirit. Mr. Gaul has in the section devoted to the Plagues contrived to instrumentally illustrate the jumping of the frogs, the buzzing of the flies, the falling hailstones, the fire mingled with the hail, the gusty East wind, and the feeling of darkness. Several of these are clever examples of the imitative in orchestration. At the close of the work, portions of which were loudly applauded, though only the above-mentioned encore was permitted, Mr. Gaul, who conducted, was warmly complimented on a Cantata which is likely to become quite as great a favourite with choral societies as 'The Holy City' and others of his compositions."

THE REFEREE.

"Altogether worthy of the composer of that amazingly popular work, 'The Holy City.' The performance was excellent, and the composer, who conducted, had ample reason to feel satisfied with the reception of his latest effort."

THE ATHENÆUM.

"Characterised by the same refinement as that of Mr. Gaul's extremely successful work 'The Holy City.'"

MUSICAL TIMES.

"We may say at once that the music is characterised by Mr. Gaul's usual felicity of treatment. It is evident that the composer, while earnestly seeking a natural expression, has steadily kept in view the resources of the choral societies on whose behalf the work was written. Most of the music is easy, straightforward, and flowing—picturesque rather than dramatic—and it is all cast in a mould that enables the most ordinary listener to apprehend its form and purpose. In venturing to set a description of the Plagues of Egypt, Mr. Gaul invites dangerous comparisons. He was bound at all hazards to avoid imitation of Handel, and to endeavour to strike out a new path. In our opinion the music to this section is the most original and expressive in the whole Cantata. Mr. Gaul had every reason to be gratified with the performance and reception of his Cantata, and he may expect to hear of many more performances."

MUSICAL OPINION.

"Musicianly and excellent, and not too difficult to imperil its popularity."

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

"One of the most musicianly, melodious, and well-conceived works of its popular composer."

NELSON AND COLNE EXPRESS.

"There is a striking originality in the treatment of the work, and a wealth of ideas is skilfully employed in it."

COLNE AND NELSON TIMES.

"A masterpiece of music."

NELSON CHRONICLE.

"The majestic Cantata is concluded with a stately march which must be heard to be thoroughly understood and adequately appreciated, for in it both band and chorus reach a climax which stamps the work as being one in every sense worthy of the great powers of Mr. Gaul."

MID-SURREY GAZETTE.

"'Israel in the Wilderness' is undoubtedly a composition of the first order, embracing as it does such a large compass, with a great amount of detail and artistic finish."

NEW YORK PRESS.

"Mr. Gaul is a felicitous composer, and the work under consideration is one of his happiest and most scholarly writings. The composition is pleasing and effective, its themes are melodious and developed in a manner to command attention and compel critical approbation. The instrumental portions of the Cantata are among the most effective numbers of the work. These comprise an introduction descriptive of 'Moonlight on the Nile' and an intermezzo entitled 'Daybreak,' which are charming. A further instance of the skill of the composer in descriptive writing is presented in the figured accompaniment to the delightfully melodious chorus, 'Sweet to the thirsty soul The waters cool and clear,' in which the purling and rippling of the stream are realistically portrayed."

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC

EDITED BY W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS ...	ARNE.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY	ENGLISH AIR.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY	JOHN DAVY.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST ...	MENDELSSOHN.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN	ENGLISH AIR.
	AULD LANG SYNE...	SCOTCH AIR.
5.	THE ASH GROVE ...	WELSH AIR.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH	WELSH AIR.
6.	THE ARETHUSA	SHIELD.
	THE MINSTREL BOY	IRISH AIR.
7.	FAIREST ISLE	PURCELL.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha)	HANDEL.
8.	HEART OF OAK	DR. W. BOYCE.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	IRISH AIR.

The above are all very simply arranged by PERCY E. FLETCHER. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemplative than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—compiled with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautiful and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE
CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES
WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS SOLO-BOYS, etc.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

Extract from Introduction.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1a) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2a) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3a) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1b) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2b) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3b) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1a and 1b are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2a and 2b, 3a and 3b, and so on.

1a.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. 0d.	1b.	STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. 0d.
2a.	Ditto (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 0d.	2b.	Ditto (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ...	2s. 6d.

	Books 1a, 2a, 3a, and 4a now ready.			Books 1b, 2b, 3b, and 4b now ready.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

TO MUSIC MASTERS AND TEACHERS OF THE VIOLIN.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

MODERN VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS

suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

Prices from £1 1s. to £5.

MALLINSON SONG RECITALS.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA

THE FIRST RECITAL WILL BE GIVEN BY
MR. AND MRS. ALBERT MALLINSON
ON THURSDAY, MAY 2,
AT 8.30 P.M.

THE MUSICAL TIMES:
"The compositions are real lyrical gems which may be compared in artistic worth and style to the songs of Schubert."

DRESDNER ANZEIGER:
"For the delightful impression which the evening left, thanks are due to both Mr. and Mrs. Mallinson in a like degree. Through the sensitive and supple and highly chaste pianoforte accompaniments of Mr. Mallinson, there was reached an unity in the ensemble that can only be described as a model (vorbildlich)."

THREE RECITALS DEVOTED TO THE SONGS OF ALBERT MALLINSON.

SECOND RECITAL
MONDAY, MAY 6, AT 3 P.M.

THIRD RECITAL

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM
OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

VON BÜLOW says:
"For a pianist, three things are necessary—the first is Technique, the second is Technique, and the third is Technique."

The MACDONALD SMITH System is indispensable for all who wish to attain the highest degree of proficiency in Touch and Technique with a minimum of work.

A pupil (L.R.A.M.) of one of the foremost London pianoforte teachers writes, after taking half the Course of Lessons:—
"April 14, 1907.
"I also played two solos, and was greatly surprised at my success. I never played so well in public before, and I think that the credit must go to you. This in spite of the very little time I have for practising."

(TENOR)

Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.

Of the Trocadero, Paris; Crystal Palace, London; and Principal Provincial Concerts. Up-to-date Press Notices, &c., forwarded on application. Address, Cathedral, Lichfield.

Telegrams, "Fredericks, Lichfield."

East Anglian Daily Times. April 6, 1907.

"Hiawatha," &c.—"The lovely tenor solo, 'Onaway! awake, beloved,' was splendidly interpreted by Mr. C. W. Fredericks, Vicar Choral of Lichfield Cathedral, who proved himself an experienced and able executant. The sentiment of the air was finely expressed, and the top notes towards the end were emitted in ringing fashion. So artistic and striking a version could not fail to create a highly favourable impression, and the soloist was induced by persistent applause to give a repetition. . . . Mr. Fredericks heightened the good impression already created when he gave a magnificent imterpretation of Gounod's 'Lend me your aid' ('La Reine de Saba'). There was imported all the requisite fire and brilliancy, and a further contribution was inevitable. Acceding to the request, he gave 'Tom Bowling' with rare feeling. Towards the end of the evening he submitted Dawson's 'Ever and alway' in equally praiseworthy style."

MR. HERBERT PARKER

(BARITONE).

Leeds Musical Festival, Queen's Hall, Alexandra Palace, and Principal Provincial Concerts, and Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.

ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL CONCERT.

"A London début which should be of great importance was made by Mr. Herbert Parker, a baritone well known in the North (he was the admirable Beckmesser at the Leeds Festival three years ago). His fine voice (reaching up to a brilliant A flat), his excellent style, and, best of all, perhaps, his quite unusual clearness of diction, should serve to establish him speedily as a singer indispensable for London oratorio and concert work."—The Tribune, March 25, 1907.

"EVERYMAN."—ILKLEY VOCAL SOCIETY.

"The solo work of Mr. Herbert Parker, who rendered the music allotted to Everyman, was commendable in the extreme, his powerful voice being capable of every depth of expression imaginable."—Gazette, March 23, 1907.

"JUDAS MACCABÆUS."—ASHBY.

"For the bass solos a safe exponent had been found in Mr. Herbert Parker, who won his way into Ashby hearts by his masterly treatment of the baritone music in 'The Ancient Mariner' at the Choral Society's recent concert. Mr. Parker is the fortunate possessor of a ringing voice of much power and wide compass, and he is moreover imbued with the 'divine spark' to that extent which communicates itself to his hearers and makes them as it were feel with him."—Burton Chronicle, March 14, 1907.

Address, Cherry Orchard, Lichfield.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

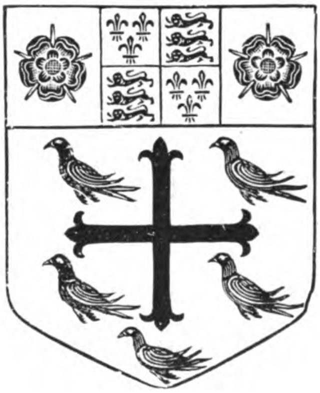
They dreamed not of a perishable home
Who thus could build. Be mine, in hours of fear
Or grovelling thought, to seek a refuge here;
Or through the aisles of Westminster to roam;
Where bubbles burst, and folly's dancing foam
Melts, if it cross the threshold.
WORDSWORTH.

The historical associations of the Abbey are as varied as they are interesting. In these, music has played a prominent part, and for the most part this chit-chat on the stately fane must be restricted to events in which the art has had a rightful place. 'The most part' qualification will permit of references to matters of general interest or as being akin to music. A musical tile (see the illustration on p. 294) in the pavement of the Chapter House induces us to retrace our steps to that beautiful building erected by Henry III. in 1250. No wonder that Matthew Paris, writing in that year, says of Henry III., 'Dominus Rex aedificavit capitulum incomparabile.' This Chapter House was 'the cradle of the present House of Commons,' and, as Mr. Augustus J. C. Hare says, 'this chamber has therefore witnessed the principal acts which have been the foundation of the civil and religious liberties of England.' After the Houses of Lords and Commons were separated in the reign of Edward I., the House of Commons held its sittings here till the year 1547. The placards of the business of the House were affixed to the central shaft of Purbeck marble (see illustration on p. 299), against which many a monk was publicly flogged for his naughtiness. 'On the table in this Chapter House,' says Dean Stanley, 'must have been placed the famous Black Book, which sealed the fate of all the monasteries of England, including the Abbey of Westminster close by, and which struck such a thrill of horror through the House of Commons when they heard its contents.' At the dissolution of the monastery the Chapter House passed to the Crown and is still 'Crown property.' For more than 300 years this fair structure was used as a Record Office, its walls were disfigured, its area blocked up with bookcases and turned into a two-storied building! In 1865, at the instigation of Dean Stanley, the Chapter House was restored by Sir Gilbert Scott almost to its pristine beauty.

The exquisite windows, remarkable for their early introduction of quatrefoils, have been filled with stained glass by Messrs. Clayton & Bell. The figures and subjects were arranged by Dean Stanley; he was the donor of one of the windows, and Queen Victoria of another, the one facing the entrance. The Lowell Memorial Window in the vestibule was erected in 1893 in memory of the distinguished American Minister to this country and author of the 'Biglow Papers'; also of the serious poem 'Sir Launtal,' which furnished the subjects for this interesting window.

Ancient deeds belonging to the History of the Abbey here find a rightful place. In a glass case may be seen a grant of Offa, King of the Mercians, A.D. 785, and of King Edgar, 951-962, also the Charter of Edward the Confessor, dated on the day of Holy Innocents, 1065. Here also are exhibited the Missal of Abbot Litlington with its beautiful 14th century illuminations, and the Liber Regalis, to be referred to later; also two illuminated books containing the indentures between Henry VII. and the Abbeys of Charterhouse and Bermondsey on the foundation of anniversary services for the soul of Elizabeth of York. In another case is the Household Book of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. and of Henry, Lord Stafford, son of the Duke of Buckingham, her second husband, with autograph signatures. No less interesting is the Prior's Rent Book, containing his entries of William Caxton's payments for renting three houses within the Abbey precincts; also a book which records a payment by Wynkyn de Worde, foreman of Caxton's Printing-press, for a house in St. Bride's parish (1507); a lease from the Dean and Chapter of the rectory of St. Bride's, to John Dryden (1682); and a Roll of the Coronation Service of Edward II. (French); in addition to many seals, relics, and pieces of old masonry.

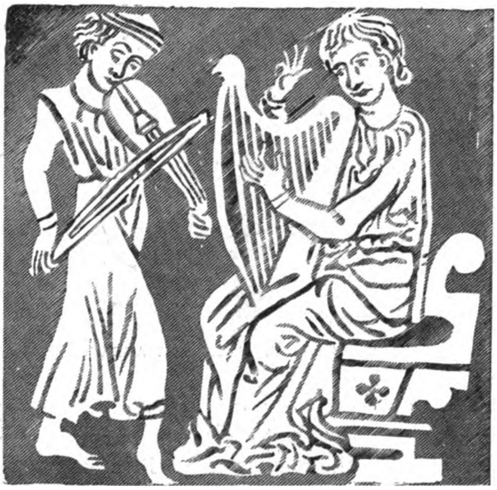


THE ARMS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

Close to the Chapter House is the Chapter Library, formerly part of the old 'Dorter' (dormitory) of the monks, which may have been used as a parlour in the last days of the monastery when the monks were few, hence its traditional name of the 17th century, 'the monks' parlour.' Belonging to this tranquil spot, but now exhibited in the Chapter House, is the Missal of Abbot Litlington (1362). In an inventory of the vestry taken only two years (1388) after Litlington's death, it is described as a 'good and large missal, the gift of the late Abbot Nicholas Lytlington.' The volume is specially interesting, as, following the ordinary course of the Mass, it contains the office for the anointing and crowning of kings and queens of England, with some directions concerning royal funerals. This part of the manuscript was extracted and copied by monkish scribes after Litlington's day, and, under the title Liber Regalis, it exists in three separate volumes, one of which is in the Bodleian Library, Oxford; but the Westminster copy is the most important, as it contains a full-page illumination of the king seated on his throne. Among the printed books is a Sarum Manual of 1555, and four parts of the following publication from the printing press of John Day:

> Mornyng and Euenyng prayer and Communion, set fourthe in foure partes, to be song in churches, both for men and children, wyth dyuers other godly prayers & Anthems, of sundry mens doynges.
> Imprinted at London by John Day, dwelling ouer Aldersgate, beneath St. Martins.
> These bookes are to be sold, at hys shop underneath the gate.
> 1565.
> Cum gratia & priuilego Regiæ Maiestatis.

This book is the earliest printed collection of Services for Morning and Evening Prayer and Communion in the English Church.



A MUSICAL TILE IN THE CHAPTER HOUSE FLOOR.

(From Prof. W. R. Lethaby's 'Westminster Abbey and the King's craftsmen: a study of mediæval building.' By permission of the publishers, Messrs. Duckworth & Co.)

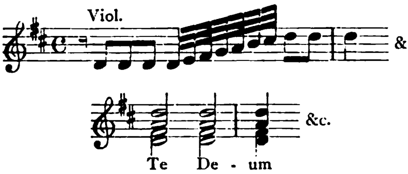
The Chapter Library also contains a collection of music, chiefly in manuscript, by Italian and English composers of the 17th and 18th centuries, and a number of madrigals, both English and Italian, of the late 16th and 17th. The collection, which has been catalogued by Mr. W. Barclay Squire,* includes a manuscript copy of Dr. Blow's remarkable masque 'Venus and Adonis,' his only recorded composition for the stage, which he wrote for the entertainment of King Charles II., and a Te Deum in D by Bononcini, scored for violins and trumpets, beginning in this highly original manner:



Consideration may now be given to the coronations of English kings and queens which have taken place in Westminster Abbey, the former and present buildings, during a period of eight centuries, from the coronation of Harold, in 1066, to that of King Edward VII. in 1902. The earliest detailed account which we have of this imposing ceremony is that of the coronation of Richard I. in 1189, but it is not till the year 1429 that we find a reference to anthems, or 'antemys,' as the chronicler gives it. Henry VI. was only nine years old when, on November 6, 1429, he was crowned in Westminster Abbey, the youngest monarch ever anointed King of England. One William Gregory, subsequently (1451) Mayor of London, has described the event in a document preserved at the British Museum (Egerton MS., 1995, f. 175). He says:

> Thenne the Archebyschoppe of Cantyrbury made a proclamacyon at the iiii quarterys of schaffolde, sayynge in thys wyse: 'Syrs, here comythe Harry, King Harry the V. ys sone, humylyche to God and Hooly Chyrche, askynge the crowne of thy[s] realme by ryght and dyscent of herytage. Yf ye holde you welle plesyd with alle and wylle be plesyd with hym, say you nowe, ye! and holde uppe youre hondys.' And thenne alle the pepylle cryde with oo voyce 'ye! ye!' Thenne the kyng went unto the hyghe auter, and humely layde hym downe prostrate, hys hedde to the auter warde, longe tyme lyyng stylle. Thenne the archebyscoppys and byschoppys stode rounde aboute hym and radde exercysyons ovyr hym, and many antemys i-song by note.

Unfortunately no detailed information is given as to those 'many antemys i-song by note.' But to continue Mr. Gregory's narrative:

> And thenne the archebyschoppes wente to hym and strypte hym owte of hys clothys in to hys schyrte. . . . And thenne the byschoppe of Chester and of Rouchester songe a leteny ovyr hym. And the Archebyschoppe of Cantyrbury radde many colettys ovyr hym. Thenne the archebyschoppes toke hym uppe agayne and unlasyd hym and anoyntyd hym.

And so on, including the saying 'ovyr hym' of 'many hooly colettys.' Mr. Gregory also gives a full description of the coronation banquet, consisting of three courses, the bill of fare including 'a berys hedde, swanne, pygge in doory, cony, pecocke, egretys, larkys, chekynngs,' &c. Would that Mr. Gregory had recorded the music sung at the coronation with as much attention to details as the viands consumed at the banquet received. And what of the boy-king's digestive powers?

shillings 'for composing of many songes against the coronation of Charles I. which took place on Candlemass Day, 1626.' Whether this payment was for sacred or secular coronation music, or both, is unknown; but Tomkins's 'Musica Sacra Deo et Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ' (published in 1686, after his death) contains a setting of 'O Lord, grant the King a long life,' which is indexed as 'the coronation anthem.' Henry Cooke—'Captain Cooke'—is said to have composed all the music for the coronation of Charles II. on April 23, 1661, but Henry Lawes composed a setting of 'Zadok the Priest' for that ceremony, at which the diarists Pepys and Evelyn were both present. Pepys records 'so great a noise that I could make but little of the musique; indeed, it was lost to everybody'; on the other hand Evelyn refers to 'rare music, with lutes, viols, trumpets, organs and voices.'

THE DARK CLOISTER.
(Photograph by Mr. Thomas J. Wright.)

When James II. was crowned—on St. George's Day, 1685, the year in which Bach and Handel were born—the choir included Messrs. Purcell, Blow and Staggins. As basses these worthies joined in singing Blow's anthems 'Behold, O God, our defender' and 'God spake sometimes in visions' and Purcell's anthems 'I was glad' and 'My heart is inditing,' the last-named sung after the crowning of the Queen. For the coronation of William and Mary in 1689, Dr. Blow composed 'The Lord God is a sun and shield,' a full anthem, of which there is a copy in the Royal College of Music Library. We may pass over the crowning of Queen Anne—at which William Turner's 'The queen shall rejoice' and Jeremiah Clarke's 'Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem' are said to have been sung—to the ceremony attending George I., when Croft's setting of 'The Lord is a sun and shield' was sung 'with several sorts of instrumental musick, as a solemn conclusion of the coronation.'

Special interest is attached to the crowning of George II., as for this ceremony Handel composed his quartet of coronation anthems 'Zadok the Priest,' 'Let Thy hand be strengthened,' 'The King shall rejoice,' 'My heart is inditing a good matter.' The newspapers of the day furnish information as to the method of interpreting Handel's anthems. The Weekly Journal, or the British Gazetteer of October 7, 1727, says:

> Yesterday there was a Rehearsal of the Musick that is to be perform'd at their Majesties' Coronation in Westminster Abbey, where was present the greatest Concourse of People that has been known.

and Parker's Penny Post (which mis-spells Handel's name) of October 4, 1727, states:

> Mr. Hendle has compoſed the Muſick for the Abbey at the Coronation, and the Italian Voices, with above a Hundred of the beſt Musicians will perform; and the Whole is allowed by thoſe Judges in Muſick who have already heard it, to exceed any Thing heretofore of the ſame Kind: It will be rehearſed this Week, but the Time will be kept private, leſt the Crowd of People should be an Obſtruction to the Performers.

The autograph scores of Handel's coronation anthems are preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace.* An organ was specially erected for the occasion and placed above the altar, and in the procession to the Abbey were the organ-blower, two sackbut players, and a performer on the double courtall. Dr. Boyce is said to have composed an octet of anthems for the coronation of George III., but he wisely declined to set 'Zadok the Priest,' on the ground that 'it would be presumption in him to attempt it after Mr. Handel.' Messrs. Attwood and Knyvett were the composers at the coronation of George IV. and William IV. To the George IV. ceremony Attwood contributed one of his best compositions, the anthem 'I was glad,' and for that of William IV. he composed 'O Lord, grant the King a long life,' in the opening symphony of which he introduced the tune of 'Rule, Britannia,' as a compliment to the Sailor King. There is no need to recapitulate what was said in The Musical Times of January, 1902, on the music at the coronation of Queen Victoria, and a full and illustrated account of the coronation of King Edward VII. appeared in the issue of September, 1902.

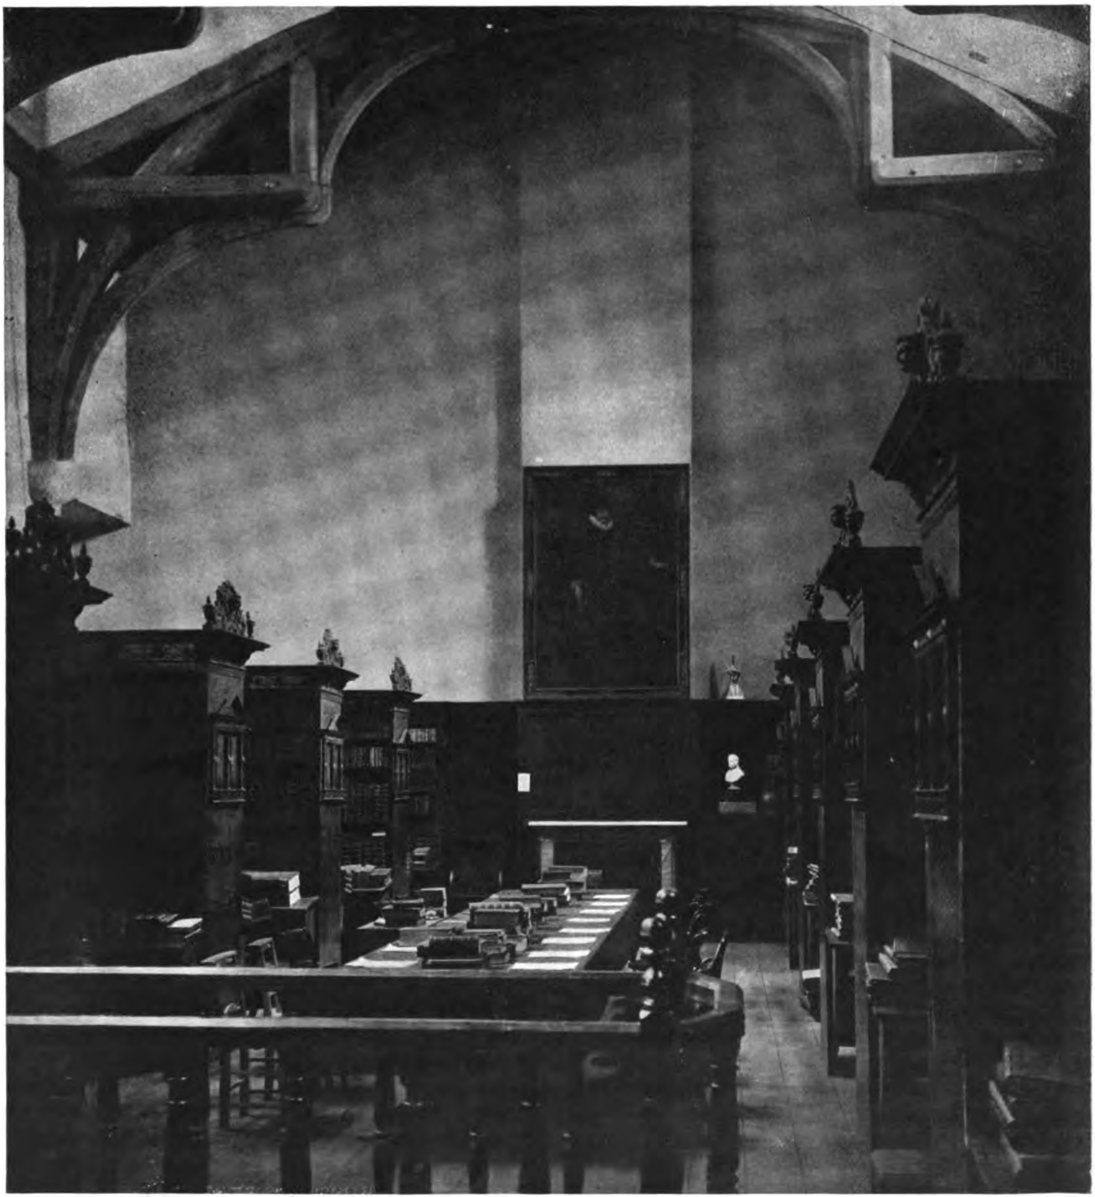
If the funerals of English monarchs interred in the Abbey are of less importance musically than their coronations, there are some interesting things to record. No one who has listened to those sublime strains of Purcell's 'Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts,' but has been touched by their pathetic beauty. This anthem, composed for the obsequies of Queen Mary II., is headed by Tudway:



THE CHAPTER LIBRARY.
(Photograph by Mr. Thomas J. Wright.)

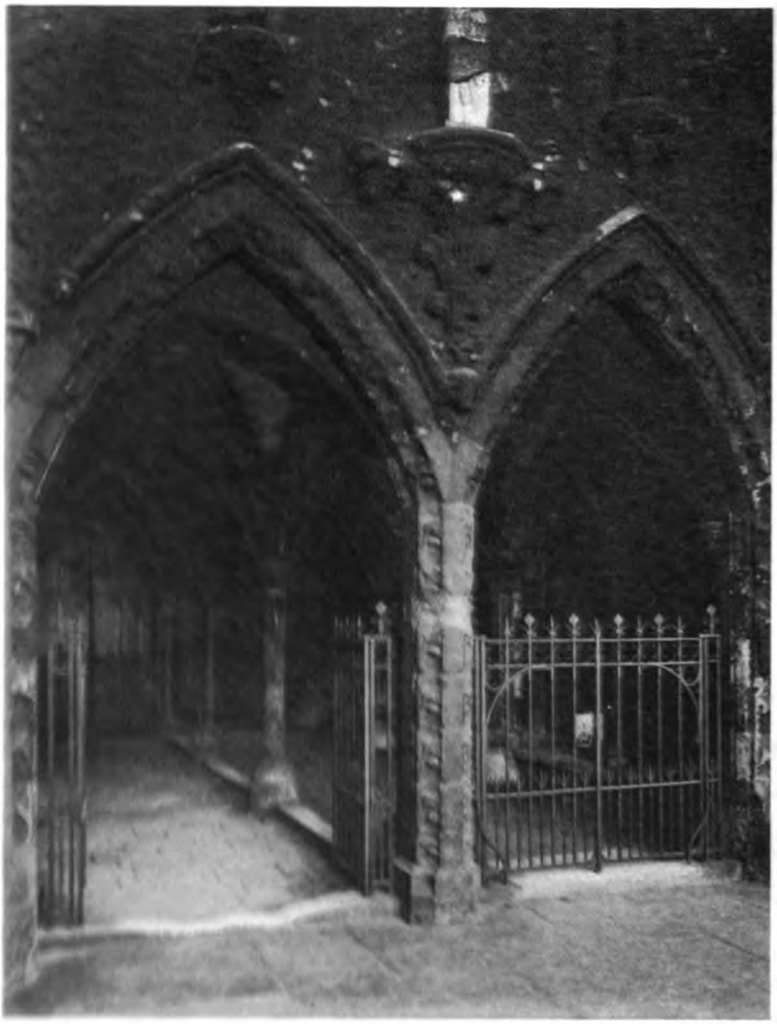
> Thou knowest Lord y^{e} Secrets of our Hearts. A Full Anthem sung at y^{e} funerall Solemnity of Queen Mary 169$\frac{4}{5}$ accompanied wth flatt Mournfull Trumpets. Compos'd by Mr. Henry Purcell; in Hon^{r} to whose Memory the same Composition was perform'd y^{e} year following at his own funerall, in Westminster Abbey.

'Flatt mournfull trumpets' mean trumpets in a minor key. 'This majestic movement,' says Dr. Cummings, 'is a splendid monument to the memory of Purcell': no wonder that it has been sung at every choral funeral at Westminster Abbey since its production. 'A poem, occasioned by the Magnificent Proceeding to the Funeral of Her late Majesty Queen Mary II.,' contains this stanza:

> Take next the humble Off'rings of the Quire,
> Who tho' their Notes are low, their Key no higher,
> Yet with a mournfull Symphony, take pains
> To imitate at least Seraphic Strains.

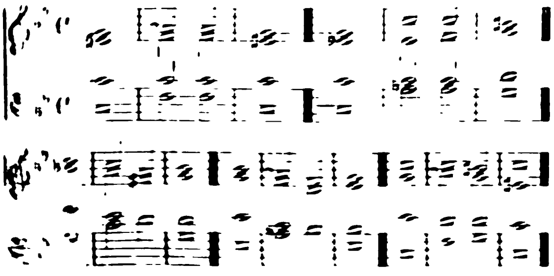
Part of the 'Magnificent Proceeding' consisted of 300 poor women walking 'four and four.'



ENTRANCE TO THE CHAPTER HOUSE FROM THE EAST CLOISTER.
(Photograph taken specially for this article by Mr. Thomas J. Wright.)

A Funeral March composed by Purcell for the same occasion was discovered a few years ago by the late Mr. T. W. Taphouse in the library of Oriel College, Oxford. This simple composition, adapted by Purcell from a passage in his music to Shadwell's 'The Libertine,' was directed to be played upon four trumpets, though it is conjectured that the piece was played upon four trombones. Here it is:

THE QUEENS FUNERALL MARCH
SOUNDED BEFORE HER CHARIOT.
Mr. H. Purcell.



Another trumpet piece composed by Purcell for the same occasion is entitled 'Canzona. As it was sounded in the Abbey after the Anthem.' It is indicated to be played 'Tremulo,' which Mr. Morrow imagines to be a vibrato produced by a movement of the abdominal muscles.* The scene in the Abbey on the occasion of Queen Mary's funeral must have been most impressive. The Lords were robed in scarlet and ermine, and the Commons in long black mantles. Before the corpse were borne the banners of England and France, Scotland and Ireland, while on the gorgeous coffin of purple and gold were laid the crown and sceptre of the realm. The whole of the Abbey—nave, choir, and transepts—was ablaze with innumerable wax-lights; and then a little robin-redbreast, which had found refuge from the snow-storm outside, again and again flew down and perched itself on the hearse, as if he, too, mourned for the Queen who had been so loved, and was now so much lamented. In less than eight months Purcell himself was consigned to his last resting-place in the Abbey of which he was 'chief musician.' The anthems he had composed for the Queen's funeral only a few months before were again sung, so that, as Dr. Cummings says, 'Purcell rehearsed and inaugurated his own dirge.'

---

* For a full account by Mr. W. Barclay Squire of these two funeral pieces by Purcell, with the music of the Canzona, see the Sammelbände der Internationalen Musikgesellschaft, [illegible] p. 225.

The funeral of William III., the husband of Mary II., was semi-private, and no anthem was sung, but Dr. Blow received the sum of 7*s.* 10*d.* for the services he rendered on that mournful occasion. For the interment of Queen Anne Dr. Croft composed his verse anthem 'The souls of the righteous,' which has never been printed. It was for the funeral of Queen Caroline, consort of King George II., that Handel composed his fine anthem 'The ways of Zion do mourn.' Dean Stanley refers to Queen Caroline as 'the most discriminating patroness of learning and philosophy that down to that time had ever graced the throne of England.' Handel was devotedly attached to the Queen. Every note of 'The ways of Zion do mourn' bears witness to the fact, and her death deprived him of one of his best and kindest friends. The autograph score of this sublimely beautiful work, preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace, is headed, in Handel's own writing, 'The Anthem for the Queens Carolines Funeral,' and is inscribed 'S. D. G. G. F. Handel, London, Decembr 12, 1737.' At the funeral, which took place between six and nine o'clock in the evening, 'there was much confusion,' according to the Abbey records, 'the Psalms were not sung, and the Lesson was omitted. The choir attended 'in their proper Habits, with Wax Tapers in their Hands.' The rendering of the music is thus recorded in the newspapers of the day:

> After the Burial Service was over, the fine Anthem, set to Musick by Mr. Handel, was performed by upwards of 140 Hands, from the Choirs of St. James's, Westminster, St. Paul's, and Windsor.—The Daily Gazetteer, December 19, 1737.
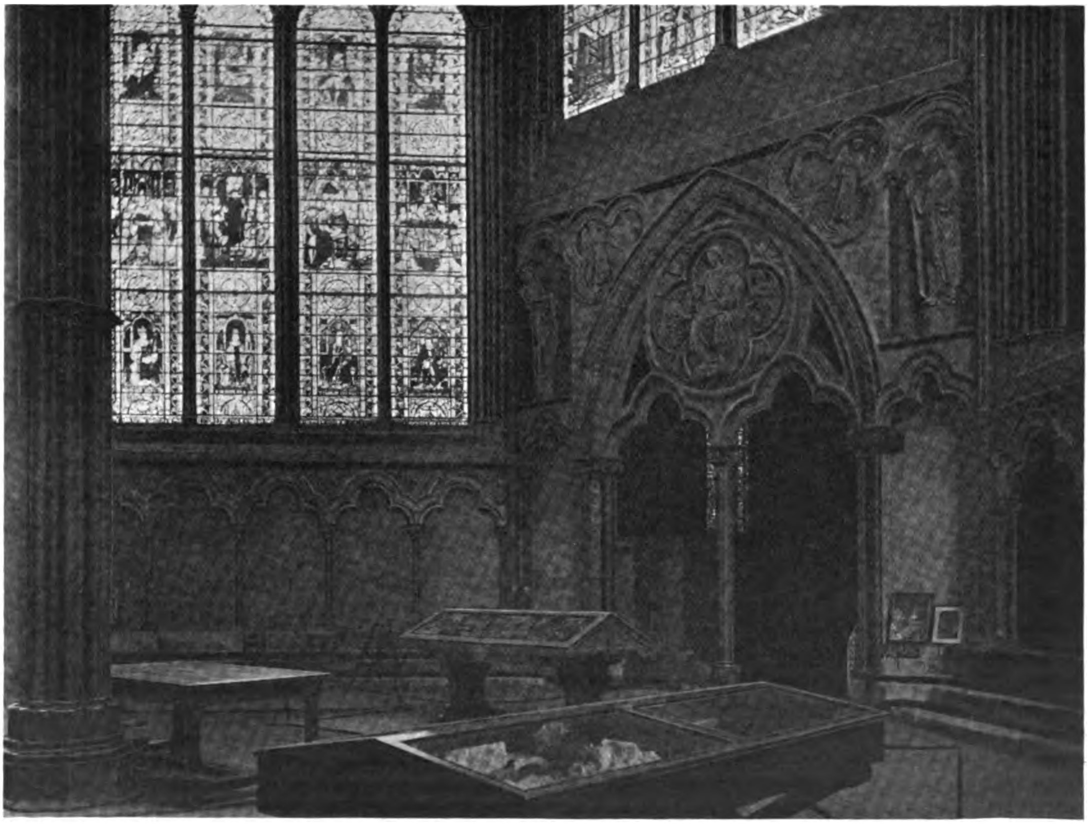
> The fine anthem of Mr. Handel's was perform'd about nine. The vocal parts were perform'd by the several choirs of the Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, and Windsor, and the boys of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey; and several musical gentlemen of distinction attended in surplices, and sung in the burial service. There were near 80 vocal performers, and 100 instrumental from his Majesty's band, and from the Opera, &c.—Grub Street Journal, December 22, 1737.

While in this royalty region it may appropriately be mentioned that one King of England—Edward V., in 1470—was born in the precincts of Westminster; the death of another English monarch, Henry IV., who died in the Jerusalem Chamber in 1413, has already been referred to.



THE CHAPTER HOUSE.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. Thomas J. Wright.)

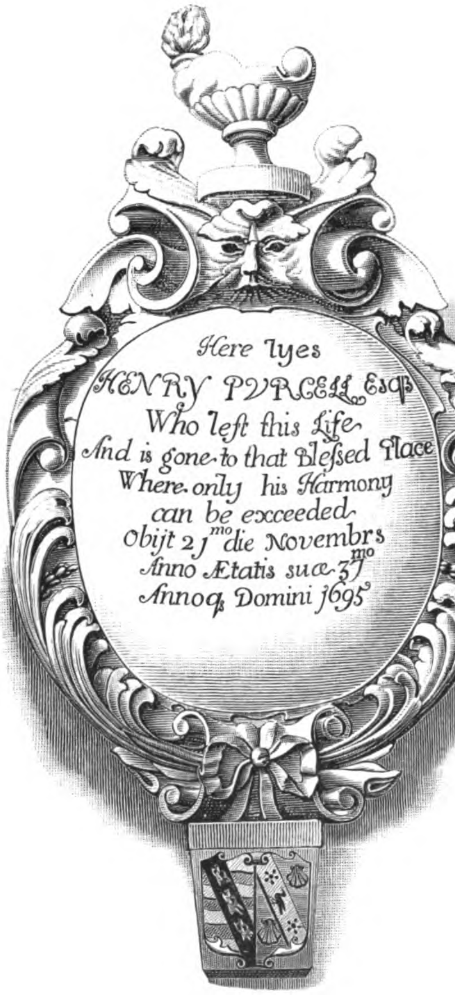
There must not be much more than a mere enumeration of the musicians, and others bearing kinship to the art, who have found their last resting places in Westminster Abbey and within its precincts. One naturally makes a beginning at Poets' Corner, so called because there, in the south transept, are buried Chaucer (died 1400), Ben Jonson (buried standing on his feet), Edmund Spenser, John Dryden, and after them John Gay (of 'Beggars' Opera' fame), Dr. Johnson, David Garrick, Sheridan, Lord Macaulay, Browning and Tennyson. There are two grave stories told concerning 'Rare Ben Jonson,' who died in 1637, the famous and learned friend of Shakespeare and Bacon. It is said that, dying in great poverty, he begged '18 inches of square ground in Westminster Abbey from Charles I.' The other story is that upon being rallied by the Dean of Westminster about being buried in Poets' Corner, the poet replied: 'I am too poor for that, and no one will lay out funeral charges for me. No, sir; 6 feet long by 2 feet wide is too much for me; 2 feet by 2 will do for all I want.' 'You shall have it,' said the Dean, and thus the conversation ended. At the digging of an adjacent grave in 1849, the clerk of the works 'saw the two leg-bones of Ben Jonson fixed bolt upright in the sand,' a proof that he had been buried standing on his feet; 'and the skull came rolling down among the sand in the newly made grave. There was still hair upon it, and of a red colour.'



Not the least worthy occupant of Poets' Corner is George Frederick Handel, for, as Dean Stanley says, 'He who composed the music of the Messiah and Israel in Egypt must have been a poet, no less than a musician, of no ordinary degree. Therefore he was not unfitly buried in Poets' Corner, apart from his tuneful brethren. Not less than three thousand persons of all ranks attended the funeral.' More than a century later, in the year 1870, the mortal remains of Charles Dickens were placed beside those of Handel, and when the grave of the great novelist was being prepared the grave-diggers came upon the red-velvet-covered coffin of the composer of the 'Messiah.' Under Roubiliac's fine statue of Handel is a bust of Jenny Lind, and in the north transept is a memorial window to Vincent Novello.

In the north aisle of the choir are the burial places of five organists of the Abbey—Purcell, Blow, Croft, John Robinson (composer of the well-known double chant) and Samuel Arnold. Sterndale Bennett also rests in this Musicians' Aisle, which contains a tablet to Dr. Charles Burney, buried at Chelsea College, and a medallion of Michael William Balfe, buried at Kensal Green. In the opposite column is the tablet and inscription placed above Purcell's grave.

The cloisters of the Abbey contain the graves of several musicians whose names are as familiar as household words. It may be convenient for reference to set them forth in tabulated form, the date after each name being the year of death.

CLOISTERS.

Henry Lawes. 1662. Milton's 'Tuneful Harry.'

Christopher Gibbons. 1676. Son of Orlando Gibbons, and an organist of the Abbey.

(Both these graves are un-named.)

John Banister. 1679. One of the earliest concert-givers in London.

EAST CLOISTER.

Henry Cooke ('Captain Cooke'). 1672. Captain in the King's army during the Civil War. Gentleman and Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal at the Restoration. Appointed in 1664 'composer of the King's private music for voices' at a salary of £40. Marshal of the Corporation of Musicians in 1670. He composed all the music for the coronation of Charles II., and a processional hymn performed at Windsor at the festival of the Knights of the Garter, April 17, 1661.

Pelham Humfrey. 1674. Composer of the Grand Chant, and, in the opinion of Dr. Boyce, 'the first of our ecclesiastical composers who had the least idea of musical pathos in the expression of words.' Buried near the south-east door of the Abbey.

NORTH CLOISTER.

Sir John Hawkins. 1789. The historian of music. At his own request the gravestone bears only his initials 'J. H.'

Mrs. Cibber. 1766. Sister of Dr. Arne, and Handel's contralto singer, who first sang the contralto solos in the 'Messiah,' and for whom Handel doubtless wrote them. On hearing of her death Garrick exclaimed: 'Cibber dead! then tragedy expires with her.'

Bernard Gates. 1773. 'Tuner of the Regals in the King's household.' A contemporary of Handel, whose oratorio 'Esther' was acted under Gates's care by the Children of the Chapel Royal, Gates being the Master of the Children.

SOUTH CLOISTER.

Rev. Luke Flintoft. 1727. Minor Canon of the Abbey, and the composer (or adapter) of the familiar and beautiful minor double chant associated with his name. (See p. 312 of the present issue for further details concerning him and the chant.)

John Peter Salomon. 1815. Violinist, and the friend of Haydn, for whom he (Haydn) wrote the twelve symphonies known as the 'Salomon set.'

George Ebenezer Williams. 1819. An organist of the Abbey.

William Shield. 1829. Master of the Musick to the King, and composer of many songs—'The Thorn,' 'The Arethusa,' 'The Wolf,' &c.

Muzio Clementi. 1832. 'The father of modern pianoforte playing.'

WEST CLOISTER.

Dr. William Turner. 1740. A lay-vicar of the Abbey. He survived his wife, with whom he had lived for seventy years, four days only, and he bequeathed to each of his five children the sum of one shilling.

Mrs. Ann Robinson. 1741. Daughter of the above William Turner and wife of John Robinson, an organist of the Abbey. As a contralto singer Mrs. Robinson was the original representative of Daniel in Handel's 'Belshazzar'; she also sang in other oratorios composed by Handel.

Dr. Benjamin Cooke. 1793. An organist of the Abbey and composer of many beautiful glees, canons, &c. His monument has a canon, three in one by augmentation, intended by the author to be sung as an appendix to Byrd's 'Non nobis Domine.'

Dr. Thomas Sanders Dupuis. 1796. One of the best organists of his time.

Robert Cooke. 1814. Son of the above, and successor to his father in the organistship of Westminster Abbey.

Thomas Greatorex. 1831. An organist of the Abbey. A friend of the Prince of Wales, who once said to him: 'You, Greatorex, you need not obey the King, because you are a greater rex.'

James Turle. 1882. Organist of the Abbey for fifty years, is commemorated by a tablet erected on the wall of this cloister. Buried at Norwood Cemetery.

LITTLE CLOISTERS.

John Wilson. 1674. Possibly the 'Jack Wilson,' Shakespeare's tenor, and, if so, the first to sing 'Sigh no more, ladies.' The inscription on his tombstone is:

> John Wilson | d in musick here | interred dyed | February y 22 | 1673 | aged 78 years | 10 months and | 17 days.

Consideration of the organs, organists, musical festivals, &c., must be deferred till next month. In the meantime it should not be forgotten that William Caxton, England's first printer, had his printing-press during the last fourteen years of his life (1477 to 1491) under the shadow of Westminster Abbey. His motto, 'Fiat lux,' gave Tennyson the key-note of his epitaph on the great typographist:

Thy prayer was 'Light, more Light, while Time shall last,'
Thou sawest a glory growing on the night,
But not the shadows which that light would cast,
Till shadows vanish in the Light of Light.

A PICTORIAL PUZZLE.

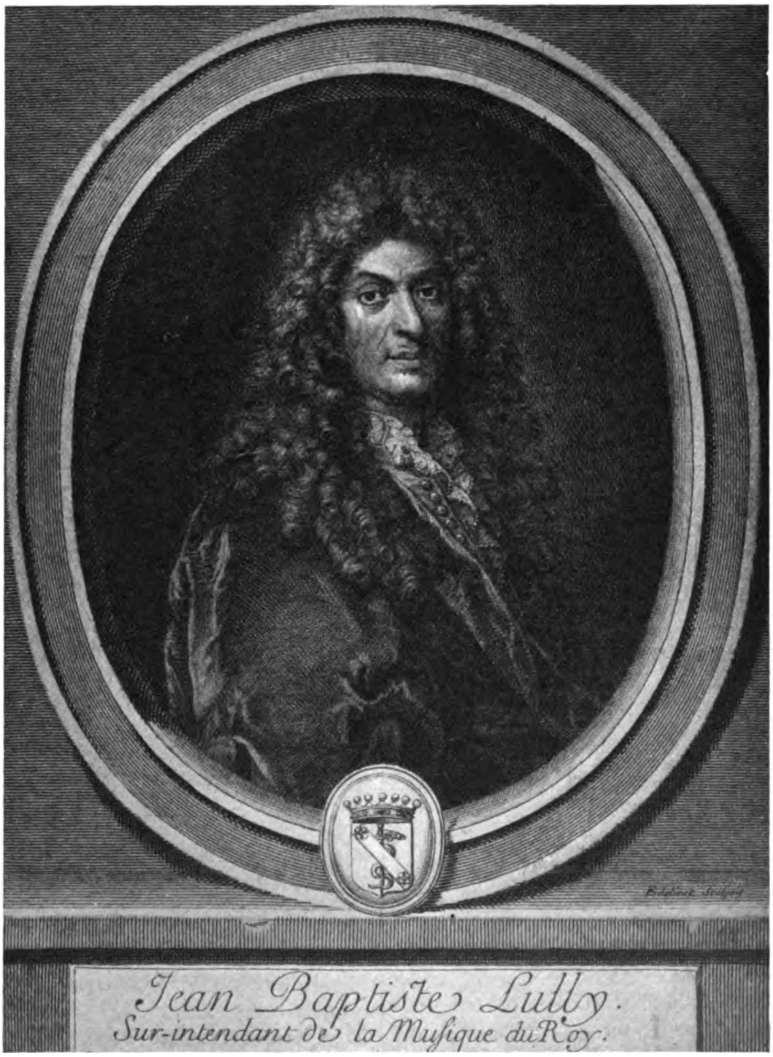
The authorities of the National Gallery have recently acquired and hung in Room XVI. (No. 2081) a picture by the celebrated French portrait painter, Hyacinthe Rigaud. The picture is labelled 'Lulli and his fellow musicians of the French Court.' It is an excellent work of art: all the details are painted with remarkable skill and finish, and there is no reason whatever to doubt that it is painted by the artist to whom it is attributed.

The dates of the birth and death of the painter are given on the frame as 1659-1743; those of Lully are 1633-1687. At the death of Lully, Rigaud had therefore attained his twenty-eighth year, so that chronologically it was perfectly possible for him to have painted the portrait of the musician. From the accounts of his life it appears that Rigaud went to Paris for purposes of study in the year 1681. He did not at once turn his attention to portrait-painting, in which he afterwards rose to such fashionable eminence that he acquired the inappropriate title of the French Vandyck, to whom his style has no resemblance.

The picture—a photograph of which, specially taken for this article, forms one of the Special Supplements to the present issue—consists of a group of five persons, all dressed with some magnificence, and wearing the flowing wigs of the period. All are musicians: three of them are represented holding flutes, while a fourth has a viola da gamba. The fifth occupies a position in the background, so that it is not possible to distinguish whether he has an instrument; he may be the composer of the music with which the table is furnished.

When it is claimed that one of these figures represents Lully, it is of course the eminent composer who is intended. For the general public he is the only Lully; his sons, although also composers, are practically unknown, and indeed to most students of musical history are little more than names. Five figures there are to choose from; we ask which of these the authorities have fixed upon as the representation of J. Baptiste Lully! When a man sits for his portrait the accessories selected are almost invariably those which typify his pursuits. I venture to ask, therefore, is it at all conceivable that Lully would be represented as a player on a flute or the gamba when it is notorious that the violin is the instrument on which his skill as an executive musician depended! But as a matter of fact not one of the five personages represented bears the slightest resemblance to the well-known and very marked and characteristic features of the composer.

Two portraits especially are familiar to all who are interested in the musical history of that period. The first of these is that in an oval, engraved by the famous Edelinck, to which unfortunately no painter's name is attached; the other was painted by Paul Mignard, also in an oval, but on a larger scale, and engraved with almost equal skill by Jean Louis Roullet. This latter work is admirably reproduced in heliogravure, although perhaps a little too black and heavy in the shadows, in Edmond Radet's interesting 'Lully, Homme d'affaires, Propriétaire et Musicien.' Paris, s.a. 4to. This reproduction and a fine copy of Edelinck's engraving are before me, and while they differ essentially in treatment, owing nothing to each other, the identity of the subject is absolute and unmistakable, having no resemblance whatever to either of the five persons depicted in the picture by Rigaud. The question as to the painter of the portrait engraved by Edelinck has been discussed, and it has even been claimed for Rigaud, but it appears that this artist, like our own Sir Joshua Reynolds, kept a very careful record of his sitters, with the price received, and that this list contains no mention of the name of Lully. This absence equally disposes of the possibility that the younger Lullys may be here represented.



Edelinck Sculpsit
Jean Baptiste Lully.
Sur-intendant de la Musique du Roy.

From a portrait engraved by Edelinck.

I have said that the accessories are painted with remarkable skill and detail. An ivory flute in the hand of the figure on the right of the picture is a masterpiece. On one of the books of music on the table one can read 'Trio de M. De Lab . . .' The rest of this line is unfortunately illegible, but the line below is perfectly plain—'Sonates en forme de Trios pour la Flûte traversière. Premier Sonate.' The painting is so careful that the copy could be played from with perfect ease. Although for the flute, it is written in the French fiddle clef, i.e., the G clef on the first line, and this was the practice followed by Lully in his opera scores. The work is in the key of G, the F sharp being repeated in the first space below the staff and on the fourth line. The other part lying open is in the alto clef. Fétis gives the name of Michael de Labarre as a flautist and composer, 1675-1743, and this may very well be the name at the head of the open volume.

It is to be regretted that M. Radet, while referring to the careful record of his sitters which Rigaud preserved, gives us no clue as to where this can be consulted. If only one could look through the list, it would probably be easy to identify the subject of the picture. To make a conjecture is, of course, hazardous, but a family eminent as flute players existed at that period which this picture may possibly represent. One, more distinguished than the rest, is well known to those who have traced the history of the flute. This was Hotteterre le Romain, whose 'Principes de la Flûte traversière' (Paris: Ballard, 1707) was several times reprinted, as well as being pirated by that arch-offender, Roger of Amsterdam. The researches of M. Carlez have proved that other members of the family occupied prominent positions as players on wood-wind instruments, no less than four of the name appearing in an official list, published in 1699, of the 'Douze grands hautbois et violons de la Grande Écurie.' The earliest known member of the family was Henri Hotteterre, born about 1610, who in 1650 was established in Paris as the principal maker of wood-wind instruments. This excellent workman had certainly three sons, Louis, known as le Romain, of whom I have already spoken, Nicolas and Jean, but in addition there were two other Hotteterres, Jacques Jean and Martin; whether these were sons or grandsons of Henri is uncertain, but there were certainly five members of the family practising their art at the same time, and I venture to offer the suggestion, though with diffidence, that these are the musicians of the French Court which this picture represents, but one may assert with perfect confidence that neither of the five persons depicted can by any possibility be intended for Lully.

OLD-TIME MUSIC PUBLISHING.

Every subject has its antiquities, and music publishing is no exception to the general rule. The older musicians had not the facilities of the present generation for the issue of their compositions. Those who had made a name had not merely to hint to an eager publisher that they had such and such a work completed to ensure immediate publication and payment. Not even Mr. Handel himself could altogether escape from a subscription list, though he fared better than most of his contemporaries. Eighteenth-century title-pages and lists of subscribers reveal the wearisome time a composer must have had in pestering all and sundry to purchase copies. What would any of our noted musicians say to a personal application to buy a copy of one of their works? Yet Arne's 'Comus' was 'sold by the author at his house, 17, Craven Buildings, Drury Lane,' and Dr. Haydn's Six canzonettas was 'printed for the author and sold by him at 1, Bury Street, St. James.'

Before the dawn of the 18th century it seemed impossible to purchase a single song. It was necessary to buy a whole collection to obtain the one required. The ready wit of Thomas Cross first saw this fault, and doubtless saw also that a great trade was capable of being opened up by the simple matter of supplying people at a cheap rate with exactly what they wanted.

Tom Cross, besides a ready wit, had a ready graver, and to him we certainly are indebted for the introduction of the sheet song; this was at the end of the 17th century. It was Cross who revived the almost obsolete art of engraving music, which up to his time had been mainly, save for a little harpsichord music, printed from movable type. His early work is delicately cut on copper, but the demand for 'single songs' was so great that he must soon have tried a cheaper and softer metal—most likely pewter. It is not necessary to repeat Dr. Blow's tirade against the single song with its 'False concords by Tom Cross engraven true.' The single song for the first time in musical history gave the purchaser the chance of buying for a few pence popular lyrics from the latest opera or play, with its music and accompaniment, without being forced to purchase an entire collection.

The first edition of Grove's 'Dictionary' makes Cross two people, senior and junior; but it was the junior Cross who made such a mark in music engraving. Cross senior was in all probability a portrait engraver, 1646-1684 (see Walpole). The junior Cross engraved for musicians who published their own compositions—Purcell, Carey, &c.—and for the smaller publishers, such as Wright. He kept a shop for the sale of his single songs and other musical wares in Katherine Wheel Court, off Holborn, and subsequently near the Pound, Clerkenwell. But great as Cross was, and ready as he could be with his graving tool, he had not everything his own way. There had arisen John Walsh, a master mind in music publishing who would brook no rival. Henry Playford, a much more feeble man than his father, soon gave in to him and began to dabble in prints and pictures instead of working up the business his father had left to him. Walsh and his friend John Hare found (or got the idea from somebody) that steel punches used on the pewter upon which Cross was engraving gave a readier process of production. So they began to rival Cross's issue of sheet songs by this method, and Cross was constrained in a moment of anger to engrave at the foot of one of his sheets (in the writer's possession) 'Beware of ye nonsensical puncht ones; Cross, Sculp.' However, the 'nonsensical puncht' process became the most popular for music-printing, and to-day, simplified in printing by lithography, it remains as commonly used as ever.

The story of John Walsh (died 1736) and his son, also named John (died 1766), is too great a theme for me to enter upon here. The squabbles with Handel, the offer of twenty guineas for the copyright of the 'Messiah' indignantly refused, the parsimony of the elder Walsh, the fortunes they both acquired, are all on record. The elder Walsh had no scruples about boldly taking continental publications and reprinting them, but it is interesting to note that the robber was equally robbed. One Daniel Wright, of whom the hard words have been written that he 'never published anything that he did not steal,' acted the part of a music pirate. D. Wright, senior (there was also a junior robber), who 'kept shop next the Sun Tavern at the corner of Brook Street, Holborn,' circa 1720-30, made direct copies of many of the Walsh publications. He copied Walsh's pictorial title-pages and the titles themselves, and in fact made the same piracies on Walsh that Walsh had made on Henry Playford's 'Dancing Master.' Wright's delightfully curious and rare publications are now a joy to the collector.

And so things musical jogged on in the 18th century much the same as they do to-day, only on a lesser scale and in a more personal manner. The publisher frequently engraved the plates and helped in the 'pulling' of impressions. He sold the publication over the counter, and in the evening probably played an instrument at some place of entertainment. William Napier, a prominent publisher, for instance, played on the violin in George the Third's private band, and no doubt was courtly enough to be enchanted with the royal sawing on the violoncello. Many of the publishers were organists at the old City churches, and many also, like Clementi, Dussek, Corri, &c., were musicians of reputation. Others of less merit, however, filled up their leisure, like Joseph Dale, in the composition of harpsichord pieces and variations on popular airs. They always found ready publishers in themselves.

With all the trouble of printing music sheets, it is an extraordinary fact that music was cheap. The later editions of the 'Dancing Master,' set up from type, 358 pages, were sold at 3*s.* 6*d.*, bound—a price which ever afterwards ruled for the thick collections of engraved country dances. The yearly dance books of twelve pages engraved were but sixpence. George Bickham published his engraved folio 'The Musical Entertainer,' 1737-38, at the rate of sixpence for four finely-engraved plates issued once a fortnight, and, cheap even as this was, he had to protest against 'another of this kind and upon the same principle which is published with large puffs and encomiums and not without scandalous reflections and disparagements of this.' 'Calliope,' another of the pictorial music books of the 18th century, but in octavo, was issued at 10*s.* 6*d.* per volume of 200 songs. The ordinary copyright sheet song of two or perhaps three pages was sold toward the end of the century, and also much later, for one shilling, and sometimes for sixpence. The paper was good and strong—hand-made, of course—and the three plates had each to be heated over a stove, the ink rubbed over the whole surface, wiped clean (save in the hollows of the engraving), placed on the press and the impression 'pulled' on the paper. This for each copy of the music, and do it as quickly as they could, the process had to be gone over again for each impression. Of course in this connection we have to realize that the purchasing power of the shilling was considerably greater then than it is now. The precise change in value is however a difficult matter to estimate.

Many attempts had been made to get over the tiresome method of printing from an engraved plate. Heptinstall in 1690 had either invented or introduced the 'new tied note,' in which for the first time in musical typography the tails of the quavers were joined. William Pearson a few years later also made improvements. Cutting the whole in wood had been tried but with indifferent success. When Henry Fougt, said to be a Laplander, came to England about 1767, he set up a workshop in St. Martin's Lane, and attempted to show the English the road that they had been feeling for for so many years. His improvements in music typography were great, and as the surface printing from type is done so much more readily than from an engraved plate, he was enabled to offer his folio songs at one penny per page. But the English printers and engravers would have none of Fougt, and he soon left our inhospitable shores, turning over his plant to R. Falkener, who for a year or two attempted to stem the tide with the same penny-a-page price. Who was that daring individual who first marked the music-sheet at 4*s.*, when he was prepared to ask no more than 2*s.*, and to take even 1*s.* 3*d.*? I think he must have had some cheap-jack ancestry. The plan was quite worthy of Dr. Marigold. In the early years of the 19th century George Walker proclaimed, even in the pages of the London Directory, that he was 'publisher of music at half-price.' One wonders whether he had doubled the price before he had halved it!

A very distinguishing mark of 17th and 18th century music was the elaborate pictorial designs on the title-pages. The frontispieces by Gaywood and Hollar to some of the Playford publications are delightful. The elder Walsh, mean as he is said to have been, in his early time did not spare the engraver's art. There are some fine artistic frontispieces and title-pages to be found among his issues. Some of these title-pages were used for later publications: the original title was cut out of the centre of the ornamentation and a fresh one engraved to be printed in the blank space. Thus the ornament did for many books. In those days the public was accustomed to look for well-engraved ornament on its music. Engravers such as Bartolozzi were employed, and James Gillray first commenced his work with the graver in music titles. The specimen signed by Gillray which the writer possesses is a restrained piece of ornamental work, and does not promise the daring things in caricature which rendered Gillray so famous in his own particular line.

The foundation-stone of the new St. James's Hall was laid on April 20 by the Lord Mayor (Sir William P. Treloar), Dr. W. H. Cummings and Sir Thomas Brooke-Hitching (Mayor of Marylebone) taking part in the ceremony. The building, which is announced to be opened in October next, will occupy the site where St. Paul's Church, on the west side of Great Portland Street, formerly stood; thus it will be but a few yards from the house, in the same street (now No. 103), in which Weber died in 1826, and near the site of the house (now 79 and rebuilt) where Mendelssohn lodged during his visits to London in 1829, 1832, and 1833.

Occasional Notes.

Such was old Orpheus cunning
That sencelesse things drew neere him,
And heards of beastes to heare him,
The stock, the stone, the oxe, the asse, came running.
MORLEY! but this enchaunting
To thee, to be the Music-God, is wanting,
And yet thou needst not feare him;
Draw thou the shepherds still and bonny-lasses,
And enuie him not stocks, stones, oxen, and asses.

From Thomas Morley's 'First booke of Balletts to five voyces' (1595). The lines are probably by Michael Drayton.

Purcell and Hertfordshire. Can any connection be traced between the great composer and the little home county? Let us suggest a possible link, even though it be a slender one. On the Great North Road, between Potters Bar and Hatfield, is the tiny hamlet of Bell Bar. 'A choice Collection of Lessons for the Harpsichord or Spinnet, composed by the late Mr. Henry Purcell, organist of his Majesties Chappel Royal, and of St. Peter's, Westminster'—issued in 1696 by Mrs. Purcell after her husband's death—contains a piece, the first of Suite VII., headed Almand. Very slow. Bell-barr.

No other piece in the collection is named after a place, therefore this particular Almand is specially favoured. Upon referring to a contemporary map of Hertfordshire, dated 1676, we find the place not only marked, but in the same form of spelling as that adopted by Purcell, 'Bell-barr.' May not Purcell have stayed in this pleasant district? or may he not have visited my Lord of Salisbury at Hatfield, and thus become acquainted with Bell Bar? It would be quite easy to suggest a pretty story. Purcell travelling along the Great North Road: coach breaking down at Bell-barr: forced rest at the village inn—now the White Swan—sketch of Almand, after the manner of Schubert: finished on return home: piece named Bell-barr, the scene of its composition. Anyhow, the suggestion is made with all due deference by one who knows well the spot and the surrounding beautiful country.

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of sixty years ago—May, 1847.

THE 'ELIJAH' OF MENDELSSOHN.—This great work has been produced in London under the direction of its Author, and has created an excitement which is highly creditable to the musical feeling in London. We are indebted to the Sacred Harmonic Society, at whose invitation Mendelssohn visited London.—He has been a member of their Society since the time of their first performance of his St. Paul, in 1837, on which occasion the Society used the large room, instead of the small one, an important step in the history of their gradual rise and success. From this time may be dated the firmer hold which the Society has held on public favor, and it was on a repetition of St. Paul in 1844, when conducted by the Author, that HER MAJESTY first honored the Society by her presence. This honor was graciously repeated at the performance of Elijah on the 23rd. It would be impossible in our confined space to give even a short analysis of a work which is replete with the highest resources of the musical art. The work will, we hope, be shortly published, although no time is yet announced. The Elijah has been given by the Manchester Hargreave's Society; it is to be done in Birmingham; and is announced for the 28th and 30th of April, in London.

In these days of luxurious railway travelling, when speed goes hand in hand with comfort, it is difficult to realize the conditions of transit sixty or seventy years ago. The Musical World of October 7, 1841, contains some information on this point:

> PRESTO MOVEMENT.—Signor F. Lablache sung at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on Monday evening, the 20th ult., and on Wednesday morning, the 22nd, he was chanting at a concert at Tunbridge Wells (having rested one night in London), a distance exceeding three hundred miles.

To-day, or rather to-night, a vocalist could sing at a Newcastle evening concert, leave the city at 11.20 p.m., sleep in the train, arrive at King's Cross the next morning at 5.50, partake of breakfast, and reach Tunbridge Wells at the hour of 8.50 a.m. Even allowing for the largo going trains on the Southern lines—thirty-four miles in two hours!—the 'Presto movement' of Lablache's day becomes a veritable molto adagio compared with the delightful travelling, night or day, by the splendid train service on the East Coast Route.

Easter Vestry Meetings have recently been held in various parts of the country, when matters concerning the ecclesiastical interests of the parish have been discussed and settled. At some of these annual gatherings church organists are appointed or re-appointed, as, for instance at Rye exactly half a century ago. The Musical Remembrancer for June, 1857, records the proceedings in these inn-teresting words:

> Rye. Easter Meeting. The annual vestry was held on Tuesday, the 14th inst., in the vestry room; the Rev. H. Cooper (vicar) in the chair, Mr. G. S. Butler and Mr. W. H. Chatterton were re-appointed churchwardens, and the meeting then adjourned to the Red Lion Inn, when, having re-assembled, Mr. Butler proposed the re-appointment of Mr. Charles Thomas as organist of the church and superintendent of the fire-engine at a salary of £25. Carried unanimously, and Mr. Thomas thanked the meeting for its support.

The reason why the offices of church organist and fire-engine man should be held by the same person is not at first sight obvious, but a moment's reflection will show the advantage of such an arrangement, for whenever Mr. Thomas wanted to be absent, he could easily arrange for the fire-engine to play upon the organ.

The writer of the article 'Oratorio (modern)' in vol. iii. of the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians' says (p. 487) that the recitative 'Deeper, and deeper still' ('Jephtha') 'has no sort of connection with "Waft her, angels," which is now usually quite illegitimately tacked on to it.' While the first part of the sentence is perfectly true, the use of the word 'now' seems to imply that the coupling of the above recitative and air is a modern practice. As a matter of fact the custom can be traced back to, at least, the year 1782, when at the Concert of Antient Music on March 11, Thomas Norris sang 'Deeper, and deeper still' and 'Waft her, angels' in succession. Therefore it is quite possible that Handel himself may have authorized the coupling which, with other oratorio matters in England, seems to have incurred the displeasure of the Oxford contributor to the new 'Grove.' It may be of interest to mention that, at the Antient Concert of March 16, 1791, Michael Kelly sang 'Deeper, and deeper still' and, immediately following, the air 'Open thy marble jaws, O tomb'!

Sheffield has certainly taken time by the forelock in the publication of the outline programme of its 1908—not 1908th—musical festival. This document, issued as early as eighteen months before the great event, contains two features of unusualness: (1) The rehearsal days are to be intermingled with the morning and evening concerts; and (2) the absence of works specially composed for the occasion. The choral works—in the interpretation of which Sheffielders so greatly excel—include, in the order of performance, Elijah (Mendelssohn); The Beatitudes (Franck); Te Deum (Berlioz); The Kingdom (Elgar); Sea-Drift, for solo baritone, chorus and orchestra (Delius), its first performance in England; Manzoni Requiem (Verdi); New Suite from the opera La Nuit de Noël (Rimsky-Korsakoff); Selection from Act 3 of Die Meistersinger (Wagner); St. Matthew Passion (Bach); and Choral Symphony (Beethoven); in addition, a group of choral works which embrace compositions by Palestrina, Cornelius, Strauss, Brahms, and the magnificent motet, Praise ye the Lord, by J. S. Bach. Although the instrumental selection has not yet been completed, the following compositions have already been chosen: Till Eulenspiegel's merry pranks (Strauss); Symphony in D, Haffner (Mozart); Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor (Tchaikovsky); and Concerto in E for solo violin, strings, and organ (Bach). Mr. Henry J. Wood, as in 1902, is the conductor of the Festival, and Dr. Henry Coward retains his honoured place of chorus-master, a position he has so worthily held from the very beginning of this important music-making.

Cassell's Magazine for April contains an interesting article by Mr. Ben Hayes entitled 'Professor Sevcik's life story.' As the teacher of Miss Marie Hall, Jan Kubelik, Kocian, and other violinists more or less famous, Prof. Sevcik has made a great reputation. That he is not tied to his fiddle-strings, so to speak, and values the healthful pastime of a long walk with its invigorating accompaniment of fresh air, is recorded under the heading 'Labour and recreation.' To quote from the article:

> 'I always take a holiday on Thursday and Sunday. On other days I work from early morning—sometimes from eight o'clock—until noon, and again from six till nine in the evening.
> 'You keep a good part of the day to yourself! No doubt you need a long rest after the morning's fatigue.'
>
> 'I never rest. I take long, solitary country walks every afternoon.'
>
> 'In such weather as we have had lately?'
> 'In all weathers,' answered the Professor. 'Snow, frost, fog, and rain do not exist for me. I despise and ignore them. I start out determined to go over a certain amount of ground, giving myself some point, which I must reach, and never give up until I have arrived at it. Then I turn back and walk contentedly homewards. I am out generally three or four hours. It is always well to have an object in view. If one does not really exist, we must invent one, and work towards it. Life without an object—real or imaginary—is stagnation, a living death. It is necessary sometimes to cheat oneself—although it is not advisable to extend this practice to the cheating of others.'

Pedestrian exercise is not only beneficial to health, but he who walks may think; and as he breathes the fresh air of heaven his mind becomes enriched and his physical vigour stimulated for future effort.

One of the London newspapers, in recording the proceedings of laying the foundation-stone of the new t. James's Hall, caused Dr. Cummings to say that company 'were standing within a few yards of the ce where Faber composed Oberon.' 'Faber' is vd !

The Jubilee of the first children's concert given at the Crystal Palace under the auspices of the Tonic Sol-fa Association is to be celebrated at Sydenham on June 29. The arrangements will include a great concert on the Handel orchestra of 5,000 juvenile certificated singers, a great concert of adult singers with full orchestral accompaniment, and a choral and sight-singing competition. A medal will be struck to commemorate the Jubilee, and a special feature of the celebration will be the honouring of Tonic Sol-fa veterans and pioneers, and the recognition of their past and present work in the cause. Mr. T. H. Warner, 30, Gunton Road, Upper Clapton, is the secretary of this Jubilee festival.

Mr. Watkin Mills has been singing with his usual success in a performance of Handel's 'Belshazzar' given by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, Mass. The Boston Herald gave a long and amusing account of the 'rendition'—to use the word in vogue 'on the other side'—of the oratorio, one of its most entertaining features being the headlines:

> SING "BELSHAZZAR"
> FIRST TIME IN HUB.
> Handel and Haydn Society of > Boston Give Handel's Ora> torio in Symphony Hall.
>
> POWERFUL TEMPERANCE > LECTURE SET TO MUSIC
> Neither the Pomp nor Fervor > of the Biblical Occasion > in Composer's Work.

Here is a specimen of Transatlantic criticism:

> The one air that really interested the audience last night, the one air that had melodic and dramatic significance, was that in which Gobrias moralizes over the 'drunken revels' and 'loose disorder' of the Babylonians. The text is worth quoting:
>
> 'Behold the monstrous human beast
> Wallowing in excessive feast!
> No more his maker's image found,
> But self-degraded to a swine,
> He fixes grov'lling on the ground
> His portion of the breath Divine.'
> This air was sung by Mr. Mills with the fervor of a prohibition tract. Never was there a more appalling disclosure of the deeds of the Demon Rum. Yet the audience smiled and was not shocked. On the other hand, its thirst was not quickened by Belshazzar's songs in praise of wine and his cries for still another bowl.

As regards the choral portions of the oratorio and the 'temperance address' we are told that:

> The choruses were sung effectively, but there were too few of them. Possibly 'By Slow Degrees' would have been still more effective if the figure beginning 'And every step he takes' had been sung at a little faster pace. But the singing of the chorus and Mr. Mills' temperance address were the conspicuous features of the performance.

The City Press of April 13 contains the following interesting information: 'On their retirement from the City Police on pension, Sergeants Stainer and Goss have been presented by their colleagues with gold watches.' The conjunction of these names is something more than a coincidence, for Organists Stainer and Goss both retired from their conducting duties within St. Paul's Cathedral, as Sergeants Stainer and Goss have done from their beats outside the sacred edifice.

'The Jew in Music' is discoursed upon by Miss A. E. Keeton in the April issue of the Contemporary Review. Not the least interesting portion of the article is contained in the following extract:

> The more enlightened and cultured Jew has invariably striven to nationalise himself, and at each stage in his advancement he has endeavoured to eradicate all that could stamp him as the son of a separate people. He can equally well, and with astonishing facility, become French, German, English, Russian, and in the same manner Jewish musicians will be found to belong closely to the country in which they were born, or have happened to live longest. Meyerbeer established French grand opera upon the lines which it still follows. Offenbach bequeathed to the Parisians an essentially French basis of operetta. No cultivated listener would ever mistake the music of Saint-Saëns for any other than French nationality. Mendelssohn wrote oratorios most closely in sympathy with the ultra-Protestant phases of the Christian Church. . . . Rubinstein, although in theory he constantly inveighed against any barrier of nationality in art, nevertheless produced much music far more easily appreciated by Russian than by foreign audiences. It was also thanks to his untiring sense of patriotism that the musical stature of Russia rapidly grew to, and has in some respects out-distanced, the art standards of Germany.

Miss Keeton goes on to say that 'If a suggested suspicion of the Jew floating round so many of the greatest composers be open to discussion and argument, no such doubt exists in connection with the interpreters, the re-creators of music. A study of the antecedents of the most prominent pianists, violinists, vocalists, or conductors, past and present, will show that we may easily accept an average of eight out of every twelve as of Jewish blood. In this connection the Jew's peculiar suppleness, both emotional and intellectual, has stood him in good stead.'

A trio of great classical masters, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, have figured upon the stage. 'La jeunesse d'Haydn' is the title of an opera by Hetzel, performed at Paris in 1846, and 'A scene from Mozart's life' is the title of an operetta by G. A. Lortzing, which, produced about 1830, has frequently been given in Germany. Beethoven, however, has been the hero of several stage works; and this, considering the various romantic episodes in his life, is not surprising. Herman Schmid's 'Beethoven, a picture drawn from life, with music, singing and dance,' of 1873, does not appear to have been produced; but one by Henri Heinemann, entitled 'Beethoven and his nephew,' came out at Brunswick in 1903. Le Ménestrel recently mentioned a drama 'Beethoven,' by Walter Schinz, written in French verse, in five acts, respectively entitled Giuletta, Thérèse, La Solitude, Frère Jean and La Fin. From the few details given there seems to be much maudlin sentimentality in it.

Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' was performed by the New York Oratorio Society, supported by the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the composer's direction, on March 19. The Brooklyn Eagle says:

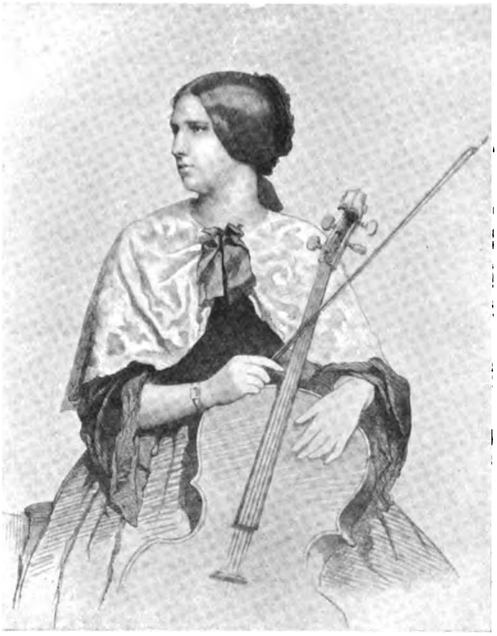
> Elgar's oratorio is great music. It impressed the big audience that heard it in Carnegie Hall last night. If applause was not clamorous it was because of this very fact of impressiveness. . . . There is a reverence, a tenderness and a gentleness that are restorative of the holiest traditions of art. . . . The choruses are sweeping, and toward the last are wrought into climaxes, superb in their art, solemnly splendid in their meaning. . . . Elgar's oratorio, sung both with animation and reverence, betokens that the divine fire still burns on our altars; and there are altars.

Sir Edward Elgar has had conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music by the Western University of Pennsylvania: the ceremony took place at Pittsburg, on April 13.

LADY VIOLONCELLISTS AND ONE IN PARTICULAR.

The lady violoncellist of to-day has her prototype in the fair performer on the viola-da-gamba of olden times. In this connection Leonora Baroni (born about 1610), Dorothea v. Ried, in the first half of the 18th century, and our countrywoman, Ann Ford, afterwards Mrs. Thicknesse, who died in 1824, are names of those who excelled as players upon the beautiful old-world instrument. But in looking for one of the earliest lady violoncello players we must avoid the far distant past and seek her in the time within living memory.

On Christmas Eve, 1827, there was born at Paris a violoncellist virtuosa named Elise (Lisa) Cristiani, or Christiani. She became a pupil of Benazet, and made a great sensation on her first appearance in public at a concert given at the Salle de Herz on February 14, 1845, when she was seventeen years old.



MISS LISA CRISTIANI.
(From an engraving in the possession of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons.)

So great was her success at this and other concerts that her parents wished her to undertake an extensive concert tour. Accordingly she visited Vienna, Linz, Ratisbon, Baden-Baden, Hamburg, and Leipzig. At Hamburg she created so much enthusiasm that her portrait was eagerly sought after, doubtless that which is reproduced above.

Miss Cristiani appeared at the Gewandhaus Concert, Leipzig, conducted by Niels W. Gade, on October 12, 1845, when she played an Adagio and Bolero by Offenbach, a Romance by Donizetti, and an arrangement of Schubert's 'Ave Maria.' The Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung, in a highly favourable notice of the young lady's performances, referred to the novelty of a lady violoncellist, which had an interest beyond mere novelty, and that 'the expectation of witnessing an ungainly performance was quite disappointed.' The fluency with which she overcame the greatest difficulties, the beautiful, noble, and singing tone which she drew from the instrument, no less than the strength and endurance of her playing, entitled her to be ranked among the best of violoncello virtuosi. Her beautiful features also were eulogised, and in all respects her success was complete. A few days later she gave a concert of her own at the Gewandhaus, on which occasion a quartet of Haydn's (or Beethoven's)—the accounts differ in this respect—was played by Ferdinand David, Joachim (then a boy of fourteen), Niels W. Gade, and Grabau. Carl Reinecke also 'assisted' the fair violoncellist by playing a pianoforte arrangement (probably Liszt's) of the first movement of Hummel's Septet.

The Signale of that time has an amusing paragraph, in which Miss Cristiani's name is mentioned. It begins 'Soapbubbles—a true picture of virtuosity,' and continues:

> The Bayerischer Hof [Leipzig] is veritably an artists' hotel. A few days ago a very unusual concert might have been heard there. Vivier vociferously blew, in four parts, his chromatic horn, letting off round and square soapbubbles. Next door the Italian soprano Pergetti sang 'Di tanti palpiti.' In a room further on the amiable French lady Lisa Christiani played a trio for three 'cellos on one 'cello. Opposite one heard the inspired troubadour Rudolph Willmers playing on a grand pianoforte, with English mechanism, and grappling with his Tarantella furioso. In the adjoining room Signora Alboni sang the drinking-song from Lucrezia Borgia, with champagne accompaniment of the best brands; and through all this cacophony might be heard the voice of Miss Helen Dolby solemnly singing 'God save the Queen'!

Mendelssohn was so much struck with the talent of Miss Cristiani during her visit to Leipzig that he composed and dedicated to her his 'Romance sans paroles' for violoncello and pianoforte (Op. 109). This melodious little piece, published after the composer's death, was first played in England—if, indeed, this was not its earliest public performance anywhere—by Signor Piatti at the Monday Popular Concert of March 30, 1868.

After having held a court appointment at Copenhagen, Miss Cristiani visited Russia. There she carried out the idea of making her talent known in a country that European artists had not then visited, with the result that she was the first to give public concerts in Siberia and Kamtschatka. Thence she intended to proceed, for the same purpose, to the wilds of the Caucasus. Naturally of a frail constitution, she fell a victim to the rigours of the climate and died, of cholera, at Tobolsk, Siberia, towards the end of 1853, at the age of twenty-six. The violoncello on which Miss Cristiani played was a beautiful instrument made by Stradivari in 1700. It ultimately, through Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, passed into the possession of the late Mr. Charles James Oldham, of Brighton—he died on January 24 last—who bequeathed it, with other valuable instruments, to the British Museum.

Thirty years had passed away before another lady violoncellist appeared at the Gewandhaus Concerts in the person of Louise Wandersleb, who played at the concert of November 11, 1875. At the Paris Conservatoire a lady violoncellist, Mlle. Jaurès, born at Paris in 1831, was a prize-winner in 1850 and 1851. Since that time, up to the year 1900, there have been nine other players so distinguished at that institution. A Mlle. Plateau, 'Laureate du Conservatoire Bruxelles,' played at the Crystal Palace Concert of October 11, 1873, but no lady violoncellist has yet appeared at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society.

Those who are interested in the development of British art will be glad to learn some particulars of a highly-gifted girl violoncellist who is to make her first public appearance at Queen's Hall on May 29, assisted by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. The second daughter of Colonel J. H. C. Harrison (late) R.E., Miss Marian Beatrice Harrison, was born at Roorkee, N.W.P., India, on December 9, 1892: she is therefore only fourteen years old. She is the second of a quartet of daughters, all of them musical, her eldest sister, May, having already successfully appeared as a violinist. As a baby of two years Beatrice showed a marked interest in the violoncello: at the age of five she began to learn the violin and pianoforte, and two years later (aged seven) passed the examinations of the Associated Board in both these instruments. As soon as she had sufficiently grown she began the study of the violoncello at the age of nine, using from the first a full-sized instrument. Before six months had elapsed she passed the Preliminary Examination of the Associated Board with honours—Sir George Martin, the examiner, remarking that she had 'a wonderful gift.'

Miss Beatrice Harrison was only ten-and-a-half years old when she achieved the remarkable feat of winning the gold medal of the Associated Board at the Senior Local Examination, gaining absolutely full marks, and moreover against nearly 4,000 competitors, male and female, from all parts of the Empire!

MISS BEATRICE HARRISON.

(Photograph by Mr. C. Vandyk, Gloucester Road.)

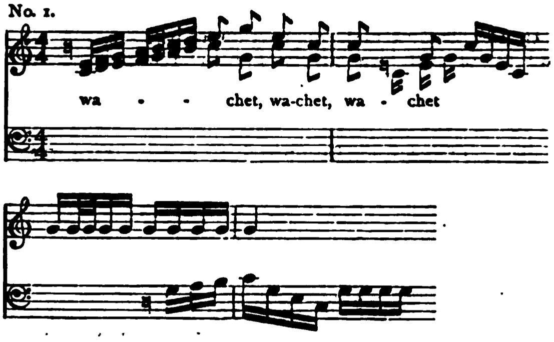
In the history of the Associated Board the only other child ever thus distinguished was her eldest sister May, who obtained the same honour for violin-playing at about the same age. Miss Beatrice Harrison was made a special Exhibitioner at the Royal College of Music, where she is a pupil of Mr. W. E. Whitehouse. The career of this gifted girl violoncellist will be watched with interest. May all success attend her.

BACH'S INDEBTEDNESS TO HANDEL'S ALMIRA.

It was pointed out in The Musical Times of July, 1906, that Bach must have been well acquainted with the early 1704 'Passion,' generally attributed to Handel. It may easily be shown that Handel's opera 'Almira' (1705) was also very well known to Bach, as might indeed have been anticipated, for in Germany 'Almira' seems to have been the 'Dream of Gerontius' of the opening decade of the 18th century. Except when both draw from traditional sources, thematic resemblances between Handel and Bach seem to be extremely rare, so that resemblances to 'Almira,' not distributed sporadically over Bach's works, but confined to a few only, and occurring in clusters, cannot possibly be the result of accident.

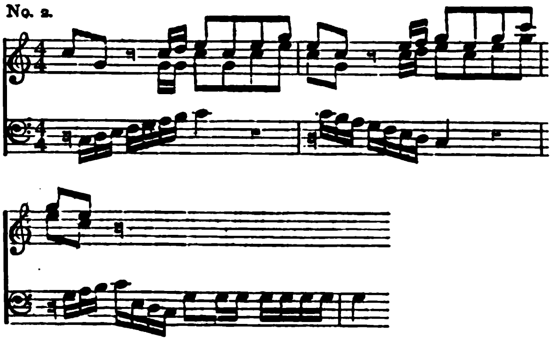
A cluster found in the cantata 'Wachet, betet' (circa 1716) will be first examined. Of this cantata, according to Spitta, Bach seems to have formed a high estimate, as he revived it several times in later years. In the opening chorus (C major) he seems to have taken an unusual view of his text, 'Watch and pray.' It is set as though it were a reveille. Here is the opening of the voice-parts in the chorus, where are found the main features of the movement:

No. 1.



And here are parts of the opening symphony of the 'Almira' air (C major, p. 64*), 'Ob dein Mund wie Pluton's Rachen,' bars 2-4:

No. 2.



It will be observed that the resemblances here, though palpable, are only such as must occur by chance from time to time. But an entirely different complexion is put upon the matter by the discovery that the second section of the same chorus has also a resemblance to the immediately preceding air in 'Almira,' 'Svenerò, svenerò' (p. 63). In the example from Handel's air the opening theme of the first bar has been joined to the essential continuation in the second, to save space, and for the same reason the quotation represents Bach's repetition at the second bar. Reference to the originals will show that this procedure is quite legitimate:

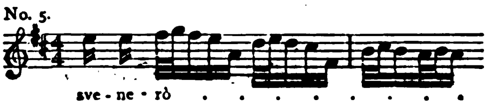
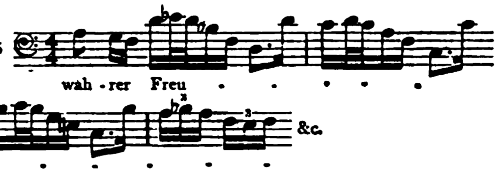
In Handel's air the last 'division,' one of exceptional violence, runs as follows:

No. 5.



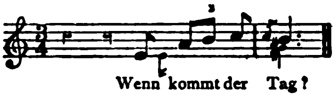
Now in Bach's immediately succeeding recitative, after a few bars of the ordinary type, a long 'passagio' on the word 'Freude' (Joy) arrests attention. This word is an almost unfailing signal to Bach to be expansive—his 'teeming joys,' like those of King Duncan, 'wanton in fulness'—but this is quite abnormal, the sudden joy of an earthquake, taking this curiously similar form:

No. 6



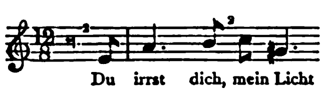
If the resemblances thus far, occurring just where they occur, could be accidental, at least Bach's ensuing air ought to have no similarity to anything in 'Almira.' Yet this is not the case. The A minor aria of the cantata 'Wenn kommt der Tag?' is remarkable, not only for wide upward stretches in the bass, but for the frequent and unusually long-continued concurrence of a 3-4 voice-part with a 9-8 bass. The opening and principal phrase is this, the small notes representing a variation at bar 7:

No. 7.



Now in 'Almira' there is only one A minor aria (p. 17). This is noticeable, not only for the large downward sweeps in the bass, but for the frequent concurrence, to an extent perhaps unprecedented in Handel, of a 4-4 voice-part with a 12-8 bass. And this is the opening and principal phrase:

No. 8.



The next resemblance would, if standing alone, furnish to many judges a certain proof of inter-dependence. The six-note theme of Bach's succeeding soprano air (E minor), a theme which is 'echoed,' is much praised by Spitta; he quotes it as it stands in bar 26, where it is exhibited most clearly. Bach constantly introduces slight variations, and I shall therefore add to the quotation from Bach's voice-opening a variation, and the bass continuation in the second bar, derived from the passage from which Spitta selects his quotation:

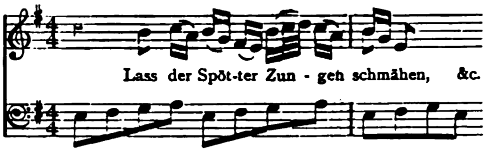
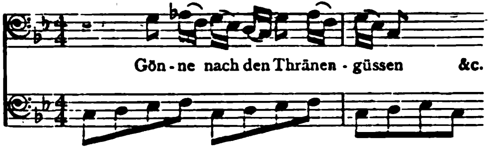
No. 9.



In 'Almira' again occurs, over the same bass, a very similar 'echoed' theme, 'Chi sà, mia speme' (E minor: soprano, p. 45). But as Handel happens to have introduced a modification of the same idea later on as a bass song (C minor, p. 84), I quote by preference from this, as the theme is identical with that of Bach's. This is bar 9, the repetition of the voice-part after the conventional false start, DC in the theme, however, being here substituted for the simple C of bar 9, since they occur in Handel's first statement of the theme in the voice-part:

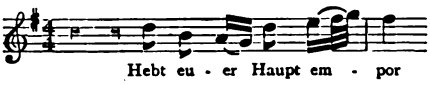
No. 10.



It will be observed that the bass is by no means obvious, involving as it does the marked collision of the final note (E or C) with the passing note (F or D).

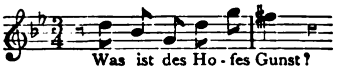
After a short recitative and chorale we find in Bach's cantata a tenor air of which this is the opening and principal theme:

No. 11.



Five pages after 'Gönne nach den Thränen-güssen' is found in 'Almira' a tenor air (p. 89), of which this is the opening and principal theme:

No. 12.

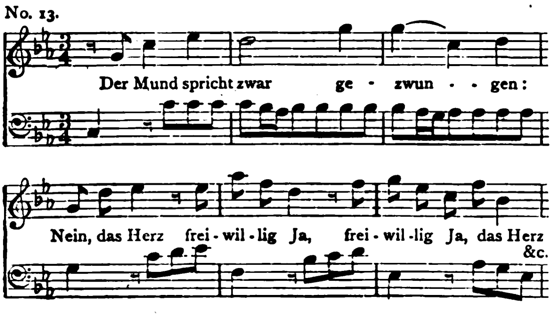


In both Handel and Bach the theme occurs frequently in the instrumental part, and in both it is often followed at once by a repetition a fifth higher.

This practically unbroken series removes, then, all reasonably possible doubt that Bach was acquainted with 'Almira,' and selected themes from its pages. It will be unnecessary, therefore, to quote systematically hereafter; it will be enough to select a few instances.

Here is an air (C minor) found in 'Almira' (p. 40), 'The lips perforce say No, the heart's free impulse Yes':

No. 13.



Der Mund spricht zwar ge - zwun - - gen:
Nein, das Herz frei - wil - lig Ja, frei - wil - lig Ja, das Herz &c.

In the first air of Bach's 'St. John' Passion, the opening words express the same contrast between 'bondage' and 'freedom,' and we find that Bach has chosen the same method of treatment, the 'bondage' being expressed by a bass theme repeated sequentially, while the expression of 'freedom' is given to the voice. The themes, however, are different. But the connection of this 'Almira' air with the well-known cantata 'Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss' (My spirit was in heaviness), 1714, is very interesting. In the first two notes of the voice and the succeeding bass we find the theme of the great opening C minor chorus of the cantata; the constant figuring of the bass (2) in the air suggests the repetitions a note higher in the chorus, to introduce which persistently, however, Bach has changed the time from 3-4 to 4-4. At exactly the same quaver Handel's voice-part and Bach's soprano part drop a fifth—(gezwun)-gen Nein (das Herz)—(Bekümmerniss) in mein (em Herzen). The downward sequential continuation is illustrated at Bach's bar 31, &c., the abbreviations being necessitated by the 4-4 instead of 3-4:

No. 14.

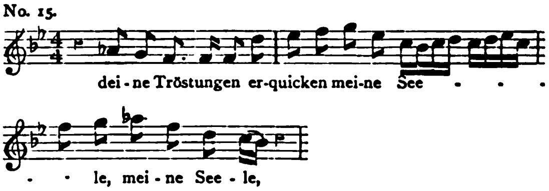
ich hat-te viel Be-küm -mer-niss, Be-kümmer-niss

In the second cheerful section of the chorus we find again Handel's '(frei)willig Ja' reappearing as 'Meine Seele,' and constituting the important feature of Bach's theme:

No. 15.

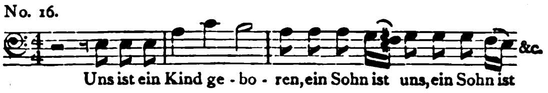


dei - ne Tröstungen er-quicken mei-ne See . . .
. . le, mei - ne See - le,

At the first statement, here quoted, Handel's order is reversed, but in the subsequent entries it is restored.

Apparently, however, this was not the first occasion on which Bach had derived a theme from this air. In another cantata, 'Uns ist ein Kind geboren,' believed to have been written somewhat earlier, the first chorus, A minor (after an instrumental concerto), has this theme:

No. 16.



Uns ist ein Kind ge - bo - ren, ein Sohn ist uns, ein Sohn ist &c.

Nor can there be any doubt here, for after an aria comes a second chorus, 'Ich will den Namen Gottes loben,' which commences like a duet, and is palpably like the duet 'Ich will gar von nichtes wissen' (pp. 37-39), which stands separated only by a short recitative from the above air 'Der Mund spricht zwar.' That the intervening cantata aria 'Dein Geburtstag ist erschienen' was itself suggested by a duet near the end of 'Almira,' 'Mein Betrüben muss verschwinden' (p. 113), will only be clear when the dialogus or duet in 'Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss' has been closely compared with this 'Almira' duet, with the immediately preceding air 'Ich brenne zwar' (p. 112), and with the number immediately preceding the air, the duet 'Spielet, ihr blitzenden' (p. 110). Bach has commenced with modifications of the two opening phrases of the air, Handel's bold opening leaps of a sixth or a fourth being reserved till later on in the dialogus. He has, then, with less than his usual sense of congruity, branched off into a charming phrase derived from the most striking phrase of the duet 'Mein Betrüben,' reserving, however, like Handel, a slight turn which considerably enhances the beauty till the end of the duet. (Handel's close is obviously intended—notice the bass and the violin accompaniment—to be a variation of the earlier phrase.) Bach's middle section, and the tenor air 'Erfreue dich' (Rejoice, O my spirit), which has in part the same words as this middle section, are mainly based on the opening melody for tenor of the duet (p. 110). The close of Bach's tenor air with the words 'verschwinde, du Schmerze,' is rather more pointed than Handel's corresponding phrase, but it is found (in the minor) in the second section of the air 'Der Himmel wird strafen' (p. 73), with the words 'verborgene Tücke.' The voice in this 'Almira' air follows on with a very bold and striking, though simple, passage, with the words 'verstören, verkehren, versehren, verheeren.' From this passage the theme of Bach's final chorus, which succeeds the tenor air, with the words 'Lob, und Ehre,' &c. (Praise, and honour, and glory, and power) seems to have been derived; note the 'heavenly length' to which the little iterated figure attains in each movement. Attention may also be drawn to the resemblances between the bass (the chief feature) of the middle section of the tenor air 'Bäche von gesalznen Zähren' (Fast my tears) and the bass of 'Vollkommene Hände' (p. 26); between 'Harre auf Gott' (Hope thou in God) and 'Zürne was hin' (p. 21); between 'dass er meines Angesichtes' (For he is the help of my countenance)—theme and counterpoint—C minor, and 'Chi più mi piace' (p. 11, first two voice-phrases), C minor; and between the chorus 'Sei nun wieder zufrieden' (Now again be thou joyful), G minor, and the G minor chaconne (p. 6).

It was the resemblances between 'Almira' and Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, which first directed my attention to the subject. Leaving out of account recitatives, chorales, and the treatment of chorales we find another practically unbroken series of slight resemblances in the first part of the Passion. Compare the arioso 'Trinket Alle daraus' (Drink ye all of it), and the following air, 'Ich will dir mein Herze schenken' (Lord, to thee my heart), with the above-mentioned duet 'Ich will gar von nichtes wissen,' especially the ritornello (p. 39); the response of the chorus in 'Ich will bei meinem Jesu wachen' (I would beside my Lord), C minor, oboe solo, with the response of the oboe in 'Gönne nach den Thränen-güssen,' C minor, oboe solo (p. 84); the tied minor sixth in the theme of 'Gerne will ich mich' (Gladly would be enduring), G minor, with the tied minor sixth at the same point in the theme of 'Move i passi,' also G minor (p. 60), and the general resemblance of the theme of the 'Thunder and lightning' chorus with that of 'Der Himmel wird strafen' (p. 69). In the last case the words in each movement invoke heaven's vengeance on the false traitor; in each case they consist of five lines of the same metre, the third and fourth lines being respectively 'verstören, verkehren, versehren, verheeren, dein zeitliches Glück' ('Almira'), and 'zertrümmre, verderbe, verschlinge, zerschelle, Mit plötzlicher Wuth' (Passion).

The 'Almira' air is the longest and one of the most important in the opera, so that the resemblance of words could hardly fail to strike Bach, and influence the style of his treatment.

That 'Gönne nach den Thränen-güssen' was fresh in Bach's recollection might in any case have been suspected, since later on in the Passion we find one of these extremely rare 'echoed' themes with the curiously similar opening words 'Können Thränen meiner Wangen' (If my tears).

Of greater interest, however, is the comparison of 'Erbarme dich' (Have mercy, Lord, on me) in the Passion with 'Geloso tormento' ('Almira,' p. 28). Here are the opening bars of the 'Almira' air after the introductory symphony. To the oboe part additions have been made, derived from the symphonies, and this has necessitated the transposition of the last notes by an octave. The second voice-phrase has also been omitted for the sake of clearness:

No. 17.

As is usual with Bach the melodic skeleton is here so much ornamented with variations from time to time that quotation is made difficult. Bar 39 seems to exhibit it in the simplest form:

No. 18.

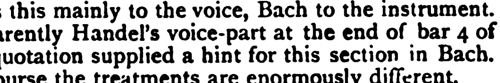
Handel's air is in the da capo form, and Bach's may for practical purposes be regarded as such, as the general scheme of the third part is the same as that of the first. The scheme in both arias, after the introduction, is:—(a) A section of four bars ending on the dominant chord; (b) At the beginning of the fifth bar a new phrase, formed on the tonic ninth, quickly reverting, however, to the first section, with slight modifications. Handel compresses this into four bars, but Bach, who repeats the whole of the first section, takes six. In neither aria is this tonic ninth phrase repeated before the repetition in the third part; (c) A four-bar section, in which the predominant descent of a fourth is treated sequentially. Handel gives this mainly to the voice, Bach to the instrument. Apparently Handel's voice-part at the end of bar 4 of the quotation supplied a hint for this section in Bach. Of course the treatments are enormously different.

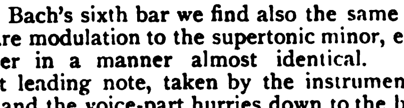
Bach's symphony being two bars the shorter, the movements start level again at the second part. Handel's sixth bar is quoted:

No. 19.



Now at Bach's sixth bar we find also the same somewhat rare modulation to the supertonic minor, effected moreover in a manner almost identical. Bach's crotchet leading note, taken by the instrument, fails to rise, and the voice-part hurries down to the bottom, like the shameless stone of Sisyphus:

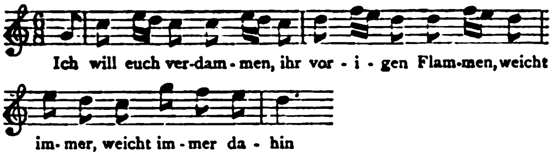
No. 20.



That this should have happened by accident is beyond all reasonable probability. Handel adds a few bars more, but Bach proceeds at once to the third part.

A sidelight is thrown on this last example by the cantata 'Liebster Gott' (When will God recall my spirit?), believed to have been written before the Passion. The first air in this cantata, 'Was willst du dich' (And why art thou, my soul, so fearful?), has a decided likeness both to the Passion and the 'Almira' airs, though on that ground alone a positive assertion would be hardly justifiable. This air is succeeded, however, after a short recitative, by another aria, 'Doch weichet' (Yet silence). Spitta suggested that the theme of this was derived from one in an opera by Lotti, 'Alessandro Severo.' But it has an equally strong likeness to the theme of 'Ich will euch verdammen,' eight pages farther on in 'Almira' (p 36), and the curious resemblance of opening words removes all doubt as to the real origin. In 'Almira' the 'former flames' are directed to vanish (weicht); and in the cantata on the 'foolish vain cares' is enjoined a like disappearance (weichet). I quote the themes in each case, the upper notes in Bach's theme representing the slight variations in the instrumental form :

No. 21.



Ich will euch ver-dam-men, ihr vor - i - gen Flam-men, weicht im-mer, weicht im-mer da - hin

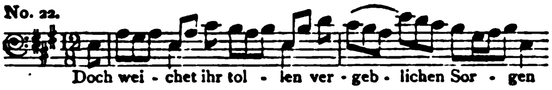
No. 22.



It will be noticed how the semiquavers at the end of Bach's theme recall Handel's semiquavers, and similar semiquavers occur frequently in Bach's accompaniment. On the precise importance or significance of these phenomena it is not worth while to venture an opinion.

Church and Organ Music.

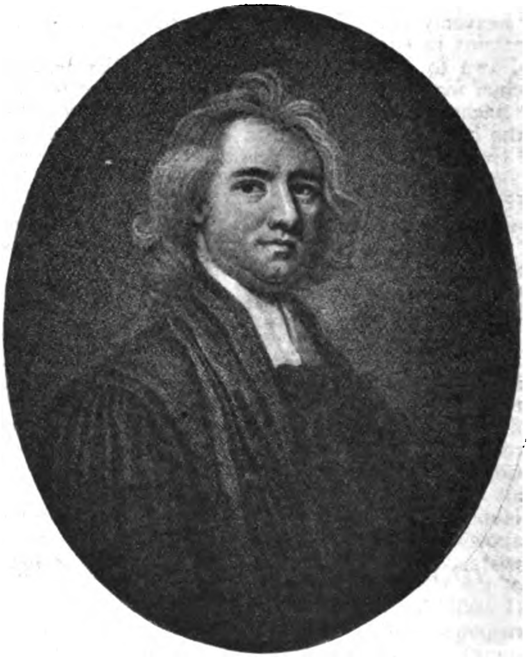
CLERICAL CHANT COMPOSERS.

Clergymen, even dignitaries of the Church, have contributed to the song of the great congregation. The Archbishop of York and Bishop Turton are names that will be recalled in connection with hymn-tunes, and a long list could be given of rectors, vicars, and others whose compositions are to be found in all hymnals irrespective of denomination. In regard to clerical chant composers this brief survey naturally and chronologically begins with a dignitary of the Church in the person of the Very Rev. Henry Aldrich, Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, from 1689 to 1710. Born in 1647, Dean Aldrich was a man of considerable attainments—a good scholar, architect, and musician. He not only cultivated music with ardour and success, but 'as dean of a college and a cathedral he regarded it as a duty, as it undoubtedly was in his case a pleasure, to advance the study and progress of Church music.' The splendid music library which he formed he bequeathed to his college. Two morning and evening services (in G and A) and a large number of anthems can be placed to his credit as a clerical composer. His catch, 'Hark the bonny Christ Church bells,' is well known. He afterwards wrote, and used to sing, a Greek version of this catch. The Dean was an inveterate smoker, and another of his catches in praise of smoking is so constructed as to allow every singer time for a puff.

Dean Aldrich's well-known single chant, assigned to the 20th morning of the month in the Cathedral Psalter, made an early appearance in print, if not for the first time, in a scarce collection entitled :

> Fifty | Double and Single | Chants | being the most Favorite | as Perform'd at | S. Paul's, Westminster | and most of the Cathedrals in | England. | Price 2s. |
> London | Printed for C. and S. Thompson at No. 75 | St. Paul's Church Yard.

This collection is probably one of the first, if not the first, ever published in England, and the year of its issue may be assigned to 1769 or 1770. The Dean's chant is thus given in the above book, wherein all the chants are printed in vocal score, with alto and tenor clefs, and without accompaniment :



DEAN ALDRICH.

(From an engraving, after Sir Godfrey Kneller, in the collection of Mr. John S. Bumpus.)

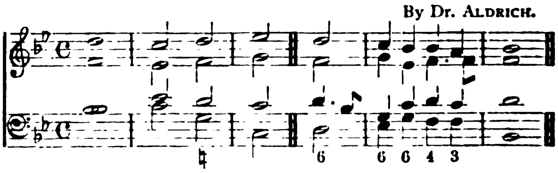
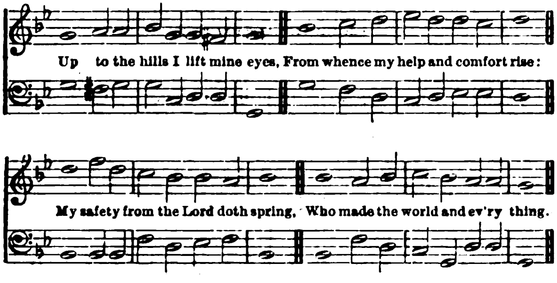
By Dr. ALDRICH.



Our next cleric was a minor canon of Westminster Abbey, the Rev. Luke Flintoft by name, who died in 1727. His previous appointments were priest-vicar of Lincoln Cathedral, vicar at Worcester Cathedral, gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and Reader in Whitehall Chapel. Flintoft's beautiful minor double chant appears to have been an adaptation from a tune in a folio book published by John Playford, entitled

'Psalms & Hymns in Solemn Musick of Foure Parts on the Common Tunes to the Psalms in Metre.' 1671. The tune, a common metre, by John Playford himself, appears as follows:

A. L. Voc. Psal. cxxi. J. PLAYFORD.



Up to the hills I lift mine eyes, From whence my help and comfort rise:
My safety from the Lord doth spring, Who made the world and ev'ry thing.

The notes which form the chant are:

|| 1 | 2 . 3 | 4 || 9 | 10 . 11 | 14 . 15 | 16 ||
|| 17 | 18 . 19 | 20 || 28 | 28 . 29 | 30 . 31 | 32 |

The earliest known appearance of the chant itself is in the 'Fifty Double and Single Chants' above referred to. Here it is:

By Mr. FLINTOTT (sic).

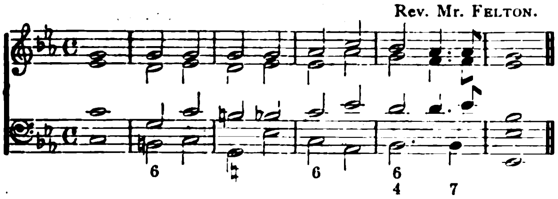
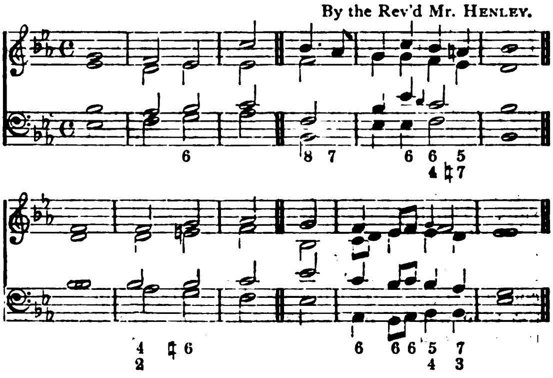
One of the most beautiful minor single chants is that composed by the Rev. William Felton (1713-1769), who passed the last twenty-eight years of his life at Hereford Cathedral as vicar-choral and sub-chanter, and custos of the vicars choral. Mr. Felton was an excellent performer on the harpsichord and organ. He composed and published three sets of concertos for these instruments, and 'Felton's Gavot' was for a long time highly popular. His chant appeared in print in 'Sacred Harmony: A Collection of Psalm Tunes, Ancient and Modern . . . Together with a Selection of Chants, &c. By R. Harrison': vol. ii. [1791] in the following form:

Rev. Mr. FELTON.



Devotional and melodious in the highest degree is the chant composed by the Rev. Phocion Henley (1728-1798). At Oxford he spent much of his time in the cultivation of music in company with his friend, William Jones, afterwards rector of Nayland, Suffolk, and composer of the tune 'St. Stephen's.' In 1759 Mr. Henley was presented to the rectory of St. Andrew by the Wardrobe of St. Anne's, Blackfriars. His anthems and chants (two volumes) appeared in 1798, and he composed a set of six hymns entitled 'The Cure of Saul.' This good man met with his death through a fever caught while visiting a sick parishioner. His chant, one of the best of double chants, also appeared in Thompson's collection, where it is thus noted, including the 'consecutive fifths':

By the Rev'd Mr. HENLEY.



The foregoing quartet of clerical chant composers does not exhaust the subject, to which we may return on some future occasion. One feature of interest in this excursion is a comparison of the first appearances of standard chants, and the editorial changes they have undergone—for better, for worse—in the course of time.

THE ENGLISH ORGAN OF A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held on April 16, Dr. W. H. Cummings in the chair, Dr. C. W. Pearce read an interesting paper on the above subject, of which the following is a summary.

Dr. Pearce remarked that perhaps no musical instrument had been subjected to greater constitutional changes during the last century than had the English organ—in the various directions of size, compass of keyboards, character of stops and methods of controlling their use and, last but not least, its system of tuning. Changes were still being made, even to the extent of affecting the uniformity of those 'playing arrangements,' which the Royal College of Organists endeavoured to regulate, systematize, and settle more than a quarter of a century ago. It was an open question if the organ was now being developed upon logical and artistic lines as a musical instrument, deserving a separate and individual existence of its own, or whether it was daily becoming a merely servile and therefore a degraded mechanical imitation of the orchestra. The English organ of the first decade of the 19th century, although a comparatively small instrument, had a character of its own and was in many ways admirably adapted to fulfil the one great purpose of its existence, the accompaniment of the human voice.

The lecturer said he had been materially assisted in making his retrospective survey by two manuscript accounts of organs, one written by Mr. Henry Leffler, between the years 1800-10, and the other by Mr. J. W. Billinghurst, late Vestry Clerk of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, dating from the year 1850 onwards. He had also derived considerable help from several conversations with Mr. F. W. Jardine, our oldest living English organ-builder.

Attention was first drawn to the comparative sizes of English and foreign organs as they existed a century ago. The largest English organ then was that in Christ Church, Spitalfields, built by Bridge in 1730; this had thirty-four stops, but no pedal board nor pedal pipes save a 'drum' pedal. St. Paul's Cathedral and York Minster organs boasted of twenty-seven stops each, Canterbury had twenty-four, and so on; and of the cathedral organs then in use, sixteen had no pedals, and eight had no swell organs, in spite of the fact that pedals were common in Germany at least three centuries before the period in question, and that the swell had been invented and applied by Jordan to the organ at St. Magnus Church, London Bridge, as early as 1712. Swell shutters were only just coming into use, so that the 'nag's head' was very much in evidence at that time. Organs were very much neglected in those days, an instance being given of an instrument built in 1695 remaining in its original condition for more than 170 years. The variation in the compass of keyboards a century ago was truly remarkable; these differences were explained and accounted for by the lecturer.

The old pedal-boards were then fully described, and comparisons drawn between the pedal measurements of Dr. Edward Hodges, of Bristol (1827), and those of G. P. England (1801), J. C. Bishop (1829), Groves (1850), Hill (1854), and the Royal College of Organists (1882). The tardy introduction and development of 'pedal pipes' was duly commented upon, and Dr. Pearce described at length the various tonal characteristics of the stops of the period, dealing successively with manual 'doubles,' diapasons and other flue-work, flutes, mixture-work, and the cornet stop. The last-named was stated to have been introduced with the view of strengthening the treble of the full organ; its employment as a solo stop was an abuse. At this point the note middle C was sounded on a five-rank cornet, put together for the occasion by Mr. Alfred Kirkland; the tone was by no means unpleasant. The lecturer said there was a popular fallacy that before the time of Henry Willis, if not afterwards, all reed-stops had (or have) that peculiar quality of tone usually associated with the frying of sausages. That was a great mistake. Byfield's reeds at Doncaster Parish Church had been described by a contemporaneous writer as full of beauty and brightness, and many other opinions were quoted in support of the view that all old reeds were not bad. Mr. Kirkland produced and sounded a reed pipe by Snetzler which had still a good quality of tone. Couplers were rare luxuries a century ago, and the organists of those times were to be congratulated on the fact that the word 'stop-control' was not then invented; the registering was wholly eclectic. The pitch of organs was shown to have varied; but the tuning was universally that of 'unequal temperament.' Dr. S. S. Wesley's extraordinary and inconsistent views on tuning were duly commented upon.

Some very interesting examples were given of builders duplicating a favourite case design—Renatus Harris, Avery, Byfield, Snetzler, and Gray, amongst others. These old case-designs were greatly to be preferred to the fashion of fifty years later, when the external appearance of organs resembled a row of unadorned stove-pipes planted on the top of the meanest possible wainscot. Dr. Pearce remarked that there could be no reason why an organ should be offensive to the eye as well as to the ear. It was a monstrous shame that an organ-builder should be turned loose in the aisles of a mediæval cathedral and be allowed to spoil the architectural beauty of ancient buildings. The late Canon Jebb's well-known aversion to overgrown cathedral organs—fit only for the 'barbarous crash of Nebuchadnezzar's festival'—was quoted in the hope that musical opinion might be brought to bear upon the senseless extravagance and eccentricity of the up-to-date organ.

A discussion followed the reading of the paper, in which the Chairman, Messrs. Thomas Casson, H. H. Statham, James Wedgwood, T. L. Southgate, and others took part.

ST. GEORGE'S SCHOOL, WINDSOR CASTLE

The Easter term issue of the St. George's School Magazine—an interesting periodical issued in the interests of Sir Walter Parratt's choristers—contains a brightly-written account of 'A visit to Novello's,' contributed by Master G. W. Daman. On February 20 Mr. G. S. Fowler, one of the assistant-masters of the School, took five boys 'up to London to see Novello's printing factory.' The printing and bookbinding departments, the machine rooms, &c., visited by the Windsor party are capitally described. The inspection finished with a Buszard tea which Messrs. Novello had provided for their chorister guests in the Board-room, whereunto, records the young chronicler, 'I can safely say that we all did full justice.' The account concludes: 'We got back just in time for choir practice, and thus ended the nicest outing we have ever had in an Easter term.'

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and 'Calvary,' and Stainer's 'Crucifixion' have recently been performed at Calvary Church, New York, under the direction of Mr. Lacey Baker, organist and choirmaster.

The organ in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, has been rebuilt by Messrs. Lewis & Co., Limited, to the following specification prepared by three experts chosen by the Corporation—Mr. Thomas Berry, of Glasgow, Mr. David Steven, of Dunfermline, and Mr. T. H. Collinson, of Edinburgh.

Proof has recently been furnished—if, indeed, proof be necessary—of the good work done in cathedral choir schools, at the recent prize-day at York Minster Choir School. Two choristers have matriculated in music at Durham University, one of whom has been appointed organist of the Garrison Church, York. An ex-chorister, Mr. T. P. Anderson, has already made his mark as a portrait painter, and the report stated that 'no less than ninety successes in various public examinations have been gained during the past four years by the choristers, and there have been no failures.' The Dean, who presided, said that the occasion was one of 'unmixed satisfaction to all of them.' During his long life at York he had had many pleasures, but none had afforded him greater satisfaction than his connection with the choir school. Later on he said that during the past few years the conduct of the boys had resulted in 'a season of unmixed sunshine.' The head-master of York Minster Choir School, Mr. G. A. Scaife, and the organist and master of the choristers, Mr. T. T. Noble, are to be heartily congratulated on the success of their efforts, and so are the choristers for being boys of good report.

Mr. William Vinnicombe has been presented with a testimonial—an illuminated album containing an address and a cheque for £77 15*s.* 6*d.*—on his retirement from the office of organist at Holy Trinity Church, Exmouth, which he has held for upwards of thirty years. Born at Exeter, January 7, 1835, Mr. Vinnicombe commenced his career as organist at Dunsford Church at the age of thirteen with a salary of £20 a year. Two years later he obtained a post as assistant-organist at Wandsworth, and during the Great Exhibition of 1851 he was engaged to show off organs then exhibited under the roof of the huge glass-house in Hyde Park. After holding the organistship of Spalding Church he returned to his native county, first as organist of Withycombe and then at Holy Trinity, Exmouth.

The annual festival service of the Queen Victoria Clergy Fund (Southwark Diocesan Branch) will be held at Southwark Cathedral on May 6, at 7.30 p.m., when Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing' will be sung by the cathedral choir, under the direction of Dr. Madeley Richardson.

As part of a scheme for spreading the interests of the Royal College of Organists among its members, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on April 20, lectured at Manchester before the northern members, his subject being the interesting and important one of 'An organist's voluntaries.'

THE AUGUST MANNS MEMORIAL.

Sir,—At the first meeting of the Committee of the August Manns Memorial Fund, held on March 22, Sir A. C. Mackenzie in the chair, Sir C. H. H. Parry, Dr. W. H. Cummings and others attending, the question of the form the Memorial should take was carefully considered. The establishment of a scholarship for conductors was proposed; but however appropriate this might seem, the Committee were of opinion that the preliminary training of conductors was already in considerable measure provided for in the music schools, and that the cost of doing anything more distinctive in this direction would entail a greater expense than seems to be supposed. They therefore sought for some less ambitious and more satisfactory alternative. It was suggested that a suitable and really beneficent act would be the creation of a Fund (to be called The Manns Benevolent Fund) to assist talented but necessitous students in any branch of music to complete their studies.

I have now to ask all musicians and music-lovers desirous of joining the general committee of the Manns Memorial Fund to send their names and donations to me at 309, Oxford Street, as we are anxious to publish a first list of subscribers at an early date.—Faithfully yours,

F. Corder,
Chairman of the Society of British Composers.

HANDEL'S BOOKCASE.

Sir,—The Illustrated London News for October 22, 1842, p. 377, contains a wood-cut of Handel's bookcase, bequeathed by Dr. Ireland, Dean of Westminster, to his friend Mr. Brownsmith, lay-vicar of Westminster Abbey, and organist of St. John's Church, Waterloo Road. The bookcase contained sixty-seven volumes of Handel's compositions, in the handwriting of his amanuensis, Christopher Smith, including thirty-seven operas, twenty-two oratorios, and miscellaneous compositions. The pedigree of the bookcase and its contents is given, and it seems to be satisfactory. Mr. Brownsmith, who will be remembered as organist of the Sacred Harmonic Society and of the Handel Festival in its early days, died on September 14, 1866. What became of the bookcase and the books after Mr. Brownsmith's death?

R. B. P.

[The Handel bookcase and its contents were purchased from Mr. Brownsmith by Mr. H. Barrett Lennard, of Hampstead, at whose death his son, Mr. Francis Barrett Lennard, presented the bookcase and the books to the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.—Ed. M. T.]

Reviews.

Humpty Dumpty. A short cantata for children. By H. Walford Davies.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Composers, from Bach downwards, have shown the humorous side of their nature, and who would decry Beethoven because of his 'unbuttoned' moods. Dr. Walford Davies, hitherto regarded as a serious composer, has followed a good example in his latest published work 'Humpty Dumpty.' Having a mind to write something for children, Dr. Davies could not have done better than select an old nursery rhyme, and to wed his muse to that of 'Lewis Carroll.' His 'short cantata'—which, though it is entirely free from dumps, has plenty of Humpty Dumptiness in the music—consists of a Prelude, four short settings of the old nursery rhyme, and part of the famous scene between Alice and Humpty Dumpty from 'Alice through the looking-glass.' The dedication to 'those who chance to sing it' is followed by the dramatis personæ thus described:

also four other soloists and a chorus (large or small).

To the Prelude—'during which groups of children may enter'—succeed four musical versions of the Humpty Dumpty ditty, each setting being preceded by a recitative, e.g.:

(Recit. Solo) Have you settings to perform of this noble song?

(Chorus) We have.

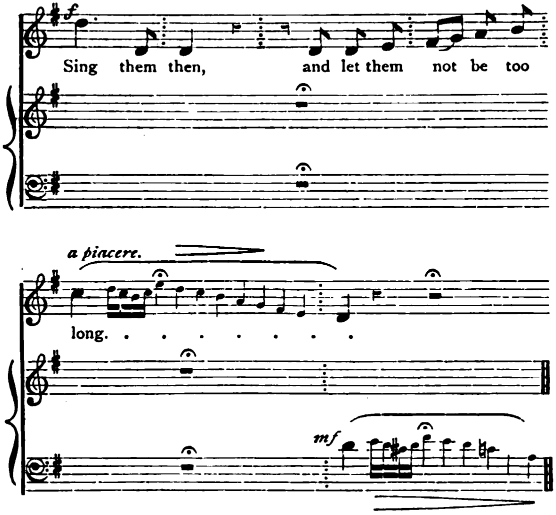
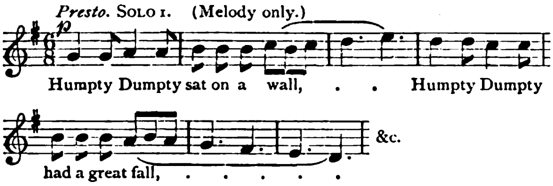
Whereupon the soloist recitatively replies:



Here the joke is obvious, and the soloist immediately sings:



Presto. SOLO I. (Melody only.)
p Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall, . . Humpty Dumpty had a great fall, ...
&c.

The composer has shown remarkable ingenuity in the variety he has imparted to four settings (solo and chorus) of the same words; for while the vocal part is perfectly easy—and, we may add, delightfully tuneful—he has done wonders with the pianoforte accompaniment by the wealth of realistic and humorous touches. 'The dialogue of Humpty Dumpty and Alice' is admirably done, all sorts of devices, many of them as droll as the words themselves, being introduced in order to accentuate the text with graphic music. The work is brought to a 'Couldn't' conclusion with 'Humpty Dumpty's song,' for solo and chorus, in which the wall-perched hero 'falls backwards with a crash out of sight' to four very extraordinary looking chords of an exceeding Humpty Dumptyish nature—these crashing chaotic chords "are to be played (sfff) simultaneously, by placing both hands and elbows violently on to the keyboard as Humpty Dumpty falls. Other noises may be made also, and the chorus may utter a long Oh, under the breath.'

We have only been able to briefly indicate the nature and scope of a cleverly constructed cantata that is brimful of wholesome humour, and, as may be assumed in regard to any music that comes from Dr. Walford Davies's pen, one that is artistic from the first bar to the last. We may add that the cantata is published in both the staff and tonic sol-fa notations.

Henry Du Mont (1610-1684). Etude historique et critique. Par Henri Quittard, avec une Préface par Jules Combarieu.

[Paris: Société du Mercure de France.]

Lulli, our author remarks, always enjoyed public favour more than Du Mont, so that later on the former was regarded as the sole musician of the reign of Louis XIV. But M. Quittard regards both as important in the history of the 17th century; while the preference shown to Lulli, he explains, was owing to 'cette innovation séduisante du théâtre Lyrique,' and 'la pompe des ballets.' To appreciate the art-work of any composer it is necessary to understand what was taking place in the musical world in his day. Du Mont was born about the year 1610—in other words about the period in which the Florentine reformers were sowing the seeds of modern opera—in which the polyphonic motets and madrigals of the 16th century were giving place to the aria and the church cantata, and in which the continuo came into vogue. It is customary to regard the men who met at the houses of Bardi and Corsi as the creators of la nuove musiche, but M. Quittard considers that the change was a gradual one. Florence, he admits, created the language of the lyrical drama, but even had the Florentine coterie not existed, the 'classical polyphonic style would none the less have undergone a natural and logical evolution, of which the result could only be what history shows as everywhere realized during the early years of the 17th century. For in France our musicians, without having heard even mention of recitative compositions, had arrived in a different way to an almost identical result.' These and other statements certainly place the reader in, as it were, the right atmosphere in order to understand the part played by Du Mont in the musical world.

The biography of the composer is very interesting and instructive, but space will not allow us to dwell on it. A very brief résumé of what Du Mont accomplished is all that can be attempted here. We hope, however, to be able to show that M. Quittard's thoughtful book, and one evincing thorough knowledge of his subject, is a valuable contribution, not only to the history of Du Mont but to that of French sacred music of the 17th century. The Italian, Ludovico Viadana, has often been styled the inventor of the continuo, but the most that can be said for him is that he brought it into prominent use. It was known, too, in France before Du Mont, who was a native of Maestricht, came to Paris, but he it was who first published (in France) motets 'avec la Basse continuë,' in his Cantica of 1652. In these, we are told, the composer by 'preserving in simpler form the polyphonic spirit of the old masters, contributed largely towards the establishment of the new genre.' The finest number in this collection is the motet 'a 4,' 'Ave gemma virginum.' In a chapter on the Motets Récitatifs mention is made of a certain M. Bouzignac, a predecessor, who appears to have worked on similar lines, and apparently before Carissimi. Then the Masses and Grands Motets are discussed at length. But, as descriptions of music, however thorough and, as in the present instance, good, are not quite illuminating, M. Quittard gives a Supplément Musical, containing specimens which add greatly to the understanding of an interesting and valuable book, one which not only shows the historical importance of Du Mont, but the skill and emotional power of his music.

Musical genius and religion. By Robert Turnbull.
[S. Wellwood.]

Mr. Turnbull, the esteemed music critic of the Glasgow Herald, has written an extremely able and interesting little book on a difficult subject. He says that he does not propose to discuss 'the relation of Religion to Art in general,' his concern being with 'Art that deals specifically with Religion.' Even this narrowing of the issue leaves it open to contentious criticism. 'In music,' asks our author, 'does a man's personal relation to religion affect his treatment of sacred themes?' This may be answered by another question, 'What is a man's personal relation to religion?' If it be true, as Mr. Turnbull says, that 'the greatest religious music seems always to have behind it the ecstasy of the religious man,' we are enabled to point without hesitation to really religious composers. All, or nearly all, musicians will be prepared to give the first place to John Sebastian Bach—'a deeply religious man and a mighty genius' is this 'musicians' musician,' of whom 'Mendelssohn happily said that Bach's music transforms into a temple every room in which it is played.' Apart from a chronological sequence it is no wonder, therefore, that after the introduction Bach has the place of honour in Mr. Turnbull's book.

The succeeding chapters treat of Handel and his 'Messiah,' Haydn and his 'Creation,' Mozart and his 'Requiem,' Beethoven and his 'Messe Solennelle,' Mendelssohn and his 'Elijah,' and Wagner and his music-dramas (two chapters). These master-musicians and their masterpieces form the subject-matter of a little volume that should interest many readers, for it is most ably, lucidly and thoughtfully written, and thus it becomes a valuable contribution to musical literature.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Novelty in a three-fold form gave distinction to the concert on April 17 at Queen's Hall. The chief of these novelties was a Violin concerto in B minor (Op. 36), composed by M. Tivadar Nachèz, who played the solo part. The work, constructed on orthodox lines, is, as may be assumed, admirably written to display the varied capabilities of the instrument. It is a melodious, brilliant and extremely effective composition to which the composer-violinist did full justice, and he received the reward of hearty applause at its close.

Mr. John B. McEwen is one of those younger men among British composers who seem to find fond delight in gloomy subjects, judging from his selection of the 'Coronach' as the subject of his 'Symphonic Elegy.' As to the 'Coronach' itself, Mr. F. Gilbert Webb, the programme-analyst, says: 'For the benefit of those whose knowledge of Gaelic is limited, it may be stated that the word "Coronach" was the name given in ancient days by the Celts of Scotland to the dirge sung at the funeral rites of chieftains or notable personages.' Mr. McEwen, as becometh a true Scot, has faithfully reflected the solemnities of the 'Coronach' in his music, which is cast in a sombre mould and stamped with the hall-mark of sincerity. The last of the novelties comprised two songs, composed by Mr. Hubert Bath, and sung by Mr. R. Kennerley Rumford. The first, entitled 'Longing,' a setting of Matthew Arnold's 'Come to me in my dreams,' hardly gave so much satisfaction as the second, a spirited setting of Fiona Macleod's 'The Viking's war-song,' which had to be repeated.

Not the least attractive feature of the evening's music was the glorious voice of Madame Clara Butt, who by her singing of 'Mon cœur s'ouvre,' from Saint-Saëns's 'Samson et Dalila,' created so much enthusiasm that she sang 'Caro mio ben' as an encore. The concert, ably conducted by Dr. Cowen, opened with Sullivan's 'Tempest' overture, and closed with Tchaikovsky's brilliant Suite in G, No. 3.

MUSICIANS' COMPANY CONCERT.

It was a happy thought of the Worshipful Company of Musicians to give a concert in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, on St. George's Day, in aid of the Lord Mayor's Cripples' Fund. The chief magistrate of the City of London has taken a very warm interest in the poor crippled children of the metropolis, and nothing could be more appropriate than that the art of music should be invoked to swell the contributions to so deserving an object, and that the music-making should take place at the official residence of the Lord Mayor (Sir William P. Treloar), and be honoured by his presence. It must have been very gratifying to his Lordship to see such a large audience, who by their presence showed a practical interest in the benevolent object he has so much at heart.

The afternoon's music opened chorally with 'My bonny lass' (Morley) and 'Prithee, why so pale?' (Stainer), being followed later in the programme by 'On a day, alack a day' (W. H. Cummings), 'Bold Turpin' (J. F. Bridge), 'Since first I saw your face' (Ford), and 'The waits' (Saville). These madrigals and part-songs were admirably sung by the choir of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, assisted by members of the Musicians' Company who also belong to the Madrigal Society.

The soloists were headed by Madame Albani, who sang 'L'amerò' (Mozart) and Tosti's 'Good-bye' with that artistic finish which is always associated with her name. Madame Clara Butt charmed the audience by her renderings of 'Believe me if all those endearing young charms' (Landon Ronald), and Mr. Santley created a furore by his fine vocalization in Paer's 'Agitata da smania funesta' and (as an encore) Hatton's glorious song, gloriously sung, 'To Anthea.' Other vocalists, whose services proved most acceptable, were Miss Oswyn Hackett-Jones, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, while the instrumental soloists, who contributed not a little to the success of the concert, were Miss Llewela Davies (pianoforte), Mr. W. A. Woltmann (violin) and Mr. J. Schofield (violoncello).

Of the two novelties presented, the most important was a Phantasie in A for violin, violoncello and pianoforte, composed by request by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse expressly for the occasion. This proved to be a most melodious and dainty creation, breathing the spirit of natural music, graceful in expression and full of charm. We shall look forward to a second hearing of this well-written work. The other novelty was a song (soliloquy) 'To be, or not to be,' composer unknown, which Sir Frederick Bridge discovered in the Pepys collection at Magdalene College, Cambridge. The setting is for a bass voice (it was sung by Mr. Graham Smart) with an accompaniment for the lute and viola da gamba, and was composed either during Shakespeare's life or within some fifty years of his death. The conductors of the concert were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. W. H. Cummings and Dr. G. F. Huntley, and the accompanists, Mr. Stanley Hawley, Mr. S. Liddle and Dr. Markham Lee; the last-named, with Messrs. Woltmann and Schofield, also took part in Mr. von Ahn Carse's Phantasie. The programme-book, edited by Mr. T. L. Southgate, Junior Warden of the Company, was most tastefully got up and profusely illustrated; it was worthy of the occasion, and contained a touching poem entitled 'London Cripples,' by Miss Florence Gertrude Attenborough ('Chrystabel'). The entire expenses of the concert were generously defrayed by Mr. Samuel Ernest Palmer, a member of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and the Lord Mayor was able to announce that the net proceeds of the concert amounted to the satisfactory sum of £350, a result upon which the Company and all who took part in the concert are to be warmly congratulated.

A COLONIAL FESTIVAL CONCERT.

A special concert was given at Queen's Hall on April 16 by the London Symphony Orchestra in honour of the visit to England of the Colonial Premiers. The programme most appropriately opened with Sir Alexander Mackenzie's spirited and clever 'Britannia' overture, after which the Sheffield Choir, under the enthusiastic direction of Dr. Henry Coward, sang Bach's wonderfully fine motet 'Sing ye to the Lord' with immense vigour and fine feeling. The third number on the programme was the Coronation Mass 'Edward VII.,' composed by Dr. C. A. E. Harriss, whose 'Pan' had already been performed here at the British-Canadian Festival in 1906. This Mass shows that the composer has a fluent pen and clear knowledge of form. The music itself is not strongly emotional, nor indeed very solemn, but there were moments in which good effects were produced by broad, diatonic harmonies. With the Sheffield Choir bent upon doing justice to the work and also to themselves, and with Mlle. Eva Gauthier, Miss Alice Lakin and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Ffrangcon-Davies as soloists, the result was bound to be satisfactory. Dr. Harriss, who conducted his Mass, was received with great cordiality.

The event of the evening was the performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch. The soloists were as above, except that Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soprano singer. It was an impressive rendering, altogether worthy of the great work, and the Sheffield Choir triumphed gloriously over the uncomfortable difficulties of the choral portion.

EDWARD GERMAN'S 'TOM JONES.'

In these days of invertebrate musical comedy, Mr. Edward German's comic opera 'Tom Jones,' produced at the Apollo Theatre on April 17, comes as a pure and invigorating breeze in a vitiated atmosphere. The librettists, Messrs. Alex. M. Thompson and Robert Courtneige, have preserved little more than the outline of Fielding's great novel; but the lyrics by Mr. Charles H. Taylor are neatly turned, and the construction is that of genuine comic opera. In this instance, however, the music, and not the play, is the thing, and Mr. German's numbers carry the work along with irresistible élan. The composer's skill in reproducing the idiom of the best time of old English music is well-known, and the songs and dances in 'Tom Jones' take the listener in imagination to the hedgerows and dancing greens of Merry England, or, to be more exact, to those of Somerset. In Squire Western's song 'On a January morning,' the spirit of our folk-song is happily echoed, and Tom's song 'I was yesterday a-faring,' is another ditty of genial folk-song-like character. The madrigal 'Here's a paradox for lovers' is a wholly charming example of its class, and the ensemble 'The barley mow' is genuinely humorous. A deeper note is sounded in the songs written for Sophia. 'To-day my spinet' is most graceful, and 'Love maketh the heart a garden fair' is a little gem of pathetic music. It is scarcely necessary to say that the melodies are scored in a manner that presents them in a most favourable light, and that the hand of a master musician is discernible in every page of 'Tom Jones.' The characters of Sophia and her maid Honor were vivaciously sustained by Miss Ruth Vincent and Miss Carrie Moore. Miss Dora Rignold appeared as Lady Bellaston, and the parts of Squire Western, Tom Jones and Benjamin Partridge were admirably impersonated respectively by Messrs. Ambrose Manning, C. Hayden Coffin and Dan Rolyat. The ensemble reflected great credit on the conducting of Mr. Hamish MacCunn.

OFFENBACH'S 'LES CONTES D'HOFFMANN.'

The first performance in England on April 17 at the Adelphi Theatre, of Offenbach's comic opera 'Les contes d'Hoffmann,' should not pass unrecorded in these columns, if only because the composition shows the composer striving after higher ideals than in the majority of his works. The music indeed is conceived in a spirit of artistic restraint that is pleasurable to the cultured ear, and several of the melodies possess great charm. The Student choruses in the Prologue are admirable, the Doll's song in the first act is extremely clever and a severe test of vocal flexibility, and in the second act the Barcarolle is most captivating and the address to the Mirror is worthy of grand opera.

The work was sung in German by Mr. Hans Gregner's company from the Komische Oper, Berlin, and was rendered under the direction of Mr. Fritz Cassirer with great excellence of ensemble. The principal exponents were Miss Hedwig Franzilla-Kauffmann, who impersonated the four heroines, Stella, Olympia, Giuletta and Antonia; Mr. Rudolf Halbauer, the possessor of an exceptionally fine baritone voice, who also appeared in four characters; and Mr. Jean Nadolovitch, the exponent of Hoffmann. The opera was originally produced at Paris on February 10, 1881, having been revised and partly scored by Ernest Guiraud, after the death of Offenbach in the previous October.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The customary performance of Handel's 'Messiah,' which concluded the season's concerts, was given on Good Friday. It does not call for criticism, but it should be said that the solos were reverently sung by Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Dalton Baker, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Memorable features of the students' concert on March 26, at Queen's Hall, were the production of a Scherzo written by Mr. Percy E. Bowie, and the remarkably able and finished clarinet playing of Mr. Herbert Stutely, in an Adagio and Rondo by Mozart. Mr. Bowie's Scherzo is distinguished by spontaneity and melodiousness, qualities somewhat rare in the productions of students of to-day. The scoring is clear and effective, partaking of the nature of Sullivan's methods, and the hearty applause of the audience testified to the young composer's talent and perception of the best means to the required end. Of the soloists, Miss Mary Fielding made a good impression by her rendering of the 'Ave Maria' from Max Bruch's 'Feuerkreuz,' but Miss Gwladys Roberts was overweighted in the hymn to 'Aphrodite,' from Granville Bantock's 'Sappho.' Miss Audrey Whitaker gave a neat rendering of Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei' for violin, and Miss Catherine C. Matthews showed a promising technique in Chopin's Pianoforte concerto in E minor. Mention is also due of the singing by Miss Pitt Soper and Mr. Hubert Baker. The orchestra, in excellent form, played Mr. Bowie's Scherzo and Sullivan's 'Overture di Ballo' with admirable verve, under the direction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, whose funeral march from his 'Coriolanus' music preceded the concert, in memory of the late Sir August Manns.

The following awards have been made: The Charles Mortimer Prize (composition) to Percy Bowie (London) and the Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize (pianists) to Myra Hess (London).

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The usual concert given by the students at the close of the Easter term took place at the City of London School on March 27. The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cummings, opened the proceedings with the overture to Gounod's 'Mirella,' and subsequently gave a good account of Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture. The most notable performance was the crisp and expressive playing by Miss Dadine Sutherland in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in D minor. She is to be encouraged to persevere with her studies. A Pianoforte concertstück written and played by Mr. L. A. Collingwood, who has the distinction of holding the scholarship of the Musicians' Company, showed perception of what is effective on his instrument, and much success was gained by the two vocalists, Miss Elsie J. Houghton and Mr. Robert Carr.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

After two postponements Mr. Percy Pitt's 'Sinfonietta' in G minor was played for the first time in London by the Queen's Hall Orchestra on April 18. It will be remembered that this work was produced at last year's Birmingham Festival, to which reference was made in The Musical Times of November, 1906, p. 758. A second hearing of the work not only deepens esteem for Mr. Pitt's resourcefulness and high aims, but confirms the opinion that the second and third movements of his 'Sinfonietta' are the most spontaneous and attractive. The work was interpreted with remarkable attention to detail under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction, and, considering the complex nature of the instrumentation, this is high praise. Another memorable feature of this concert was the essentially beautiful violin playing by Mr. Fritz Kreisler in Beethoven's Concerto and Bach's Chaconne.

STOCK EXCHANGE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

At the concert given at Queen's Hall on April 15, the selection opened with the revival of Rubinstein's 'Overture Triomphale,' which apparently had not been heard in London since it was played under the direction of the late Sir August Manns at the Crystal Palace in 1874. The overture is essentially of a patriotic character, and its chief thematic material is derived from the English and Russian national anthems. Our 'God save the King' in particular has a hard time of it, but the composer patriotically reserves the full force of his orchestra for the Russian tune at the close, and great is the sound thereof. The programme also included Edward German's inspiriting Welsh Rhapsody and movements from the delightful 'Coppelia' ballet music by Delibes. A notable performance by the male-voice choir was that of Schubert's well-nigh forgotten chorus, 'Night in the forest,' the romantic accompaniment to which for four horns was admirably played. The soloists were the gifted Hungarian boy violinist Joska Szigeti, and Miss Elizabeth Parkina. The duties of conductor were jointly and efficiently discharged by Mr. Arthur W. Payne and Mr. Munro Davison.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Joseph Ivimey, gave its 110th concert on April 18 at Queen's Hall. Commendable performances were secured of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and the overture to Weber's 'Preciosa.' The soloists were Mr. Percy Grainger, Madame Mary Conly, and Mr. W. A. Peterkin.

A new string quartet party, consisting of Messrs. Jan Hambourg (first violin), Maurice Sax (second violin), Siegfried Wertheim (viola) and Boris Hambourg (violoncellist), gave its first public performance on April 16 at Bechstein Hall. The programme included Beethoven's 'Rasoumousky' quartet in F and three of Glazounow's 'Novellettes' (Op. 15) for string quartet. The interpretation of the Beethoven quartet bore testimony to individual ability, painstaking rehearsal, and to intellectual perception of the character of this fine work. So favourable an impression was made that a future may be anticipated for this new quartet party.

Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was admirably performed in Bloomsbury Central Church on April 13, under the direction of Mr. T. J. Carter. The choir, augmented to 120 voices, sang with excellent tone and enthusiasm. The accompaniments were played by Mr. A. Wood (the organist), assisted by a professional string orchestra ably led by Mr. W. Lanbach. The soloists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Mrs. Frank Nicholson, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. Montague Borwell.

RECITALS.

The vocal recitals given by Miss Elena Gerhardt, with Mr. Arthur Nikisch at the pianoforte, at Bechstein Hall on April 11, 18, and 22, were not only most enjoyable, but splendid object-lessons to all who sing, or attempt to sing, German Lieder. Miss Gerhardt's vocal means are not exceptionally great, but the voice is never strained, as is too often the case with German vocalists. Every phase of emotion seems to be at the command of the singer; her versatility is so complete that it would be difficult to decide amongst songs of such entirely different character as Liszt's 'Die drei Zigeuner' and 'Ueber allen Gipfeln,' and Brahms's 'Der Schmied,' all of which were most truthfully and finely interpreted.

Mention is due of the pianoforte recital given by Miss Evelyn Suart, on April 17, at Bechstein Hall, at which this clever young artist showed great advance in her art. The programme, remarkable for its freshness, included Schytt's Sonata (Op. 53) and the first performance in London of the Andantino from Sibelius's Sonata (Op. 12), a melancholy but significant movement.

Mr. Viggo Kihl at his recital at Steinway Hall on April 19, contented himself with a programme consisting of well-known works, but the selection ranged from Bach to Liszt, and included Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 26), and the interpretations, particularly of pieces by Chopin, were distinguished by that artistic perception and fluency of execution that have caused Mr. Kihl's playing to be so pleasantly remembered.

The first Bohemian concert of the Papyrus Gleemen took place in the great hall of the Cannon Street Hotel on April 11, when an interesting programme of glees and part-songs was performed. The Society, which has been founded in connection with the paper trade, has for its musical directors Messrs. Charles and William Corke.

Suburban Concerts.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a commendable performance of Sullivan's 'Kenilworth,' followed by a selection from 'Tannhäuser,' at the Crystal Palace on March 23. The solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Parthenia Bowman, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. C. H. Kempling was at the organ, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted. Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture was played as a tribute of respect to the late Sir August Manns, a vice-president of the Society.

The West Ham Choral Society's concert of sacred music, given in the Town Hall, Stratford, on Good Friday, under the direction of Mr. Harding Bonner, included Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' There was a choir and orchestra of 120 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Marian Perrott, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. George Stubbs. Mr. Henry Riding presided at the organ.

The Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society gave a spirited performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the Town Hall, Ealing, on April 9. The solos were sung by Miss Dorothy Wiley, Miss Maud Wright, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Harry Dearth, and Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester conducted.

The Algernon Road Choral Society, Lewisham, conducted by Mr. H. J. Houlgate, performed Franco Leoni's 'The gate of life' at the Public Baths on April 9. The soloists were Miss Maude Wilby, Mr. J. Frost Lambert and Mr. Bevington Rosse. The choir merit commendation for their excellent singing.

Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society gave its second concert at the Northern Polytechnic on April 11, when Hofmann's cantata 'Melusina,' was performed, together with a miscellaneous selection, which included Pearsall's madrigal 'When last I strayed,' and Stanford's Elizabethan pastoral 'Shall we go dance the hay.' The programme contained an interesting prelude on the 'Legend of Melusina' in the form of a poem written by the conductor, Mr. Munro Davison. Mr. Herbert Hodge accompanied the cantata on the organ, and the solo vocalists were Miss Ada Tunks, Miss Hope Jackson, Mr. Charles Sullivan, and Mr. Charles Bennett. Miss Maude Meldrum was solo violinist.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was impressively rendered by the West Norwood Choral and Orchestral Society on April 11, at the Public Hall, under the direction of Mr. Percy S. Bright. The choral singing was distinctly good, especially in the 'Eia Mater,' 'Virgo Virginum,' and 'Quando Corpus.' The orchestra (leader, Mrs. John Black) also played Schubert's 'Fierrabras' overture. The soloists were Miss Christine Bywater, Miss Constance Baxendale, Mr. Harry Stubbs and Mr. Herbert Tracey. Gounod's 'Gallia' concluded a successful concert.

The East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society gave its ninth concert at East Finchley on April 11 with much success, the works performed being Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Parry's 'Pied Piper,' under Mr. George R. Ceiley's direction. A string orchestra, led by Mr. Frank Greenfield, rendered good service, and Mr. Charles Carter supplied the wind parts on the pianoforte. The soloists were Miss Annie Bartle, Messrs. John Bardsley and Dan Price.

The Lewisham Choral Society's performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' took place at the Borough Hall, Greenwich, on April 18, under the direction of Mr. Frank Idle. The choir sang with full appreciation of the dramatic qualities of the music, assisted by a full professional orchestra led by Mr. George Wilby, whose rendering of the accompaniments was excellent. The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Arthur Rose.

The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave its twenty-first subscription concert on April 18 under the conductorship of Mr. H. A. Donald. The programme included the Symphony to the 'Hymn of Praise,' Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, Elgar's Serenade for strings (Op. 20) and other pieces. Miss Mabel Manson and Mr. St. Clair Collins were the vocalists. Miss Winifred Williams led the orchestra of seventy-five performers.

The Twickenham Choral and Orchestral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' successfully at the Town Hall on April 18, under the conductorship of Mr. C. T. Weigall. The soloists were Madame Anna Shergold and Mr. Frank Webster. At the conclusion of the concert, the Society and congregation of the parish church presented the conductor with a purse containing twenty-five guineas, on the occasion of his leaving Twickenham to take up his new appointment as organist and choirmaster at Christ Church, Luton.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL EVENING SCHOOLS CHORAL UNION CONCERTS.

Battersea, Clapham and Wandsworth.

Battersea Town Hall was packed on March 22, when the Battersea, Clapham and Wandsworth Choral Union gave a performance of the first part of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' followed by a miscellaneous programme. The conductor, Mr. George Lane, secured a most satisfactory rendering of the main work, in which the choir sang with capital attack and expression and with commendable clearness of enunciation. They were accompanied by a small amateur orchestra led by Miss Elsie Harrison, and supported by Mr. F. A. Keene at the organ. The solos were in the capable hands of Miss Rose Dallow, Madame Lina Stammers, Mr. J. Frost Lambert and Mr. Dan Price. In the second part of the concert Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' and Wagner's 'Hail, bright abode' were essayed with great success, while the versatility of the choir was ably displayed in Pinsuti's part-song 'The sea hath its pearls.'

Lambeth.

The selected choir and orchestra of the Lambeth Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Charles Metcalf, drew a large audience to the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on March 23, to their performances of 'The death of Minnehaha' (Coleridge-Taylor) and Cowen's 'St. John's Eve.' Their singing of the sombre music of 'The death of Minnehaha' was praiseworthy, but rather more attention to points of expression and enunciation would have added considerably to the interest of the performance. In 'St. John's Eve' there was a manifest improvement in these respects. The soloists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Wilhelmine Fink, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. John Dunkley. There was an efficient orchestra led by Mr. Frank Nichols, Miss José Jones was at the pianoforte, and Mr. H. R. Havart at the organ. In addition to the two works mentioned the choir sang Sullivan's 'O gladsome light' and 'The soldiers' chorus' from Gounod's 'Faust.'

Hackney and Finsbury.

This, one of the largest of the L.C.C. Evening Schools Choral Unions, consisting of a choir of 1,000 voices, gave Hiller's 'A song of victory' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' at the Alexandra Palace on March 23. Mr. Allen Gill, who conducted, had evidently spared no pains in the training of the choir, with the result that a finished rendering was obtained of both works. The singers were supported by an orchestra of about 150 amateur performers. The main works were given with much attention to the various points of choral excellence and with a depth of tone which was only marred by the imperfect balance of voices. The choir were at their best, however, in some part-songs, one of which, Leslie's 'Lullaby of life,' was sung unaccompanied with much tenderness of expression. The singers, too, evinced great humour in their rendering of Pearsall's 'When Allen-a-Dale went a-hunting.' The soloists were Miss Alice Motterway, Miss Dorothea Crompton, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Herbert Parker. Mr. G. C. Richardson at the organ gave an interesting recital previous to the concerted numbers, and the orchestra contributed selections from Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet.'

West London.

The West London Choral Union selected Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Leoni's 'The gate of life' for their annual concert at the Queen's Hall on April 11. The choir of 650 voices were accompanied by a full band led by Mr. T. J. Milne. In some of the choruses the attack was somewhat ragged, a section of the sopranos anticipating the beat; but, generally speaking, the conductor, Mr. W. T. Oke, had his forces well in hand and secured a notable performance of both works. The soloists in each case were Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Herbert Parker, all of whom were received with much favour by the large audience.

North-West London.

The North-West London Choral Union numbers only about 300, but their singing is quite up to the standard of the larger similar organizations, and in matters of phrasing and attention to expression and light and shade they leave little to be desired. At their performance of 'The May-queen' at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway, on April 13, the result of their sound coaching under their conductor, Mr. H. P. Dakin, was very manifest. The work went merrily, both choir and soloists doing ample justice to Sterndale Bennett's music. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. J. Frost Lambert and Mr. Felix Hotchkiss. Mr. G. T. Pinches and Mr. J. D. Knight at the organ and pianoforte respectively provided excellent accompaniments. Following the principal work the choir contributed some choruses and part-songs, their singing in the unaccompanied pieces being notably true and pure.

LORD OF OUR FATHERS.

Copyright, 1907, by Novello and Company, Limited.

1 Lord of our fathers, Thou didst blend
Of divers strains our stubborn race;
Thou, at the old world's wind-swept end,
Didst plant us in our sea-girt place,
To learn chill rigour from the drift,
Grim patience from the warring wave;
Thou madst us swift, as winds are swift,
And brave, as rocks and seas are brave.

2 Then, as we fared in straitened ways,
Thou didst outpour us, badst us roam,
That we might claim the tropic rays,
And call the icebound ocean home.
Like seed we fell, like seed we sprang,
Till half the world, where'er we rose,
With Britain's joys and sorrows rang,
And freedom's foes were Britain's foes.

3 Lord God, before thy feet we bow;
We cast our pomps, our trophies down;
Uphold us, lest Thy wrathful brow
Upon our faithless purpose frown,
In peace to win our destined path,
Beyond the waste, across the tide;
Grant us the courage, not the wrath,
The calm of strength, and not its pride.

4 This be our prayer,—to guard, to guide
Beneath the shelter of Thy Throne,
Whatever realms Thou dost provide,
Whatever hearts Thou makst our own;
Not for our frequent falls to grieve,
But turn our prayers, our hopes, above,
There, where the great prow passed, to leave
The golden ripple of Thy love.

Musical Competition Festivals.

The majority of the competition festivals now so common in the country are held in the spring season. We have received reports of nearly twenty such gatherings held during the last few weeks. It is very gratifying to the cause of musical progress that the local newspapers all over the kingdom give voluminous reports of the proceedings and thus spread the interest far and wide. We are able to give only a summary of the results of the chief events.

Douglas (March 19, 20, 21).

The sixteenth Manx festival was held under the auspices of the Fine Arts and Industrial Guild. The scheme was divided into thirty-nine classes, and on the whole the entries were satisfactory. Mr. J. D. Looney's choir was successful in the chief choral class. At the concert given by the combined choirs the audience numbered over 3,000 persons. The adjudicators were Dr. Roland Rogers, Mr. John Acton, and Mr. C. H. Fogg. Mrs. Laughton is the honorary secretary of the competitions.

Belfast (March 23).

This festival was organized by the Irish Temperance League and Band of Hope Union. It was held in the commodious and handsome Ulster Hall. In view of the fact that it was the first festival instituted by this League it may be described as having been a great success. The promoters do not desire it to be restricted to their adherents, but hope that the excellent start they have made will lead to the establishment of a more comprehensive scheme. About twenty choirs, mostly junior, competed. Some of the singing was excellent. In the chief adult class Crescent Choir (Mr. J. G. Lauchlan) gained a prize. An evening concert, given by the prize-winners and presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury, who is Lord Mayor this year, was largely attended. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

Paisley (March 25, 26, 27).

The festival here was inaugurated by the Paisley Education Committee. It has so far only partially stirred up interest in the competitive idea. Schools did not enter, and the instrumental candidates were not numerous. There were eighteen entries in the adult choral section. In the two chief sections the choirs had to prepare the whole of the choruses in Part I. of 'Elijah,' besides anthems and part-songs. The singing was of a good average. On the evening of the day after the competition the choirs, numbering 300 singers, gave a performance of the 'Elijah' selection, under the direction of Mr. James Pattison. Dr. McNaught adjudicated in the vocal classes, and gave an address on 'Music in schools' before a large audience of Paisley and Glasgow teachers. Mr. Henri Verbrugghen adjudicated the instrumental sections. In the church choir section Thread Street United Free Church Choir was first, and in the open choir section the Provident Co-operative Choir was successful. This choir also won the male-voice choir prize.

Bristol (March 30 to April 5).

The musical competitions took place at the Victoria Rooms, and commenced on March 30, lasting till April 5, when a concert, in which the successful competitors appeared, was held. The theoretical competitions were adjudged by Mr. Ernest A. Dicks, and they showed an increase in the entries, as last year there were eighteen, and now twenty-five. In the class for male-voice choirs the test-pieces were 'Requiem Æternam' (Cornelius) and 'The phantom host' (F. Hegar). Only one choir had entered for the prize, the 'Lennard' challenge shield, viz., the Bristol Harmonic (conductor, Mr. Joseph Jenkins). The adjudicators, Dr. H. Coward and Mr. T. B. Knott, arrived at the conclusion that the choir, although their performance was not perfect, deserved the award, which, having twice before been awarded them, becomes their property. Pianoforte playing, in which the chief prize consisted of a fifty-guinea pianoforte, was adjudicated by Mr. T. B. Knott, Dr. Orlando A. Mansfield and Mr. Ernest A. Dicks. The test-piece was Paderewski's 'Théme varié' (Op. 16, No. 3). There were thirty-two entries from several towns in the West of England and South Wales, candidates of either sex and any age being allowed to compete. The prize was awarded to Miss Grace Morgan, Newport, Mon. In another class for pianoforte playing, candidates of any age, the test-pieces were Nos. 2 and 3 from 'Miniature Suite' (York Bowen). The principal prize, the Cuthbert Whitemore gold medal, was awarded by Mr. T. B. Knott, the adjudicator, to Miss Gladys Salisbury.

Chester (Easter Monday, April 1).

The chief competition was for male choirs of forty voices, the test-piece being 'Crossing the plain' (Maldwyn Price). The following five choirs appeared: Crewe Apollo (Mr. J. Stubbs), Warrington (Mr. W. Nesbitt), Hoylake and West Kirby (Mr. Charles Hughes), Broughton and District (Mr. Evan Evans), and Warrington Apollo (Mr. H. Berry). The latter choir gained the first place. The competition for juvenile choirs was won by the Talke Choir (Mr. F. J. Bossons). The Warrington Harmonic (Mr. T. Brough) also sang, and there were two other entries.

Darlington (Easter Monday).

In this scheme there were classes for solo singers, quartets, mixed-voice choirs, and male-voice choirs. The Harrogate Vocal Union (Mr. Hiram Ball) gained the mixed-voice choir prize, and the Newcastle Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. J. R. Riddell) the male-voice choir prize. The tests respectively were 'When winds breathe soft' (Webbe) and 'I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre' (Wesley). Mr. H. A. Fricker, the Leeds City organist, adjudicated.

Liverpool (Easter Monday).

A children's festival was organized here, chiefly by the energy of Mr. R. T. Edwards. Some of the best school and junior choirs in the country were attracted, and good talent was exhibited in the instrumental and solo-singing classes. The Revoe (Blackpool) school (Mr. Rigby) gained the chief prize, New Bashford, Nottingham (Mr. W. Turner), and Sutton (Mr. Knapper) coming very close. The event was highly successful. Dr. McNaught and Mr. Harry Evans adjudicated.

Wharfedale, Ilkley (April 4, 5, 6).

This was an inaugural festival, and owing to the remarkable organizing skill of its untiring chief promoter, Mr. A. Aitkin Crawshaw, the event was an almost overwhelming success. Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated, was kept busy for the three days, and the services of Mr. H. Whittaker had to be added in order to cope with the embarrassing number of entries on the third day. In the chief children's choral class Menston village choir and the Ilkley Parish church boys gained equal awards. On the 'Village' day a number of vocal soloists appeared, but there were only five choirs. Four of these gained awards in different classes: Ilkley Parish Choir (Mr. Isaac Hirst), Menston Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Bradley M. Hullah), Bolton Abbey Church Choir (Mrs. Usher), Bramhope Wesleyan (Mr. F. G. Heseldin). The third day was for open competitions. Eight church and chapel choirs, six male-voice choirs, seven mixed-voice choirs, and twelve quartet parties competed. The Nelson Arion Choir (Mr. Lawson Berry) gained the male-voice choir prize, Otley Wesleyan that for the church choirs, and Crosland Moor that for mixed-voice choirs. A portion of the day was occupied by a lecture on choir training by Dr. McNaught. Concerts were given in the evening in two halls simultaneously, the first half of the programme at one hall forming the second half at the other hall and vice versâ. Next year a new and more commodious hall will be ready.

Eskdale Tournament, Whitby (April 9 and 10).

This festival, the fifth of its kind, seems to be firmly established. It owes its existence to the perseverance and faith of the Misses Yeoman, who reside in this beautiful district. The syllabus covers a wide field of musical study. In the choral sections Danby, Aislaby, St. Margaret's and Egton all gained honours in junior classes, and Fylingdales, Brotton Church Choir, Brunswick, Malton Choral Society and the Caedmon Male Choir were successful in adult classes. At the evening concert Gounod's 'Gallia' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were given with full orchestra under the direction of Mr. G. W. S. Watson and Mr. T. Ely. Miss Lenora Sparkes was the very successful soprano soloist. Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated, gave an address on the competition festival movement. There was a crowded audience.

Tonbridge (April 9 and 10).

On this occasion Dr. Henry Coward again filled the post of judge. He expressed himself as highly satisfied, especially with the sight-singing of the juvenile choirs, who showed that the thorough system taught in their schools is a triumphant proof of the usefulness of the examination which takes place in individual schools, and is a great feature of the Festival Association.

The proceedings ended on the second day with a concert in which a new cantata was given, conducted by the composer, Dr. Hathaway. Dr. Coward conducted the combined choirs in Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and Gade's 'Spring's message,' accompanied by the Tonbridge Orchestral Society. The festival generally was highly successful. The quality of the singing of the choirs showed decided improvement.

Wansbeck, Morpeth (April 12 and 13).

This was the second festival held for this district. Nine schools contributed twenty-two entries. On the second day there were seven choirs. Bebside (Mr. Hetherington), Morpeth Y.M.C.A. (Mr. C. Proctor), Netherwitton (Major Orde), and Ashington Co-operative (Mr. Mossman) were prize-winners. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The movement seems to be taking root. The main difficulty in the way of expansion is the limited accommodation.

Mid-Somerset, Midsomer Norton (April 16, 17, 18).

The entries for the sixth festival of the kind in this rural district were numerous, but the competitions were not allowed to interfere with what the promoters, the chief of whom is Mrs. Mansel, regard as an indispensable feature of the festival, namely, the performance of combined music. Ten schools sent in choirs in various sections, making in all thirty-two entries. Amongst the best performances were those of the Central School (boys), Wells, and the Blue School, Wells. The children combined under Mrs. Mansel to sing at a concert, a feature of which was the admirable Morris-dancing of a selected number of children, with Mr. Cecil Sharp at the pianoforte. On the second day after the competitions a chamber music concert was given at which Madame de Bobinsky (violin), Miss M. Wilson-Ewer (violoncello), Mrs. Mansel (pianoforte), Mrs. Aggs (violin), Mr. Roland Jackson (tenor), and Madame Minadieu appeared. Sixteen choirs competed on the third day, and honours fell to the Coleford Choral Society, the Midsomer Norton Society, and Mr. Allen's choir. The final concert was given by the combined choirs under Mrs. Mansel and Mr. Cecil Sharp. Besides many miscellaneous items the works performed were Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm and Stanford's 'Last Post.' Miss Lilian Vernon was the alto soloist, and Mr. Frank Merrick the solo pianist. The adudicators at the competitions were Mr. Cecil Sharp and Dr. W. G. McNaught.

'Madresfield,' Malvern (April 18, 19, 20).

The Association has returned to Malvern for its meeting, after trying not very successfully to interest Worcester in the scheme. The entries were fairly numerous on the present occasion, and the attendance of the general public very satisfactory. In the chief choral class several societies sang, Hartlebury (Mr. Taylor) taking the prize. Nine village choirs competed in the Trio (S.S.A.) class, Leigh (Miss W. Norbury) gaining honours. Dr. Sinclair and Dr. McNaught adjudicated. A concert was given by the combined resources under the direction of Mr. Ivor Atkins. The chief item was the second act of Gluck's 'Orpheus.' The juniors did not compete this year, but, instead, 400 of them combined to give a concert which included the cantata 'Lampblack' (Myles B. Foster). There was also a performance by combined violin classes numbering 100 players. Lady Mary Forbes Trefusis conducted.

London Working Girls' Clubs (April 20).

The twentieth annual competition was held at the City of London Schools. The clubs are divided into two classes. In the upper class there were four clubs, and the first place fell to St. Mary's, Borough (Mr. Harvey Grace), and in the second class there were nine clubs, and Passmore Edwards (Mr. W. Holmes) was successful. The singing was very creditable and some of it reached a high standard. All the choirs had to sing a sight-test. The clubs in the first class united under the baton of the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins to sing 'Be strong' (Edward Hecht), 'In our boat' (F. H. Cowen) and 'The snow' (Elgar). The prizes consist only of pictures, but notwithstanding this rule there is abundant enthusiasm in the work.

Hunstanton (April 8).

The North-west Norfolk Association of Village Choirs held its ninth festival in the above town. Mr. W. H. Leslie is the chief promoter. The movement in this district has produced surprisingly excellent results. It has proved that there are numerous capable choralists and skilful choir trainers. Burnham Choir (Rev. F. G. Moore) gained one madrigal prize and Heacham (Mr. H. Ingleby) gained the highest marks in another section, but owing to a handicap rule had to resign the prize to Hunstanton (Mr. G. Watson). In the female-voice choir section there were five entries, and Dr. Coward, the adjudicator, found that three of the choirs were so absolutely first-rate he was unable to distinguish between them. The audiences were large and the festival generally was a great success.

Reports of the competitions held at Rochester, Brigg, Hexham and other places during April are held over.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, April 15.

The most important musical event at Eastertide was the performance of the whole of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Holy Week. On account of its length excisions are usually made in this extraordinary work, and to render the action coherent the same arias, the same chorales, and the same portions of the recitatives are almost always omitted. On this occasion, however, not a single bar was deleted, and notwithstanding an announcement to this effect, an enormous crowd was attracted to the performance, and also to the final rehearsal. Beginning at five o'clock in the afternoon the performance lasted until ten o'clock, with the interval of a full hour between the two parts. Herr Schalk conducted with absolute mastery. The vocalists were Frau Cahnbley and Frl. Philippi, both of whom sang exceedingly well, while the Christus part and the bass arias were rendered with dignity and expression by Herr Fröhlich. The well-trained choir sang with genuine enthusiasm. The performance was most impressive, and appeared to be both a great musical festival and a sacred service of the most artistic kind.

The series of the Philharmonic concerts under the direction of Felix Mottl has run its course in an inspiring manner. The programme of the last included a small Symphony in B flat by Mozart, Brahms's Variations on a theme of Haydn, and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.

At the Concert Society, Marcella Pregi reappeared after a long absence and enchanted her audience by her admirable rendering of Berlioz's 'La Captive,' and the Lieder from Beethoven's 'Egmont.' The feeling for rhythm is so strong in this gifted artist that, although her voice is not powerful, she carries the orchestra with her. At the same concert Ernst von Dohnányi won favour with his audience by his poetical rendering of Beethoven's G major Pianoforte concerto. The programme ended with an admirable performance of Beethoven's symphony in C minor under Loewe's direction. The same symphony was soon afterwards played by the 'Kaim' Orchestra, which visited Vienna during its tour through Austria. A safe reading of the work was given under the baton of Herr Schneevoigt, but he was far more successful with Berlioz's 'Corsair' overture. As a modern conductor, modern music appeals to him more strongly than classical.

The Italian colony here flocked to a concert given by their fellow countryman, Mascagni, who appeared both as conductor and composer. The most successful piece in his programme was a Hymn from his opera 'Iris.'

On April 3, the day on which ten years ago Brahms died, the members of the Brahms Society and many personal friends and admirers of the master, assembled round his grave in the central cemetery outside the city and held solemn festival. The small Motet (Op. 110, No. 2) was sung, and Richard von Perger, director of the Conservatorium, gave a short and warm-hearted address, in which he spoke of the great spread throughout the world of the works of Brahms since the composer's death, and of the general recognition now accorded to them.

N. Klengel, the eminent violoncellist, gave a concert here with his pupil, Frl. Hahn, a young but already mature artist. The programme included a well-written, effective concerto for two violoncellos, composed by Klengel.

A young talented American lady, Miss Margaret Melville, who has recently come to Vienna, produced at her recital, and with success, two pleasing works of her own, a Violin sonata and a Pianoforte quintet, also some Lieder, which promise well for the future.

Gluck's 'Iphigenie in Aulis,' dormant here for about twenty years, has been revived at the Opera, and the performance was greatly enjoyed by a small but cultured section of opera-goers. The Wagner version of the work was used.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting madrigal concert was given in the Town Hall on March 23 by Mr. Beard's Birmingham Select Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Edwin Stephenson, organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral. The choir, numbering about thirty-seven voices, and formed by Mr. Beard three years ago, is an admirable body of singers, well schooled and splendidly balanced. Much progress in the realization of light and shade and phrasing was shown in most of the examples submitted, and for special mention I have to name the artistic rendering of Elgar's three part-songs, 'As torrents in summer,' 'O happy eyes,' and 'Weary wind of the West.' Much local interest was centred in the first rendering here of Mr. S. Royle Shore's cleverly-written madrigal for six voices, 'Horas non numero nisi serenas.'

The Midland Musical Society's performance on Good Friday of Handel's 'Messiah' attracted an enormous assembly to the Town Hall. Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted, and the solo vocalists included Miss Lilian Adams, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Walter J. Ottey and Mr. George Uttley. Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ.

The Birmingham Temperance Philharmonic Choral Society gave a successful concert in the Town Hall on April 6, under Mr. W. G. Proverbs's able conductorship. Considerable improvement was shown by the choir in phrasing, enunciation of words and gradation of light and shade, notably in the part-songs and choruses, 'Song of the Vikings,' 'Annie Laurie,' 'Revel of leaves,' and in the trio, 'Night sinks on the wave,' for ladies' choir only. Señor José Solér Gomez played several violin solos, and Miss Mildred Jones, a contralto gifted with an exceedingly fine voice, Mr. William Evans, a local baritone, and the Misses Beatrice and Lilian Ellis, pianoforte duettists, contributed to the success of the concert.

The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées in connection with the spring season exhibition of pictures, given under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction, were successfully inaugurated on Saturday, April 6. These enjoyable musical entertainments will be continued weekly until June 6, and a large number of new glee societies, vocalists and instrumentalists will appear during the season.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company held a week's operatic season at the Prince of Wales Theatre from April 15 to April 20 inclusive, the principal feature being a magnificent revival of Verdi's 'Aïda,' which has not been heard here since 1893. The production was principally noteworthy on account of its spectacular aspect, the gorgeous new scenery and costumes being among the finest things this company has ever done in the provinces. Madame De Vere Sapio presented an ideal Aïda, and Mr. Charles Manners's conception of Ramphis has to be classed among his finest achievements on the operatic stage. Mr. Joseph O'Mara as Radames was excellent, and so was Mr. Lewis James as Amonasro.

An enjoyable concert, entirely devoted to music by the Finnish composer Jean Sibelius, was given by the students of the School of Music and the students' orchestra in connection with the Birmingham and Midland Institute, in the large Lecture Theatre on April 13. Mr. Granville Bantock, principal of the School, conducted.

The Birmingham City Choral Society concluded its current series of concerts with a remarkable performance of Sir Edward Elgar's latest oratorio 'The Kingdom,' given in the Town Hall, on April 18, before a large audience. Dr. H. Coward, of Sheffield, conducted, and achieved a perfect triumph. Tone and precision helped to make this performance a memorable one in every way, aided by the excellent singing of the principals—Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Marie Stuart, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Dalton Baker. The programme included Berlioz's overture 'King Lear' and the reverie 'The captive,' sung by Miss Marie Stuart with dramatic fervour. Mr. Rutland Boughton conducted the Berlioz pieces.

The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra gave its last concert of the season in the Town Hall on April 20, under Mr. Arthur W. Payne's conductorship, when he proved himself to be a master of his art. Beethoven's overture 'Leonora No. 3' and Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' march were brilliantly performed. Miss Laura Taylor was the solo vocalist and Mr. Charles Collier the solo harpist.

The Bristol North Choral Society on March 23 gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' at the Victoria Rooms before a large attendance. The choir and band numbered about 300 performers, Mr. F. S. Gardner leading the orchestra, and Mr. C. W. Stear being at the organ. The soloists were Madame Maggie Purvis, Miss Amy Rowlands (a member of the Society), Mr. G. W. Brierley (St. Paul's Cathedral), and Mr. A. Trowbridge (Wells Cathedral). Mr. James Bending was conductor, under whose baton the work was rendered in a highly satisfactory manner.

Clevedon Philharmonic Society gave an 'Elgar' concert at the Public Hall on April 3, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol. The first composition given was 'The banner of St. George,' the soloist being Miss Eveline Gerrish. Selections from 'Caractacus,' the 'Sea pictures,' and some part-songs succeeded, and the band (Mr. F. S. Gardner, leader) played Marche Militaire, 'Salut d'amour' and 'Pomp and circumstance' march.

Bristol Young Men's Christian Association Choral Society on April 13 gave a concert in their hall, and gratified a large audience by the excellent manner in which they presented three works. The most important was 'The Childhood of Christ,' by Berlioz, which previous to this occasion had not been heard in its entirety in Bristol. In 1881 the Festival Society, under Sir Charles Hallé, gave the first two parts of the trilogy. The soloists now were Miss Eveline Gerrish, Mr. R. Burchill, Mr. Arthur Walenn and Mr. H. Lewis Wensley. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and Prout's 'Hundredth Psalm' were also sung. Mr. Harold Bernard led the band, and Mr. Arnold Barter conducted.

The recent Musical Competition Festival is referred to on p. 325.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the second concert of the season on March 25, when the chief feature of the programme was the instrumental portion of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. As the work has not been performed in Dublin for some thirty years it was more or less of a novelty, and received a very satisfactory performance by the band under Dr. Esposito. It is to be hoped that the whole work may some time be given by the Society. Smetana's overture to 'Die verkaufte Braut'; Menuet and Passacaille, Gluck; Vorspiel and Epithalamium from 'Lohengrin'; and Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 2, Liszt, were also played, the last-named for the first time by this Society. On March 26 the Dublin Oratorio and Choral Society gave a performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and a selection from Gounod's 'Redemption.' The solos were sung by Miss Fannie Bauer and Mr. John Harrison (his first appearance in Dublin), Mrs. Annie McBride and several members of the Society.

Miss Annie Lord (pianoforte), Miss Madeleine Moore (violin), Miss Constance Bell (viola), and Miss Kathleen Gibson (violoncello), forming the Irish Quartet, gave a very successful chamber concert in the Gresham Hotel on March 23. The programme included Mozart's in G minor and Schumann's Pianoforte quartets, one of Beethoven's Sonatas for violoncello and pianoforte, and a group of songs sung by Mr. Horatio Connell. The quartets were admirably played and reflected the greatest credit on the members of the combination. Miss Madeleine Moore, in addition to playing the violin in the quartets, accompanied the songs extremely well.

On March 27 the North City Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie,' under the conductorship of Mr. George Harrison, and acquitted themselves well.

The Sunday Orchestral Concerts conducted by Dr. Esposito at the Antient Concert Rooms have continued to attract large audiences to the cheaper parts of the house. At the concert on April 14 the programme included Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony and Mozart's 'Magic flute' overture. Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees played 'Kol Nidrei' and Miss Madeleine Macken was the solo vocalist.

The entries for the Feis Ceoil competitions have just closed, and promise well for the success of this year's festival. Of these there are forty-five choral, besides a large number for concerted (vocal and instrumental) as well as solo competitions. Altogether some 440 separate entries have been received. There is to be a competition for Irish fiddlers and pipers as well as for unpublished Irish airs, for which competitors may enter up to the actual time of competition.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Concerts of conspicuous merit and artistic value have recently been given by local musicians and teachers, and a season which has been notable both for the quantity and the quality of the music produced has terminated with characteristic brilliancy.

As instances of what can be achieved by the earnest and capable teacher, I would signalize the concerts of Mr. Winram's pupils (March 26) and those of Mr. Waddell (March 25). The Music Hall was crowded for the one, and the Queen's Hall for the other. Seldom does one hear string-playing so full of vitality and force, of elegance and daintiness as that exhibited by the pupils of these gentlemen. Mr. Winram's orchestra numbered seventy; his programme was skilfully chosen, and the whole concert reflected credit on his ability and judgment. The solo vocalist was Mr. George Campbell, and the solo violinist Mr. W. Watt Jupp—a clever pupil of the conductor. Mr. Waddell's excellently-selected programme was well calculated to show his pupils at their best, and perhaps the outstanding feature of the concert was the admirable rendering by his young daughter of a movement from Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in D minor.

The second of what we hope may become an annual series of expositions of pianoforte duet music took place on April 4. Messrs. A. W. Dace and Francis Gibson, two of our most prominent pianists and teachers, have long devoted themselves to this somewhat neglected form of art, and anything more cultured, refined and sympathetic than their performance cannot well be imagined. Their programme included compositions by Hummel, Weber, Mendelssohn, Reinecke, Grieg, Godard and P. Scharwenka, and the audience was delighted by the artistic taste and insight which characterized the rendering of every number. Mr. George Campbell was again the vocalist.

At the third and last of the Amateur Orchestral Society's Concerts, on April 8, the overtures were Gluck's 'Iphigenie,' Schubert's 'Rosamunde' and Sullivan's 'Di Ballo,' and the choice of two movements from Schubert's C major Symphony was fully justified by the result. Edinburgh has every reason to be proud of this devoted band of amateurs, and they in turn are singularly happy in their conductor and trainer, Mr. T. H. Collinson. Very successful appearances were made by Miss Jean Hore, the solo violinist, and Miss Grace Roesler, the vocalist.

Concerts have been given by the Orpheus Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Charles Beswick), on March 29, the Morningside Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Robert Cumming), on April 4, and the St. Cecilia Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Gerald Crawford), on April 5. At the last-named concert the most noteworthy features were Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' suite, and Mr. Crawford's own overture to the comic opera 'George and the Dragon.'

To the long list of choral concerts given last month must be added those of Mr. Borthwick's choir in 'Elijah' on March 20; Leith Choral Society (Mr. W. S. Abbott, conductor), the 'Creation,' on April 2; the Western Choral Society (Mr. Gavin Godfrey, conductor), 'St. Paul,' on April 3; and the Portobello Choral Society (Mr. Douglas Archer, conductor), 'Elijah,' on April 10.

Mention must be made of the yearly concert of the advanced class of the Choral Union, which is so ably trained by Mr. James Dowie. This took place on April 6, and presented a choir of 300 promising pupils to a large audience in a selection from the 'Creation,' and a miscellaneous second part. The concert was a great success.

The annual school concert at Fettes College took place on April 2, and reflected the highest credit upon Mr. A. W. Dace, Mr. Colin McKenzie, and the other masters who are responsible for the training of the boys. The orchestral class played the 'Don Giovanni' overture and three excerpts from the G minor Symphony of Mozart in a most creditable manner, and the choral class sang MacCunn's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' capitally. There was also a movement from Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, and some part-songs and smaller orchestral pieces, all excellently rendered.

The Edinburgh String Quartet has done good work this season, and the subscribers, at the closing concert on March 26, were not slow to show their high appreciation of Mr. Colin McKenzie and his colleagues. Their playing has been uniformly sympathetic, well-balanced, warm and tuneful; and their répertoire has ranged from old Dittersdorff to Dvořák and Tchaikovsky. A large audience filled Morningside Church Hall on April 8 to hear a song and vocal duet recital given by Miss Maie Thom and Mr. Alfred C. Young, two local celebrities. The well-selected programme gave great pleasure, and the interest of the occasion was greatly enhanced by the admirable pianoforte playing of Mr. Alfred Hollins and the capital accompaniments of Mr. T. P. Lamb.

An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' with string and organ accompaniment, was given in Broughton Place Church, Edinburgh, on March 28, under the direction of Dr. W. B. Ross, organist of the church.

The name of Miss Marion Richardson was unfortunately printed Richards in last month's issue, p. 258. We regret the error.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's comic opera 'Patience, or Bunthorne's Bride'—originally produced at the Opera Comique Theatre on April 23, 1881—was revived at the Savoy Theatre on April 4, under the direction of Mrs. D'Oyly Carte and Mr. W. S. Gilbert, and with Mr. François Cellier as conductor.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second concert of the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. W. T. Hoeck, conductor) took place on March 26. A very attractive programme was submitted, which included three of Mozart's overtures—'Don Giovanni,' 'Figaro,' and 'The magic flute'—Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Beethoven's third Pianoforte concerto, and a selection from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' music. The playing of the band was on a high level, and Miss Marian Collier gave an intelligent reading of the solo part in the concerto. Mr. Herbert Brown's vocal solos provided agreeable variety. The Cecilian Orchestral Society, a capable band conducted by Mr. E. R. Joachim, made a highly successful appearance on April 11. In a somewhat ambitious programme—which included Beethoven's eighth Symphony, the overture to 'Der Freischütz,' and initial performances of a Serenade in D minor by Goëtz, and an overture from the pen of the conductor—the band played very well indeed, the strings in particular doing capital work. Miss A. Young and Mr. Percy Mitchell contributed vocal solos with acceptance.

A hopeful sign of the times was the crowded audience which assembled in Glasgow Cathedral on April 10 to hear the first performance of the recently-formed Glasgow Bach Choir. The choir consists of fifty voices—the number could be doubled with advantage—and is conducted with zeal and ability by Mr. J. Michael Diack. The works chosen for the opening concert were the Magnificat in D, the cantata 'Jesus sleeps,' and the double chorus 'Now shall the grace.' In the first and last of these works the powers of the choir were severely tested, but it is pleasing to record a performance of great merit. The effect of the closing chorale in 'Jesus sleeps' (sung at the west door of the cathedral) was very impressive. Special care had been exercised in the selection of the soloists—Masters F. C. Hastwell, H. Macdonald, H. Dougall, and Messrs. Walter Jackson, J. W. Sharpe and Leonard Rogers—all of whom acquitted themselves admirably. A special word of praise is due to Mr. Herbert Walton for his judicious accompaniments on the organ.

Among other recent musical events have been Beethoven recitals by Messrs. Philip Halstead (pianoforte) and Henri Verbrugghen (violin); a concert by the Western Amateur Orchestral Society, under Mr. D. Thorpe (Haydn's 'Clock' symphony, &c.); and five performances of Planquette's 'Rip Van Winkle,' by the Glasgow Amateur Operatic Society, conducted by Dr. D. F. Wilson.

An interesting lecture was given to the Archæological Society by the Rev. Dr. George Bell on the subject of 'Compositions associated with George Buchanan's paraphrase of the Psalms and some notes on the music of his time.' The collections of Olthorius and Servinus were dealt with, vocal illustrations being given by the choir of St. Kenneth's Church.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gloucestershire Orchestral Society held its sixth annual concert in the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on April 2, when the band, led by Mr. W. H. Reed and conducted by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, gave a fine rendering of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the dream scene from 'Hansel und Gretel,' Mr. W. H. Reed's 'Scènes de ballet,' and the 'Meistersinger' overture. The soloists were Miss Dilys Jones and Mr. W. H. Reed (violin).

The Stroud Choral Society, which is now in a flourishing condition, gave a performance of 'Elijah' at the Subscription Rooms on April 11. Mr. S. W. Underwood made his first appearance as conductor, and, supported by Mr. W. H. Reed, leader of the orchestra, he was able to present a most efficient rendering. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. Ben Ivor and Mr. Charles Tree.

Handel's 'Samson' was sung by the Cheltenham Musical Festival Society on April 11 at the Bennington Hall. The oratorio was given without orchestral accompaniment, pianoforte (Mr. W. E. Haslam) and organ (Mr. A. G. Bloodworth) only being used. Mr. J. A. Matthews, the Society's conductor, secured a good performance of the work. The principals were Madame Sara Lewis, Miss Kathleen Nigel-Jones, Mr. F. Norcup and Mr. Edgar Dyson.

The third and last of the Gloucester Choral Society's concerts of the season was held in the Shire Hall on April 16, when, as usual, the programme was of a miscellaneous character, the vocal part-music being 'Fire, fire, my heart' (Morley), 'The surrender of the soul' (Peter Cornelius), 'In exitu Israel' (S. Wesley), and 'The miller's wooing' (Eaton Faning). The singing of the choir in the eight-part motets was very fine. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Dalton Baker, Mr. D. Byndon-Ayres and Miss May Mükle (violoncello).

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Santley was a chorister at St. Anne's Church, Edgehill, fifty-eight years ago, and he sang again there on Easter Sunday last. The services at St. Anne's are always on a high plane, and at high Mass in the forenoon the famous baritone sang in his best manner Neukomm's 'Confirma hoc Deus.'

At the reiterated request of subscribers the directors of the Symphony Orchestra gave an extra concert on April 8, when the programme included Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' overture, Sibelius's tone-poem 'Finlandia,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite. Mr. John Dunn was the violin soloist, and Mr. Wilson Shaw the vocalist.

The Fairfield Choral and Orchestral Society most satisfactorily performed Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' given for the first time in Liverpool at the Sun Hall on April 9. The success of the rendering was such as to merit hearty congratulations to Mr. C. W. Black, who thus brought many months of anxiety and rehearsal to ripe fruition. If now and then the volume of tone seemed to be lacking in sonority, the choir gave of their best, singing with rare intelligence and in a manner deserving of warm commendation. Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Charles Bennett were the soloists, each of them singing with notable success.

Professor Prout lectured in the large room of the Exchange Hotel on April 13, in the presence of a goodly audience, his subject being 'Bach's Suites.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

For the extra Hallé Concert given annually in the interests of the Orchestra Pension Fund, the programme (on March 21) was devoted exclusively to Wagner. Dr. Richter conducted. Last season the concert added £125 to the fund which, so far untouched, amounts now to over £4,000.

At the last of the series of Brodsky Quartet concerts, on March 23, the programme contained Volkmann's String quartet in E minor (Op. 35); Schumann's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A minor (Op. 105)—admirably played by Miss Olga Neruda and Dr. Brodsky—and Beethoven's String quintet in C (Op. 29), Mrs. Rawdon Briggs taking the second viola.

The Manchester Orpheus Glee Society, seeking wider fields of conquest, is competing at the Orphéoniste Competition which takes place in Paris during Whit-week. In behalf of the funds for this brave enterprise the Society gave a phenomenally successful concert on April 11, under the direction of Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, in co-operation with another famous Lancashire musical organization, the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (conducted by Mr. Herbert Whittaker), who recently made such a successful appearance in London. The Lord Mayor was present, and the great Free Trade Hall was packed. Amongst the most noticeable renderings by the Manchester singers were those of Schubert's eight-part chorus, 'The song of the spirits over the waters,' Hegar's descriptive ballad, 'The phantom host,' and the difficult part-song by Cornelius, for eight voices, 'O Death! thou art the tranquil night.' The ladies of the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society gave beautiful renderings of Berlioz's 'Ballad of Ophelia' (from Op. 18) for two sopranos, and 'A love song,' one of the four-part choruses from Brahms's Op. 44.

For their annual performance in opera the students of Mr. A. J. Cross's School of Music, with some vocal and instrumental assistance, engaged, on April 19 and 20, in a creditable stage representation of Meyerbeer's 'Star of the North.'

At a meeting of representative Welshmen on April 18, it was decided to establish in Manchester a Welsh Choral Union on similar lines to that existing in Liverpool.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Northumberland Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Cuthbert Horsley, gave an excellent concert on March 21. The most important items were Mendelssohn's seldom-heard 'Reformation' symphony, Rubinstein's ballet music from 'Feramors,' both for the first time in Newcastle, and Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture No. 3. A fine performance of 'Elijah' was given by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union on the following evening. Mention must be made of noteworthy renderings of some of the choruses in the second part of the oratorio. The excellent quartet of soloists was Madame de Vere, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Dalton Baker. The Hallé Orchestra played, and Dr. Coward conducted. On March 24 the Teachers' Musical Society sang Mozart's 'King Thamos' and Parry's 'The glories of our blood and state,' and Miss Wyatt, Mr. T. Howie and Mr. E. J. Potts sang Schubert's and Schumann's settings of Mignon's and the Harper's songs from Goethe's 'Wilhelm Meister.' Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

The Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society presented, on April 10, a miscellaneous programme which included Cowen's 'Ode to the passions,' Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and the two middle numbers from Berlioz's 'Harold in Italy' symphony.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A number of interesting choral concerts given during April by various societies have furnished further evidence of the steady progress which has for some time attended their studies. While adequate revivals of old works—such, for instance, as Handel's 'Joshua,' by the Penistone Choral Society, under Mr. Joseph Cooper—have not been neglected, the majority of these small but enthusiastic organizations have devoted their attention to the moderns. The Heeley Musical Union, which Mr. W. Chapman so competently conducts and inspires, did well to bring forward Stainer's cantata 'St. Mary Magdalene,' a work strangely neglected in this district. An excellent performance was secured. The Norton Lees Choral Society essayed Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' in its English text ('At the foot of the Cross'), and proved how effective is that inspired work when given in the vernacular. Mr. Horace Reynolds conducted. The Heeley Wesley Choral Society's performance of Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampherdown' and Gade's 'Spring's message,' under the direction of Mr. E. G. Laycock, was chorally meritorious. Another gallant little choral society, that at Shiregreen, gave a thoroughly praiseworthy rendering of 'Elijah,' conducted by Mr. J. Gregory, the singing of the chorus being exceptionally good.

The Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave an artistic and enjoyable concert on April 18, singing a number of unaccompanied works by Beale, Hathaway, Koschat, John E. West and Sir G. C. Martin with finish and good tone. Mr. A. S. Burrows conducted. Miss Dorothea Hemmings was the vocalist, and a quartet of brass instruments played arrangements from Weber and Verdi.

The Clarion Vocal Union gave a concert in the Albert Hall on April 20, when a number of competing Yorkshire and Lancashire choirs, totalling 350 voices, decided the final choral contests. The massed choirs were conducted by Mr. M. Blatchford.

During the closing week of April a series of operatic performances in aid of the medical charities was given in the Theatre Royal by the Moody-Manners Opera Company. Especial interest attended the venture by reason of the co-operation in the chorus of some seventy members of the Sheffield Grand Opera Society, rehearsed by Mr. J. Duffell. The chorus on the stage, increased to 166 performers, furnished an imposing musical and spectacular effect. The experiment is being watched with interest by a number of towns where local opera societies have been established.

The organization of the chorus for the Sheffield Festival of 1908 has been taken in hand. A stringent list of tests for voice, sight-reading and rhythm has been issued, which every applicant will be required to pass. The testing committee consists of eight local teachers of singing. The outline programme of the Festival is given on p. 306 of the present issue.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The members of the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society are to be warmly congratulated on the most excellent concert they gave in the Victoria Hall on March 21, when the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, paid its first visit to the Potteries. The programme comprised Sir Hubert Parry's humorous cantata 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin,' Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Tod und Verklarung,' and Sir Edward Elgar's dramatic cantata 'King Olaf,' the last-named composed expressly for the North Staffordshire Musical Festival held at Hanley in 1896.

Mr. John James conducted 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' with conspicuous ability. The orchestral opening was finely rendered, and the choral work speedily demonstrated to what heights of perfection the singers had been brought. Note-perfection, expression and clearness of enunciation have never been excelled in the history of local choral singing. Mr. Wood conducted the remainder of the concert. He not only obtained a realistic interpretation of Strauss's 'Tod und Verklarung,' but secured a rendering of 'King Olaf' that was quite monumental. The choir was inspired with the fine subject, while the band was superb throughout. The solo vocalists, Miss Amy Castles, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Austin, were excellent.

On March 19 the members of the Stafford Choral Union gave a successful concert in the Borough Hall. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from Handel's 'Samson,' which were given in a manner that proved how carefully the choir had been trained by the conductor, Mr. H. Drury. In the second part the band gave a good rendering of Schubert's B minor Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' march.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Music during the past few weeks has been little more than a gathering up of the fragments remaining after the season's feast, and after Easter all we have to look forward to are the al fresco performances of bands in the parks, towards which the Leeds Corporation has just voted £500. Were this to be regarded as any precedent for a similar expenditure on music of a more artistically serious kind in the winter months, it might be viewed with equanimity; but when, instead of selections from comic operas, symphonies and cantatas are in question, the public purse is closed!

At Leeds there were in Holy Week some interesting Passion-music services. At the new church of St. Margaret's the 'St. Luke' Passion, which Spitta with some confidence regards as an early work of Bach's, was given on Sunday, March 24, and on the following day the more familiar 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed, according to custom, at the Leeds Parish Church, Dr. Bairstow, the organist, securing one of the best renderings of the work that I can remember in the Parish Church, the chorus-singing having a precision that would have been quite remarkable even had there been a conductor. On April 28, Graun's Passion music — known as 'Der Tod Jesu'—was sung at St. Chad's Church, under Mr. H. P. Richardson's direction. The music is strangely florid and rococo, at least in the elaborate airs, but there are glimpses of earnestness, and the sound musicianship prevents the work from being at all trivial in effect.

The Rasch Quartet ended its first season of Chamber Concerts at Leeds on March 27, when Beethoven's great String quartet in C sharp minor (known as Op. 131) was very finely played, with freedom, force and colour. It was accompanied by Arensky's String quartet in A minor (Op. 35A), an interesting and very characteristic work, which received a brilliant interpretation. By way of anticipating another season, a society has been formed at Leeds whose object will be the furtherance of opera and drama, not by giving indifferent performances, but by encouraging managers to improve the artistic character of their fare. As regards opera, this method of focussing what is best in public opinion should do nothing but good. If operatic managers repeat the same hackneyed works year after year it is only because they know they will pay, and, as business men, they avoid the risks which launching forth upon the unknown may involve. If such an association as the Leeds Playgoers' Society can afford some guarantee that a little artistic enterprise will have a good chance of general support, managers may be trusted to follow the cue thus given them.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Hull the Harmonic Society on March 22 introduced Elgar's 'The Apostles' for the first time in that town. Mr. Walter Porter directed a performance which, if not perfect, enabled a large audience to form some idea of the character of the work. The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. J. Coates, Mr. F. Harford (St. Peter), Mr. Robert Burnett (Judas), and Mr. Ivor Foster. The choir sang with expression, and evidently had been well trained for their task.

At Huddersfield the subscription concerts ended on March 26 with a visit from the Hallé Orchestra, whose programme included Haydn's 'Clock' symphony, played with delightful sympathy under Dr. Richter, and Beethoven's G major Pianoforte concerto, with Mr. W. Backhaus as an incisive and artistic soloist.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union gave a concert of more than common interest on April 10, when a most sympathetic performance was given of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' which had never before been heard in that town. The principals were Miss Lillie Wormald and Mr. Frederic Austin, both of whom sang very artistically. Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony was another feature of the concert, which was very ably conducted by Mr. Kilburn, who can claim to have anticipated Safonoff in dispensing with a baton, having done so ever since a temporary injury to his hand was the means of disclosing the virtues of this method.

The chromatic harp, invented by M. Gustave Lyon, head of the firm of MM. Pleyel, Wolff, Lyon et Cie. (of Paris and London), has not hitherto been regarded with much favour in England, although it is being taught in the Conservatoires of Paris, Brussels, Leipzig, Milan, &c., and it is used in many of the principal orchestras on the continent. The reason of this insular prejudice against an invention which removes the difficulties attendant upon the ordinary pedal harp is not far to seek, but it is satisfactory to know that the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music has this year admitted the new instrument for the first time into its examination scheme. Two candidates who entered for the Board's recent examination have passed in playing the chromatic harp; they are pupils of Miss Ellen Childs, the first teacher of the new instrument in this country.
